Mr. T. B. Bishop, hon. sec., said he had been reading the reports sent in by the local secretaries, and he felt deeply encouraged. He had never before known how thoroughly the work was being done, and how it was permeating the towns and villages of the land. There are now about 1700 local secretaries, and 180,000 cards have been issued in English for 1884, besides a large number in foreign languages. All over the Continent—as well as in India, China, Japan, Palestine, Africa, America, and the Colonies, there are branches more or less numerous, and regular readers of the Word of God. One point the Committee had been anxious to ascertain was whether or not the children really read the portions day by day. Facts mentioned in a large number of the reports, from all parts of the country, seemed clearly to show that the children do read the portions. Quite a number of instances were given in which children were led to Jesus through the reading of the Word. In preference to any formal report, Mr. Bishop read extracts from many of these local reports, and thus a variety of interesting facts were elucidated with reference to the widespread character of the work.

Mr. S. Martyn Bardsley, of Oxford, spoke briefly on the importance of the Public Schools Scripture Union, after which

Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson (who presided) said he was more and more firmly persuaded that the grandest proof of the Divine origin of the Bible lay in its power to quicken dead souls, and sustain in active operation the life thus given. Neglect of the Word made a nation or a Church poor, and diligence in studying the Word made a nation or a Church rich—rich in good works. He had heard of butterfly readers who skimmed from text to text and gathered no honey, and of bee readers, who dipped deep into the Word, and sipped honey from the most unlikely places; he trusted the readers of the Union would be of the second order of readers, not of the first. The longer he studied the Word of God the more he was amazed at the fulness and freshness of its contents.

Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith earnestly urged the pecuniary needs of the Union, and of the Children's Special Service Mission. In view of the approaching season for seaside services, and in view of the blessing being granted everywhere on the work, he regretted to say that the funds for the general work were exhausted. Surely many would come forward to help liberally such a Mission. The speaker concluded with a few pointed sentences on the Blue Ribbon and Temperance work among the children.

Mr. Ranger spoke briefly on the scope, support, and supervision of the Mission; Mr. E. T. M. Dennes answered a few questions as to the working of branches, and with prayer and praise the proceedings were brought to a close.

The Theatrical Mission.

WE are glad to observe that the work of this Mission continues to make progress, and that the workers are greatly cheered by the results attained. In Marylebone, Islington, and Lambeth special meetings have recently been held, at which large numbers of employés at the various theatres and music-halls of the districts were present, deep impressions being made upon many, and some led to Christ.

An influential assembly was convened at the Mansion House, by the kind invitation of the Lord and Lady Mayoress, on the 4th inst., to hear reports of the work of the society. In the unavoidable absence of his lordship, Sir Wm. Muir, LL.D., presided. Mr. Courthorpe Todd gave an account of the various agencies employed in the Mission, the claims of which were urged by Dr. Norman Kerr, the Venerable Archdeacon Richardson, Dr. Barnardo, the Revs. Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Burman Cassin, and others.

Not a little surprise was occasioned by the speech of Dr. Kerr, who contended that it was just as possible to serve God well and truly on the stage as well as in any other profession—a statement which elicited loud expressions of disapproval from the greater part of the audience. The other speakers also strongly dissented from some of Dr. Kerr's remarks, all, however, agreeing in the urgent necessity for an enlargement of the resources for carrying on this eminently useful and important branch of Christian effort.

REV. S. BORTON BROWN, B.A., having now terminated his temporary special engagement in the East-end, is open to accept preaching engagements in or near London, or an invitation to a pastorate. His address is 52, Grove-road, Bow, E.

The Cross of Christ.

"God forbid that I should glory save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ."—Gal. vi. 14.

WE glory in the things we love the best:
The warrior boasts of laurel-wreaths possest,
The world's renown and honour are his quest.
The Christian sees in Calv'ry's sacred story,
The Star that leads to everlasting glory.

The poet waves aloft Thoughts oriflame,
Strives for a niche in temples reared to Fame,
Seeks on the "sands of time" to trace his name.
The Christian finds in Calv'ry's wondrous story
A theme surpassing all, in light and glory.

The painter lives, Art's reign to magnify;
Beauty is all, in earth and sea and sky;
The beautiful is good, and shall not die.
The charm and beauty of the "old, old story,"
Is the ideal of the Christian's glory.

Music by some; or Wisdom most renowned,
In depths beyond the reach of man to sound;
Hath life's Elixir yet by them been found?
But at the Cross of Calv'ry's wondrous story,
The Christian finds eternal life and glory.

Christian, let all thine aspirations rise
From fading wreaths to crowns beyond the skies;
Christ be thy life, thy hope, thy joy, thy prize.
Oh, while on earth may Love's divinest story,
The Cross of Christ, be our delight and glory.

Gospel Temperance in the North.

FOR ten days Major and Mrs. Evered Poole held drawing-room, temperance, and Gospel meetings in Doncaster, with much encouragement upon their labours. They went from Doncaster to Grimsby, where they had been eagerly expected for many months. Both at Doncaster and Grimsby the mayors have lent the Mansion House for drawing-room meetings on behalf of the Army Scripture Readers' Society, and much interest in the spiritual welfare of the soldier has been aroused.

Mrs. Poole is an earnest worker amongst the soldiers, and by means of her Association for the young pays the salary of three Scripture-readers who devote themselves to evangelistic work in camp and hospital. By her "Sunday Reading Association" she supplies many a barrack-room with pure and good literature, which the soldiers value inexpressibly.

The friends at Grimsby gave a warm welcome to the evangelists, and the usual crowded attendances at every meeting showed that God was moving the hearts of the people. The deep, spiritual tone of the Missions conducted by Major and Mrs. Poole is a matter of universal remark and of thankfulness. Their aim is ever to win the souls of their hearers for Christ, and never has been truer Gospel Temperance preached, the temperance following in the train of the Gospel as a veritable handmaid. Major Poole held a special meeting for men, presided over by the vicar (Rev. J. P. Young), enlisting a large number as pledged members of the "Purity Crusade."

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—April 13, John xx. 1—18; April 14, John xx. 19—31; April 15, John xxi. 1—14; April 16, John xxi. 15—25; April 17, Ezekiel i. 1—16; April 18, Ezekiel ii. 1—10; April 19, Ezekiel iii. 1—9.

HERRING-SMOKERS IN STORNOWAY.—Last year we gave a short notice of work among the women employed here in connection with the herring-smoking trade. There were about three hundred strangers engaged in it. There is to be a great increase this year, several new smoking-houses being in course of erection; owing to the demolition, by a gale, of a large coffee-house, it is proposed to erect a larger one, with a meeting-house and reading-room attached. Only those on this spot can realise the necessity for such combined Gospel and Temperance work among these poor hard-working women. Being all far from their homes, they have a special claim upon the help and sympathy of our English readers, many being natives of Newcastle, Lowestoft, and Yarmouth. Contributions of money, tracts, or books may be sent to Rev. Donald J. Martin, Free English Manse, Stornoway, N.B.

HOMES FOR WORKING GIRLS IN LONDON.

THE modest institution which under the kindly title of "Homes for Working Girls in London" has done such a good work for our metropolis, is continually carried on on the Christian principle of prayer. It lives largely, as Mr. John Shrimpton has with cheerful faith often told the public, on what the daily gifts of Providence supply. Its faith faculty therefore quickened, and, as a necessary consequence, its sense of gratitude is well developed. When a fat banker's book stands between a Society and starvation, there is a temptation if not a tendency towards the spirit of Jeshurun; but when daily bread has to be looked for each morning, dependence upon God is fostered and the humble trust of the Christian life becomes the ruling principle of all the doings of the Society.

It was therefore a fitting thing, symbolic of the habitual life of the Homes, that Mr. Shrimpton should convene a prayer and praise meeting on Tuesday week, to thank God for fresh blessings, and supplicate a continuance of them in the future. Gordon House—one of the neatest and prettiest of the Homes—was the rendezvous for the friends invited, and as usual those interested in the welfare of the girls of London mustered in large numbers in the pleasant sitting-room, which soon became "too strait." Tea had been discussed, and the cheerful arrangements of the House inspected by the lady visitors before Canon Boyd Carpenter put in an appearance to deliver his address on the occasion. He found awaiting him an audience the majority of which, as ought to be, were ladies, and in which enthusiasm for the Homes was in no sense lacking.

Prayer and singing opened the meeting, and then Mr. Shrimpton, greeted with a pleasant cheer as an old friend, treated the audience to an informal sketch of the past year's proceedings. They had had their trials, he said, but their joys likewise had been not a few. The Homes had progressed and they had been thoroughly appreciated by the residents; best of all, not a few of the girls in them had been brought to Christ. A most encouraging fact had just been related to him. A lady who was working in connection with Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings had received a letter requesting her to call at a certain house, and to her intense joy she found it was one of the Working Girls' Homes. No fewer than six young women were seeking Christ, who had all received their first serious religious impressions at one of Mr. Moody's meetings. Yes; in their homes they strove to make the girls as happy as possible, but lodgings without Christ would be a very poor look-out indeed. They tried their best to make lovable homes, but they did their utmost, too, to lead the girls to the Saviour. Mr. Shrimpton proceeded to touch lightly on the statistics of the movement, which he did with a deft hand. Gordon House had sheltered (in less than three years) up to last Christmas 950 young women, who had stayed within its walls for longer or shorter periods. The gentle influences of the religious atmosphere that surrounded them, the opportunities of meeting in the Bible-classes and prayer-meetings, the books to which they had access, and, above all, the constant lesson of the life of the superintendents, were all powerful towards moulding the lives and characters of the young women who came within their influence. Gordon House never had a vacant bed. Morley House, their largest establishment, was increasing its accommodation, and they had now 68 beds there. Their latest addition, Hyde House, with 57 beds, had already 30 inmates, though it had but been open about ten days. Woodford House, one of the prettiest of their homes, was always full, and hardly any of the others ever had many vacancies.

At the same time, they had had some trial. They had, as most of those present would know, obtained a very suitable house in the Paragon, New Kent-road, last autumn, and were within a fortnight of opening it for the reception of its residents, when the five Trustees were served with a notice to restrain them from opening it, on the ground that a clause in the lease prohibited any business from being carried on in it. They did not see how the Homes could come under that prohibition, but anyhow they had been forced into court, and compelled to desist from the idea of opening their Home there at the usual terms. They tried to open it and supply gratis accommodation, and their appeal on that aspect of the matter was still pending. He would ask Canon Boyd Carpenter to lead the prayers of all present, that God in his goodness would control the issue to his glory. There was a far greater difficulty than most of them would think in obtaining suitable premises for their work, and it was a very serious matter to be deprived, in the fashion that they had been, at Kennett House, of an eligible position.

Mr. Shrimpton, in concluding his little talk, recurred to the advantages which they had seen arise out of their Thursday evening Bible Talks. He rejoiced to find that without any pressure, beyond the religious tone of the house, these meetings were filled to overflowing each week by the girls, and that many cases had come under their notice in which definite good had by God's grace resulted.

Canon Boyd Carpenter followed in a cheering and stimulative address on "Praise and Prayer," which well harmonised with the plainly expressed satisfaction of the audience at the hopeful statement which had been presented. The Canon's address took the form of an appeal to the spiritual source from which all genuine religious work must draw its motive power. "Come ye apart and rest awhile" might have been chosen as its motto, and its calm, restful sentences, its quiet withdrawal of the spirit from the fussiness of mechanical appliances to the deep and secret well-springs of God-given strength, passed like a charm over his attentive audience. The self-poised life of a spiritually-minded Christian ought to bear itself unruffled amid the jar and friction of earthly machinery. Did they consider at all that thankfulness and praise was as much an enjoined duty as a reliance on prayer? Life was too much a thing of bustle in this nineteenth century. Let them throw themselves open to the influences of God, and their hearts would fill and overflow with a joy which lay beyond the reach of earthly disturbance, and which would fill the face with gladness and the voice with praise. The Church had too much neglected the great and solemn duty of Christian joy. But, of course, it must come from the depths of the spirit; it could not be evoked by harping on its necessity. Such institutions as these were the brightest outflow that he knew, in embodied fact, of the joy of God's chosen. They represented the higher spiritual life of communion and fellowship with the Divine, catching a glimpse of the radiance of heaven and reflecting it in sunshine on the sorrows and trials of earth.

A HOUSE OF REST IN SWITZERLAND.—The well-known home and house of rest for lady workers, La Retraite, Weissenstein, Berne, is again ready, and will be open till the end of October, when it will be closed, after more than seven years' activity under the blessing of the Lord. La Retraite is pleasantly situated on a hill, surrounded by park and woods, twenty-five minutes' walk from Berne. Communications should be addressed to the Directress, Mdlle. de Gregory, La Retraite, Weissenstein, Berne.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN SAILORS' SOCIETY.—In aid of this society, established over sixty years ago for the temporal and spiritual welfare of seamen, a bazaar was held last week at Kensington Town Hall. The headquarters of the society are at the Sailors' Institute, Shadwell. Consequent upon the death of the Duke of Albany, Mrs. Gladstone wrote to say she could not open the bazaar as promised. The Earl of Aberdeen, in doing so, expressed the Society's sorrow at their inability to postpone it, and respectfully requested Mrs. Gladstone to tender to the Queen and Duchess of Albany their profound sympathy. Among those who wrote expressing approval of the work were the Princess of Wales, Lords Granville and Derby, and the Poet Laureate. It was hoped that £3000 would be realised as an addition to the Society's too limited resources.

EGYPT AND ITS PRISONS.

By Charles Cook.

WE expected to find the prisons in a very bad condition in this poor mismanaged country, nor were we mistaken; but yet it is hardly possible to believe that any government would, in this age, allow hundreds of poor wretches to remain so long in gaol untried. There are over 1300 untried prisoners in Egypt, many of them having been incarcerated for eighteen months and two years; and still no one can tell them when they will be tried, although we have been officially told that "many of them are falsely accused." We have gone through the whole land of Egypt, visiting the prisons on both sides of the Nile; but though we have seen prisons in many countries, we have never seen such unhealthy places as these, nor found so abominable a system. Men are thrown into prison here simply because they are witnesses, and may be required; and until lately the bastinado was freely used in all the gaols.

Dr. Cruickshank has been Director-General since the beginning of this year, and he is doing all he possibly can to effect reform, both in the management and cleansing of the prisons. It is quite a common thing to find the water which the prisoners drink kept in a vile condition, and a cesspool under the ground where the men live and sleep. No work is given them to do, and they have nothing to sit or sleep upon but the dusty ground. There are scores of these men who have been imprisoned for years, and who have had nothing to do all that time. In the cities this is being altered. Too much praise cannot be given to the Director for the good already accomplished. Several of the prisons have been thoroughly cleansed, and the men are being taught to make rush mats, while raised boards and blankets are supplied for them to sleep upon.

In Upper Egypt some of the prisons are dreadfully overcrowded and unhealthy. More than one Governor has asked us to bring the state of the prisons before the authorities in Cairo, and in one particular case at Esneh, where they were unable to get sufficient water, the Governor met the steamer as we came down the Nile, and implored us to send another water-carrier. At Soag there were 255 men in one room, thirty-one yards by eight. At Assiout, two men came with petitions in their hands, the first being condemned to death. The Governor said he had killed a man in a passion, for having murdered his sister. The second case was that of a man against whom no witnesses could be produced, and yet he was kept imprisoned.

We have distributed Arabic portions of the Word all through the land, only, however, to persons who could read; but we found many who could, both on board the steamers and at the railway stations. The prison officials who could read were apparently only too glad to have them, though they knew what the books were.

I cannot close without adding my testimony to the importance of the good and great work accomplished in Egypt by the American Mission. It has seventeen churches and fifty-five stations on the Nile, and its work in educating the young, and in winning souls to Christ, cannot be over-estimated. We have met many young men who date their conversion to this work, besides having been taught to speak English, and thus enabled to take a good government situation.

POVERTY AND ITS CAUSE.—Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P. for Liverpool, the well-known social reformer, says:—"I have inquired into the cause of the poverty of great numbers of distressed people, and my experience is that the greater part of all the misery in this country is the result of intemperance and vice. . . . I have known skilled artisans, able to earn 6s. or 7s. a day, who through drunkenness chose to live with their families in single rooms, for which they paid 2s. a week, while spending 15s. or 20s. weekly in drink. The expenditure upon intoxicating drink in Liverpool is equal to two and a-half millions sterling annually, or to the entire earnings of 50,000 families of the class of common labourers."

A DIALOGUE IN BERMONDSEY

BETWEEN

Major Whittle and Rev. M. Rainsford.

ON Wednesday evening last week the spacious Bermondsey Town Hall in Spa-road was crowded with men, women, and children. Major Whittle and his helpers have adopted the plan in vogue at Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings, of reserving a square block of seats in front of the platform for the sons of toil who cannot be in attendance an hour before the time to begin the meeting. On the evening to which we refer, this space was filled up with men and youths, who must have fairly represented the manual industries of busy Bermondsey. With much tender pathos, Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan sang from The Cristian Choir of "The Two Lives"—of the one who was born and reared, and loved and wedded, and who died "in the terraced house;" and of the other, who passed a lonely, sad, and sorrowing life "in the street below;" and of how, when Jesus took them both to heaven, none could tell > "Which of them lived in the terraced house,

> And which in the street below."

At the close of the Major's earnest and convincing Gospel address, he said that questions were often asked by inquirers on points relating to difficulties, or supposed difficulties, in their minds. In order that some of these hindrances might be removed, he had asked his friend, Rev. Marcus Rainsford, to come and answer certain questions which he would put to him. A man said the other night that he had been reading infidel works, and there was a difficulty in his mind as to whether there was a living God. "Prove to me," said he, "that there is a God; make it as plain as that two and two make four." Mr. Rainsford, what would you say to such a man?

Mr. Rainsford.—I must say a word or two before I answer the question. No fallen sinner can know God, or understand his mind and will, unless he receive the Spirit of God (see 1 Cor. ii. 9—13). You might as well talk of colours to a blind man and expect him to understand you, as of spiritual things to a man whose soul is dead in trespasses and sins. "Ye must be born again." God has said: "Except ye receive the kingdom of God as a little child, ye cannot enter therein." But if we ask the Holy Spirit to take of the things of Christ and show them to us, He will do so; and then the answers I give will be profitable to us. I do not come to answer curious questions. The Lord Jesus never answered such questions; but when any poor inquiring one sought Him for information he got it.

I am asked to prove that there is a God. Do you know the Bible does not attempt to prove it? The Bible says the man is a fool who does not believe in God. Look at the things that God has made; they bear witness to their Maker (Rom. i. 20). If I pointed you to these lamps that are now hanging from the roof of this hall, and tried to persuade you they came into their places in some mysterious way hundreds of years ago, and that nobody had any hand in putting them there and supplying them with light, you would think me fit for a lunatic asylum. Well then, when I look around me in the world, and see the sun, the moon, and the stars, the trees and the flowers, the sea in its might, and the glory of the seasons; when I see the trees budding, blossoming, and bringing forth fruit, can anyone persuade me that they all exist of themselves? No, no! If you will read the 19th Psalm you will find there are three books where we all may discover that there is a God. "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork;" that is, created nature is one book. "The law of the Lord converting the soul;" that is another; and the conscience of every man is the third. People may live and close their eyes, and say there is no God, but I have often seen the hand of death opening men's eyes. It is the enmity of the heart to God that leads men to wish there were no God, and the wish is father to the creed.

Major Whittle.—A man said to me, "How am I to know that the Bible is the Word of God?" What answer would you give?

Mr. R.—Well, the Bible is the oldest book in the world; its existence is a fact, and, all things considered, a very wonderful fact. Somebody wrote it. The authors were either good men or bad men. I ask anyone of common sense whether it be not a truth that if all the people in this world were guided by this Book, if they did but obey its two great commandments: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and thy neighbour as thyself," would not earth be a little heaven? Would we need policemen? Would we require jails? This Book teaches men how to live so as to be happy, and how to die so as to be saved. Will you tell me that bad men composed such a book? And if, as all men must admit, it was written by good men, why not believe them? They tell us it was God who spake by them; and any man who sincerely studies their writings cannot doubt the truth they assert. But we have the personal testimony of Christ living to the inspiration of the Old Testament Scriptures. When, after having appeared amongst us according to the prophets that went before concerning Him, and before He went back to heaven, He said to his apostles: "These are the words which I spake unto you while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning Me" (Luke xxiv. 44). "And He opened their understandings, that they might understand the Scriptures." May He do so for us, for his name and mercy's sake! The Bible tells me what no other book tells me. It tells me what I am, whence I came, and whither I am going. Other books deal with the things of this life. This alone tells me of my immortality, of my crown and my kingdom, and of the blood of Christ, by which I am redeemed; of a living Saviour, who lives in heaven to make intercession for me, and who has promised to come again and take me to Him, that where He is I may be also. I would not give it up for all the world, whatever other people may do.

Major W.—A young man said the other night—I think he was under conviction of sin, but was not willing to give it up—"Did not God make me with all these appetites and passions? Why should it be sinful to gratify them?"

Mr. R.—God does not condemn me for the lawful use of my natural appetites and passions; it is the abuse and the unlawful use of them that He condemns. God gave me my appetites and passions, which were intended to be channels of enjoyment to me, not occasions of sin. "God made man upright, but they have sought out many inventions" (Eccl. vii. 29).

Major W.—"If I have tried to do right, and have kept most of God's commandments, will God, who is good and kind, condemn me for the little things in which I have come short?"

Mr. R.—God's Word says: "He that offendeth in one point is guilty in all." This is God's law, and He is the best judge of who breaks it. Suppose I am hanging over destruction by a long chain of a hundred links. I do not need to break all the links in order to drop down; if one link fails, that will do the business. So I do not need to disobey all God's commandments in order to break God's law. "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things that are written in the Book of the Law to do them" (Galatians iii. 10). Blessed be God, "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth" (Rom. x. 4). Why not take hold of Him and go right into heaven, "And be found of Him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith"? (Phil. iii. 9).

Major W.—One says: "I have been baptized and confirmed and am a member of the Church. I am religious and go to prayer-meetings; won't that save me?"

Mr. R.—These things are not Jesus Christ, and may not be substituted for Him. Paul was a very religious man in his day. He tells us that as touching the righteousness in the law he was blameless. But when he got a view of Jesus Christ and Him crucified, he said, "What things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ" (Phil. iii. 7, 8). "A corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit." We must be grafted by faith into Christ and be accepted ourselves, before our services can be acceptable to God, otherwise our best is not worth God's acceptance. When we believe in Christ, God gives us his own righteousness, then we can bring forth good fruit. But we cannot satisfy God with the dust and corruption of our own performances.

Major W.—"I cannot just understand how it was right for God to punish another for my sins," says another inquirer.

Mr. R.—What a dreadful mistake that is. It is not true that God punished another for my sins. Jesus Christ is "God over all, blessed for ever." "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree" (1 Peter iii. 24). People who talk like that do not believe that Jesus Christ was God. Compare the Apostle's argument (Rom. v. 6—8). A greater love than in one man dying for another has been commended to us by God, in that Christ died for us. The man who believes God's Word will have no difficulty about such a question.

Major W.—"How can the death of one be equivalent in law to the death that is due to so many?"

Mr. R.—The One was worth them all, a thousand times told. One drop of Christ's blood is worth the whole universe, but He shed every drop of it that He might open a fountain for sin and uncleanness.

Major W.—"You keep telling me to believe. What is it to believe?"

Mr. R.—The man who asked that was not in earnest. There is no difficulty in understanding what it is to believe. If I promised some one here my watch, and if he knew me to be a man of truth, I would not have my watch long. It is the thing we believe that makes all the difference. There is only one kind of belief. The devils believe and they tremble. They have good reason to tremble. The Bible tells us that the Son of God was manifested to destroy the works of the devil, and they believe it, and tremble accordingly. When Christ came they said to Him: "Art Thou come to destroy us before the time?" The Gospel we are commanded to believe is not preached to devils. The Son of Man came to seek and to save lost sinners. When I believe that, I, as a sinner, come to Him and trust Him, and cast my soul upon Him, and whosoever believeth shall never be confounded. I have his promise and his oath for it (Heb. vi. 17, 18). If you believe man, much more you ought to believe God. Man may deceive you, but God will not.

Major W.—Another objection was—"You show me a text! Do you mean that if I believe this text I am saved?"

Mr. R.—That depends upon what is in the text. A text is like a bank-note; it is worth what it represents. It has God's name to it. If I give a man a ten-pound note I do not ask him to eat it and get nourishment and clothing and comfort from doing so. If he believes in it, he takes the note to the bank, and if it is genuine he will there obtain what it represents. It is not the text that saves, but what it promises you. "The blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, cleanseth you from all sin," and "Whosoever cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out." Take that to God as the man takes the note to the bank, and you will get your full change.

Major W.—"A worker told me: 'Just believe that you are saved, and you are saved.' Is that true?"

Mr. R.—I am sorry to say I once heard a worker myself teach that. I wished I could just take hold of him, and send him about his business. Where do you find that in God's Word? If any man teaches or believes that a sinner can be saved without confessing his sin and coming to the Lord Jesus Christ for pardon, to be cleansed in his blood and clothed in his righteousness, he is under a sad delusion. In the seventh chapter of Matthew, Christ tells us of such delusion. "Many shall say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name done many wonderful works?" and "Then shall I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me ye that work iniquity" (v. 22, 23). They seemed to have believed in and to have expected their own salvation but they had not come to Christ for salvation. There is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved but only the name of Jesus Christ. It is not believing that you are saved that saves you; it is believing in, trusting in, and receiving the Saviour.

(To be concluded.)

CHURCH MISSION IN DUBLIN.

THE first general Mission that has ever been held in this city in connection with the Church of Ireland is now going forward with every sign of blessing from above accompanying it. Occasional Missions have been previously held in single churches by some well-known evangelists, such as Mr. Aitken (in 1878), and Mr. Dening, Mr. Wrenford, and Mr. Spencer Walton, but this is the first general movement of the kind. Men of almost all shades of opinion are joining in it.

Mr. Aitken held a series of introductory services at St. Ann's Church, of which Dean Dickinson, of the Chapel Royal, is vicar. The congregations, large from the first, went on increasing, until by Friday the church was crowded in every part, both at the afternoon and at the evening services. The afternoon services were a special feature of the Mission, the attendance being so very large.

Mr. Aitken delivered a series of addresses on the spiritual life, which were listened to with the most profound attention and apparent interest. His subjects were consecutive, and may thus be stated: (1) The necessity of spiritual life; (2) The essence of the Christian life ("To me to live is Christ"); (3) The outcome of the spiritual life in work ("Work of faith"); (4) The outcome of the spiritual life in character and conduct ("imitators of God, as dear children"); (5) The law of spiritual experience ("led of the Spirit"). The evening meetings were followed by after-meetings, in which many anxious souls received comfort and help.

During the same week Rev. H. Berguer was holding a very successful Mission at a church in the West Strand.

On Saturday week the general Mission commenced with an address at Christ Church, to the missioners and parochial clergy, by Canon Bullock. The startling and sorrowful intelligence of Prince Leopold's death cast an additional air of solemnity over the opening services on Sunday, and formed the real text of many of the Mission services. It was indeed God's voice uttering in men's ears the warning, "Be ye also ready."

Mr. Aitken opened his work on Sunday in St. Patrick's Cathedral. This grand old pile, built in the palmy days of early English architecture, and recently restored in the most perfect taste, will compare favourably with some of the most beautiful of our English cathedrals. Surely it is something to rejoice over that these grand old edifices are being turned to such very practical uses. A work of spiritual revival in a cathedral may be expected to benefit, not only a congregation, but a whole diocese.

In the morning sermon Mr. Aitken, speaking from well-known words in Rev. iii., referred to the solemn knocks which were sounding there in the commencement of such a Mission, and in the death of a loved and respected Prince. In the afternoon there was an enormous concourse, and a very solemn feeling seemed to pervade the congregation as the preacher applied with great plainness of speech the question of St. James, "What is your life?" There was also a largely attended evening service, and at the after-meeting of this the proper work of the Mission may be said to have begun, in a manner that seemed to all most helpful and encouraging. Last week the congregation steadily increased, until on Wednesday night there was a magnificent gathering, and the impression made was so manifest that Mr. Aitken asked those who were anxious to come forward at once and join him in the lady-chapel (a beautiful structure at the extreme east of the church, behind the Communion Table). It did one's heart good to see numbers flocking up thither in response to his invitation, and it was indeed, we believe, a night long to be remembered by many. The work in the Cathedral continued to be most satisfactory to the close of the week; there were great numbers of anxious ones.

Mr. Aitken is also holding two services each day at St. Ann's, one for business men, at 11.30, and one in the afternoon, as heretofore, which is as well attended as ever, although now the other churches are all open.

With respect to these, so far as we have heard, there seems no less cause for thanksgiving and praise. Mr. Morgan, of Swansea, is addressing large and influential congregations at St. Matthias, while Dr. Pigou, of Halifax, is doing a very good work at Christ Church, Gresonpark. He seems particularly the right man for the place. Mr. Berguer is at St. Andrew's, where things are progressing hopefully; and the same may be said of Mr. Andrew's work at St. Thomas's.

Rev. T. E. Cleworth has been labouring with marked success at Baggobrath Church, assisted by Rev. Henry Dening, vicar of the parish. The after-meetings have been times of much blessing, many have decided to come out for Christ. The mid-day Bible-readings on "Abiding in Christ" have been most striking and helpful.

Mr. Stephens has for this once parted company with his fellow-labourer, Mr. Aitken, and is conducting a separate Mission at Harold's-cross, where he is reaping an abundant harvest, while Mr. Simpson takes his place as Mr. Aitken's helper. We can already raise our Ebenezer with much gratitude to God for showers of blessing. "Hitherto has the Lord helped us."

The Gospel in France.

AT the Conference Hall on Tuesday evening last a meeting was held, at which some most interesting information was given by Rev. R. W. McAll concerning the progress of the Gospel in France. Mr. Moir Crane, of Manchester, occupied the chair.

Mr. McAll said he was thankful to be again at Mildmay, where there were so many who sustained their work, and whence he had received but recently so able a helper in Mr. William Soltau. The past twelve months had been marked by many tokens of God's goodness, and the work was continually extending. They had now ninety-one Mission stations in different parts of France, about ten of these having been opened in the past year. One station had also been opened in Corsica, and two in Algiers. With regard to many of these stations, especially in Paris, whatever novelty there was had long since passed away, and yet, instead of losing ground, they were continually gaining; there had been an increase in attendance from 500,000 in 1882 to 554,000 in 1883, and the total attendances throughout France had been nearly 1,000,000. Between 14,000 and 15,000 visits had also been made to the homes of the people, and there had been a large circulation of Testaments and religious tracts. Acknowledging the work also done by Miss de Broen in Belleville, by Mr. Gibson, and Pastor Armand de Lille, he went on to say that the work amongst the children had been especially blessed; many scholars had become teachers, and devoted themselves to the furtherance of the work of the Gospel.

Further details of the work were given by Mons. Saillens, and Colonel Brice also spoke in its support.

AN EAST-END ANSWER TO THE "BITTER CRY."

SIR,—Some East-end working men and women who have been earnestly seeking a practical scheme to improve the condition of needlewomen, have asked me to be their spokeswoman, as I have been their companion in counsel.

The present system reduces these women to almost abject poverty, whilst high prices are being paid by the purchasers. A woman, for instance, receives one shilling for making an ulster that costs a guinea, and toils sometimes more than sixteen hours out of the twenty-four, at a wage of three farthings an hour; out of the sum received she has to pay for needles and thread.

Labour co-operation, and a direct communication between the workers and wearers is our cure, whereby women may earn from 15s. to 25s. a week, working eight hours a day, and may look forward to earning more. The benefit that would be felt in the homes of these women, by their wages being increased, whilst a reasonable amount of time could be devoted by them to making the home comfortable, is almost incalculable.

The sum of £500 is required to make a fair beginning (to take and fit proper premises, buy machines, material, &c., pay the first few months' wages, and advertise); and I now appeal to a beneficent as well as benevolent public, for this amount, either as a gift or loan at five per cent. interest.

I shall be happy to give particulars of the scheme, either personally or by letter, to any one interested or disposed to help. The chief feature in it is that, after all expenses for management and development are paid, the profits shall be divided amongst those who toil.

It may seem to some, at first sight, that to ask for £500 in order to help only a few women is too much, but it must be remembered that if this scheme works, as I am confident it will, it will inaugurate a new system for which the time, I believe, is ripe. The conscience of the nation is awakening, and there are numbers of ladies and gentlemen who, if they saw their way to begin similar concerns in other parts of London, would do so, and who would show a spirit not only of fairness but of generosity to their workpeople. Their example and influence would encourage habits of conscientious thought and action, as well as of the thrift which is not selfish, and before long a widespread moral as well as material good would be done.

In the name of these poor people who are conscientiously striving to solve the great problem of poverty and its remedy, I appeal for a hearing as well as for help. Many of them have worked their tears of sorrow into garments worn by their richer neighbours; may they now be enabled to shed tears of happiness by the money help and purchasing help provided by those neighbours.

I will thank all friends to send their contributions either direct to me or to pay them to the City Bank, Aldgate, to the credit of the "Working Women's Co-operative Association." I have worked many years in the East-end, having begun with the nursing of cholera patients in the year 1866 and having during my husband's lifetime, and in conjunction with him, and for some time managed, the East London Hospital for Children and Dispensary for Women, which we begun in an old warehouse we purchased at Ratcliff-cross, and which, after being handed over to a committee, is now doing an East-end service of great value, in a large and commodious building, a monument alike to public beneficence and to little beginnings.

In a very few years I hope to see my present scheme so prosperous that similar efforts may be made in other parts of London, and that a favourable answer may, before long, be generally given to one of the bitterest cries in London.—I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

14, Arbour-square, SARAH HECKFORD.

Notes and Comments.

WILL the gentleman who in January last handed in a donation at our Publishing Office, as from "One of the Lord's children at Weston-super-Mare," kindly send us his name and address?

Many of our London readers may like to be informed that Rev. Dr. Pentecost, of Brooklyn, will preach on "The Crucifixion" at St. George's Hall, Langham-place, Regent-street, on Good Friday (to-morrow) at 11 a.m. As will be seen by our Forthcoming Announcements, Dr. Pentecost and Mr. Stebbins commence a Mission at the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, on Sunday next. Mr. Sankey will assist at some of the early meetings.

We have received letters relating to the Burton-on-Trent controversy, from Mr. Linnell, in reply to Mr. Dearden; from Mr. Spriggs-Smith, in reply to Mr. Linnell and Mr. Field; from Mr. Pennell, declining to receive the information proffered privately by Mr. Field; and from Rev. J. Bennett, of Park Chapel, Chelsea, in defence of Mr. Guest. We think, however, that we shall best serve the interests of all parties concerned by closing the discussion in our columns.

Religious affairs in Malta seem in anything but a satisfactory state. The Jesuits are buying up property and establishing their schools, the Protestant College having recently fallen into their hands. They are exerting all their influence to hinder the advance of education, well knowing that if the people are taught English, as it is proposed they should be in the Government schools, the Bible will be read, and superstitious regard for priestism receive a severe blow. It is easier and safer to distribute the Gospels and tracts in Spain or Rome than in Malta, although the treaty of cession gives absolute freedom and equality to all religions. The picture is not all dark, however, for most encouraging reports are given as to the increase of the kingdom of Christ among the soldiers and sailors there. There ought to be no lack of firmness on the part of our own Government in insisting that the scheme for the advance of education shall be vigorously prosecuted.

We have much pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the announcement, elsewhere made, that Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe has been appointed to the office of Secretary to the Rescue Society. At the same time, we are sorry to learn that, owing doubtless in part to the uncertainty which has existed since the death of Mr. Daniel Cooper, who had full charge of the work for so many years, and whose death has been so deeply lamented, the funds have greatly fallen off, and are much in arrear of the usual receipts. Now that a new Secretary has been appointed, we trust this Society, which has done such good service, and been so much blessed of God for the past thirty years, will not be allowed to languish for lack of funds. We earnestly commend Mr. Thorpe to the prayer and sympathy of our readers, and trust they will encourage him in his new duties by contributing liberally. He has had considerable experience in evangelistic work, and has for many years been Assistant Secretary of the Spanish and Portuguese Church Missions.

The famous aphorism of Chillingworth that "the Bible and the Bible alone is the religion of Protestants," requires far closer practical attention than it receives. A correspondent writes, in reference to the demand for a new theology as a basis of union, that holy Scripture is, in itself, a sufficient visible basis for Church unity and Christian communion. All our differences and divisions arise very much from either not receiving the Word of God simply and solely as authoritative, or else insisting on what is not explicitly laid down or decided therein. Bible Christians, in the literal sense of the words, are far too rare. The consequence is that division and sectism are far too common.

Another correspondent (G. W. A.) cannot understand how any can speak of themselves as saved while they are yet in the flesh. He specially refers to the article in our issue for March 20, by Lady Hope, and asks what chapter and verse in Scripture teaches us to say we are saved? We should refer the querist to such scriptures as Ephesians ii., where believers are taught to regard themselves as in a state of salvation; they are quickened together with Christ, saved by grace, and made nigh by the blood of Christ, and in contrast to their previous estrangement and enmity, have been reconciled and brought into the household of God. If actual and present salvation were not attainable, all the statements of God's Word about faith as the source of justification would be null and void.

Salvation in the New Testament has three aspects. In 2 Tim. i. 9, we are spoken of as saved now, and in accordance with this we are said (in Col. i. 13) to have been delivered from the power of darkness, and to be translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son. Many similar expressions of a saving change having been wrought occur in the Gospels and Epistles. But in 1 Cor. i. 18 (R.V.) we are spoken of as in process of salvation—"to us who are being saved." In Rom. v. 9, we are said to have been saved from wrath through the death of Christ, but in reference to the continuous need for grace and strength which arises from contact with evil we are assured that we shall be saved through his life, seeing that He lives to carry on the work of salvation in his people. In a third sense, salvation is yet future, for in 1 Pet. i. 5, we are said to be "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time." The consummation, the complete sanctification and eternal glory to which saved souls are called, is yet in store for us. It is blessedly true, however, that every genuine believer in Christ Jesus is saved, even though the fulness of his salvation is being attained by stages of growth and processes of Divine discipline and love.

In attempting to bring the outside population into our places of worship, the system of pew-rents is one of the difficulties which the churches must consider. It has much to do with the alienation of large numbers from the sanctuary. Not that they are unwilling to give of their substance for the support of the ministry, but they object to be charged for it, and still more to be classified and railed off in proportion to the rent they are expected to pay. Emerson said religion in our time has become pew-renting. It is not so bad as this, but the system is not a Scriptural one, and proves an obstacle to the furtherance of the Gospel; many thousands but for its influence would frequent the churches and chapels where the truth is earnestly proclaimed.

"The labourer is worthy of his hire," and "they who preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel," for "so hath the Lord ordained." But the means by which this principle is acted upon calls for careful examination. Many a minister would be thankful to find his church officers prepared to look at this subject simply with reference to the Master's will and the growing tendency to neglect public worship. By wise and kindly sympathy with a pastor's position, church officers may do much to bring about a healthier method of adjusting church finance, and so of attracting the masses to the house of God without injuring the interests of the faithful servant of Christ, whose work is entitled to its reward.

Parents and teachers cannot be too vigilant as to the class of reading which falls into the hands of the young people of their charge. The mischief wrought by impure and worthless literature cannot well be exaggerated. The New York Tribune recently said, touching this evil, what receives constant proof on all sides:—

"Through reading this pestilent stuff a great many boys are undoubtedly put fairly in the road to ruin. They insensibly acquire a crooked moral vision. They pine for opportunities to emulate the heroes they are reading about. Presently they are tempted to steal from their parents, friends, or employers, to prepare for some preposterous raid, and then, though they may be saved for a time, their characters have sustained a shock which is liable to weaken them permanently."

It is a difficult matter to deal with in many cases, but it is worth all the pains we can take to protect our children from so pernicious an influence. It is not only by exercising surveillance over their reading, but by using all means in our power to cultivate a healthy taste in this respect that we may succeed in preventing the mischief. The realms of history, natural science, and biography, abound withs cenes and incidents exciting and interesting as the pages of romance, and to guide the mind early to such resources of instruction and mental recreation is a work we do well to undertake with alacrity. Parents, if wise, will lose no opportunity of showing their children that they are deeply interested in whatever is calculated to give them pleasure and profit.

The following pathetic note from our dear friend Mr. Fegan, who is confined to his bed, will, we are sure, reach the hearts of all friends of poor boys:—

"Dear Friend,—I came back a few days ago, but have made poor progress. My doctors advise a sea voyage, &c., and to combine future usefulness with present re-construction, I am going (D.V.) in about a fortnight to Canada for a tour in the States. If you kindly mention this in The Christian it may help me on this side and on the other. Twelve years of such work, day and night, have made me very shattered, but I hope this move will through mercy set me up again.—
Your obliged friend, "J. W. C. Fegan.

Among modern theologians the late Dr. Martensen, the Danish Bishop of Saeelnd, held distinguished rank. Subscribers to the standard series of works known as Clark's Theological Library, are familiar with his name and genius as an author. He held the highest position in the Danish Church for thirty years past, and his removal by death in February last has left a serious gap in the ranks of that community. Dr. Martensen was born in 1808, so had reached his seventy-sixth year.

We are glad to record the brotherly love of a clergyman who writes on behalf of a neighbouring congregational minister, with a family so large and a stipend so small that they have no meat five days out of the week. The clergyman says: "The people do what they can, but what is called Dissent in these regions is not characterised by rank or wealth." We fear there are not a few ministers of Christ, in all the churches more or less, in similar straitened circumstances.

"M. E. Monteil," says Le Christianisme, "Municipal Counsellor of Paris, has just published a manual of instruction which appears to enjoy considerable favour with the Paris municipality. The council wished a copy of the manual to be given to every teacher who desired it, and that two copies should be placed in every school library. To see what it is, we transcribe the first page:—

"'What is God?' 'We know nothing about it.'
"'You deny God?' 'We neither deny nor affirm, we do not know what it is, we are ignorant of what the term God signifies.'
"'God has created everything and rules all.' 'How do you know?'
"'It is so said.' 'Those who say so, have they seen or heard Him?'
"'No, they have not.' 'Then they do not know, neither do we know.'

"The author shows himself absolutely hostile to all religions. Concerning the Scriptures he says:—

"'Why did Jesus speak in parables?' 'Because this manner of speaking, which was habitual with the Hebrews, enabled Him more easily to deceive the people.'
"'Did He knowingly deceive the people?' 'Perhaps.'

"There are pages of such coarseness that we could not put them under the eyes of our readers. It is a grave sign that such a book, where atheism is openly professed, where the modesty of childhood is pitilessly outraged, should obtain the suffrages of the representatives of the first city in France."

The fate of Mr. Stevenson's Bill for Sunday Closing is rendered very doubtful this session by last week's debate. How men of common sense and wide observation—to say nothing of religious conviction—bring themselves to oppose a measure so manifestly on the side of morals, and so eminently calculated in every way to benefit the community, is a mystery difficult of solution. One reads the report of speeches made against the principle of the Bill without finding a single argument of weight, and searches in vain for a justification of the opposition so persistently offered. The battle, however, is not lost, although victory may be a little longer delayed.

It is always gratifying to see men of high position and commanding influence in the nation identifying themselves with works of distinctively Christian nature and aim. Mr. Fawcett, the Postmaster-general, last week opened the annual Scholars' Exhibition in connection with some Sunday-schools in Bethnal-green. In doing so, he urged that it was of the greatest importance to encourage just now the handicraft skill of the young of both sexes, and incidentally remarked that it was one of the great objects of education not to exalt one occupation or pursuit above another. It is a truth which needs to be clearly taught, that every occupation in life is equally honourable, if a man does his duty in it. No useful calling or trade should be despised.

We regret to hear that Dr. Barnardo's Homes are in much need of funds. That the workers under such circumstances should be somewhat anxious is not to be wondered at, but we are sure our readers only require to know the need to send effectual aid.

A Saturday afternoon Bible-class, with an average attendance of 2500, is a phenomenon of striking if not startling character. Yet such a one is a fact, to be witnessed any Saturday, at 3 p.m., in Tremont Temple, Boston. Dr. Meredith gathers this number of Christian workers together every week, for the simple purpose of studying and elucidating the Sunday-school lesson for the following day. Unflinching faith in the verities of Scripture, combined with rare tact in leadership, are cited by the New York Independent as foremost among the causes of this noteworthy success in awakening supreme interest in the things of God. Would that such a sight could be witnessed in our own metropolis! The record of it as an accomplishad fact elsewhere suggests not only the desire, but earnest inquiry what in a similar direction could be accomplished among ourselves.

Respectability may become a vice rather than indicate virtue. It is to be feared that it so in its hold on some of our churches. Rev. C. Parkhurst, of Madison-square Church, N.Y., in a paper on the relation of the Church to the masses, lately said: "It is a sad day for a church when it gets so far off from the ground, that drunkards and prostitutes find in it no meaning for them. Such a church is a castle in the air. An architect cannot make up in a cornice what his building lacks in mudsill. So in a church, a maximum of respectability in the arches will not make good a deficit of native soil at the pavement. The worth of a church or a denomination is to be measured by the success with which it fastens its grip on the men and women who lie at the bottom of society." Such words read a much-needed lesson to the many among us, who, like the Pharisees of old, look with supercilious scorn and cold indifference upon publicans and sinners.

Equally true and worthy of endorsement are the same writer's words when he says:—

"People circumstanced as the majority of us are do not more than half believe that a man in the gutter, or a woman across in Africa or out in China, has a soul, a whole soul, except by accommodation of terms. And it comes into our churches too. It is in the pulpit. I love to preach to wealth, to social condition, to culture, and to clothes. I do; and, my brother in the ministry, so do you. It is in our church arrangements. As a great many of our churches are administered, one of the most conspicuous facts in an assemblage of worshippers is the social and pecuniary inequality of those in attendance. So in this modern invention of Satan which builds one kind of church for a rich man, and another sort for a poor man. Hardly can there be anything in our ecclesiastical machinery that the devil relishes more than our architectural confessions that Mammon has more to do than the Son of God does in classifying and grouping our Sunday worshippers. I appreciate the difficulties; but before the Cross, in the presence of the Divine Spirit and around the emblems of our Lord's broken body and shed blood, the rich and the poor are bound to meet together."

Just as far as men are valued by us not for their social status, but for the immortal principle which is lodged within them, and are viewed from the standpoint, not of circumstances and character, but that of Christ's death for all men on Calvary, shall we rise above the evil Mr. Parkhurst rebukes, and have power as churches to win men from sin to holiness, from Satan to God.

Our old friend and fellow-worker, Richard Weaver, was married on Thursday last, at Brunswick Wesleyan Chapel, Leek, to Miss Mary Needham, a lady of that town. The local and other friends present manifested a hearty interest in bride and bridegroom.

The physiological value of Temperance has received another testimony worthy of notice, especially by all brain workers. Dr. Clouston, of Edinburgh, in an address to the students of that university, though not himself an abstainer, thus addressed his audience:—

"Looking at the University student, taking into account the period of life at which you study, the work you have to do, the unfavourable conditions of life in which you have to live from a physiological point of view; taking the long cold period of our Scotch dark winters, when we cannot get enough outdoor exercise; taking the fact that neither you nor I know the weak points of our constitutions as derived from our ancestry—taking all these things into consideration, I think that a student will have little reason to blame himself who totally abstains from alcohol during his period of study. You will all admit that a man who does so avoids certain manifest risks—most of you will admit that he will do more work."

The doctor says that he speaks from experience as well as conviction, having during his own college life been a total abstainer, and adds that if a man remains so all his life it is by no means the worst thing he can do.

The steady, if not rapid, advance which is being made by our Y.M.C.A.'s all over the country is a cause for general congratulation. The acquisition by the Brighton Association of the mansion built on the Steine by Mrs. Fitzherbert in the time of George IV. is a fact to be rejoiced in. The value of such an institution in a town like that known as London-by-the-Sea, and the desirableness of its facilities being of the finest and best, must be recognised by all. The rooms were opened last week by Lord Shaftesbury, and we hope a career of wide usefulness is before the executive of this important branch of one of our most potent and exemplary agencies for promoting the work of Christ.

It is to be feared that family prayer is a duty greatly neglected in these days of hurry and religious indifference, and yet how blessed is its influence on home life where it is devoutly observed, and how important that families by its means should be led to daily recognise the goodness of God, and his claim upon our gratitude and love. Mr. Spurgeon has given this subject good illustration by saying:—

"Family prayer is the nutriment of family piety, and woe to those who allow it to cease. I read the other day of parents who said they could not have family prayer, and one asked this question: 'If you knew that your children would be sick through the neglect of family prayer, would you not have it? If one child was smitten down with fever each morning that you neglected prayer, how then?' 'Oh, then they would have it.' 'And if there was a law that you should be fined five shillings if you did not meet for prayer, would you find time for it?' 'Yes.' 'And if there were five pounds given to all who had family prayer, would you not by some means arrange to have it?' 'Yes.' And so the inquirer went on with many questions, and wound up with this: 'Then it is but an idle excuse when you, who profess to be servants of God, say that you have no time or opportunity for family prayer?'"

We are obliged to defer the insertion of the promised new Sacred Song by Mr. Stebbins; we hope to give it in our next.

THE REVIVAL IN LONDON.

A Glance at the Great Work.

By LADY HOPE.

THE two friends who conversed together lately on the subject of the meetings now being held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey, have met again; this time they are on their way to the vast hall which holds from five to six thousand people. The one seems at her ease, the other doubtful in the extreme as to the direction in which her steps are tending.

"We are very early, are we not?" she asks.

"Not too early," her friend replies. "I am anxious to be on the spot quite an hour before the time, in fact, when the doors are opened, as it is sometimes difficult to get a good seat after the first rush of people has filled the building. I want a good seat for you to-day. And besides, I remember that you said you did not like the 'jostling and the crowding' that went on when people were eager to get seats; or rather, that you thought you would not like it."

"Oh! I think a London crowd is a dreadful thing. I shall never forget it one day when the boat race was going on between Oxford and Cambridge, and I went with others to see it. It was really enough to frighten one, though we only looked on from a distance. People were knocked about, and their pockets picked. It was horrid, I assure you."

"But this crowd is a very different on! The people are eager to get seats, I confess, and for this reason I have come early, that we may get in without more inconvenience than necessary. At the same time I must beg you to put yourself in the place of those who have encountered difficulties, as we have ourselves, in coming this distance, and imagine the disappointment it would cause them if they were turned away."

"I should not think such a thing could happen if the building is a large one."

"Well, you shall see for yourself whether this be the case or not! You will hear Mr. Moody give out, most probably, that there are two or three 'overflow' meetings being held close by in halls and chapels, for those who cannot find an entrance at his meeting."

"Nonsense! You are exaggerating!"

"Not in the least. But, as I say, you will see it all for yourself, and therefore can judge better."

"What did you pay for the tickets?"

"Nothing. No charge is made for them. They are to be had quite free, on request, either by letter or in person, at the office for the district where the meetings are held.

"That is most interesting. I cannot imagine why the promoters of the meetings do not make people pay for them. If they are worth anything at all, they are surely worth paying for."

"You might think so, indeed; but they are quite free."

"What! on the principle of a free tea?—that sort of thing?

"On the principle of a Free Gospel! These meetings are held for the purpose of making this Gospel known."

"Oh, now, do stop a minute. I cannot bear to hear you say such things. What in the world is the good of getting up efforts of this kind, when the land is full of churches, where the Bible is read and prayers are offered every Sunday, and in many cases every week-day too? I really feel now as if I should turn back, and not go with you at all."

"Oh! have patience with me for once, and let us keep to our bargain of going together, that you may be able better to judge of that which has so delighted and fascinated me; and, what is more, comforted me. But in reply to your objection, may I just say, that if in these meetings you were likely to hear one syllable of expressed, or even implied, antagonism to the church, I should not think of asking you to come to them. The 'Gospel' that is proclaimed is precisely the same as that contained in our Articles, our Church Service, and, better still, in our Bible. We cannot, therefore, endanger our principles by going to listen to-day. What is more, you will see several front seats on the platform occupied by clergymen, every one of whom is taking the deepest interest in the proceedings before him, and helping them on to the utmost of his power."

"Oh, you never told me that before! I shall feel safer if this be the case. . . . But there was a sentence you used the other day which I did not understand; and I am not quite sure that it was a genuine one."

"Not a genuine one! What do you mean? Something that I said about the 'after-meeting,' was it?

"Yes; something in connection with it. You said that you now experienced 'a new life.' Did you really mean this, or not? The words have occurred to me several times; and I have wondered whether you said them in a moment of enthusiasm, or, in fact, whether you really meant them."

"Indeed, I did not say them carelessly. In Hebrews vii. 16 we read of 'the power of an endless life.' This is my newly-found experience. I understand the meaning of those words now; I never knew them before. I never knew it before—that life I mean."

"But I thought this was a thing to be sought after, not——"

"Not to be obtained?"

"No, I do not exactly mean that. I mean that it is not to be obtained now. It is a boon that we may hope to receive after death, if we live as we ought to live here."

"Oh! how terribly uncertain! How dreadful to risk our salvation upon a chance like that! I do believe I thought something of the kind too; only, I confess I never put the idea into such plain words as yours. It is thoroughly erroneous, however; for the Scripture says, 'He that heareth my Word, and believeth on Him that sent Me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life.' 'He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son, hath not life.' It is the present tense of this glorious privilege. Salvation in the highest and fullest sense of the term is put before us in these meetings. We are shown that God's will regarding us is that we should start with the acceptance and possession of this great gift. We are not to earn the gift, but to receive it and use it."

"This is all quite a new idea to me."

"And to many others. Though they have learnt it all their lives by rote, they have never known, understood, or believed it till now. I, for one, can speak for myself. It has been my own case."

"In what way is it a new life? Where do you perceive the difference?"

"I have not the same tastes, wishes, fancies, annoyances, or inclinations that I used to have formerly. I cannot, for one thing, enjoy the society or conversation that used to be a sort of second nature to me before. But I would rather not talk of myself. I admired the remark made at one of our testimony meetings lately. When a number of different people were giving their experiences as to their deliverance from besetting sins, and their joy and happiness in believing in Christ Jesus, one man stood up and said, 'The Lord has indeed done great things for me. Ask my wife, and children, and servants, whether a change has not taken place in me, and in my home.' 'A new life,' he called it too."

"Well, I must own that in one thing I have noticed a great change in you lately. You used to amuse us all very much with your stories. Scandal and gossip you used to serve out wholesale and retail, when we were at a small party together. I notice that you never do it now. I used to think it was very clever, and exceedingly amusing; and yet I never turned my back without feeling that I might become the subject of similar conversation the next moment."

"Oh, no! never now. I hope that as long as I live, I may never do these things again. They would give me no pleasure now. In fact, I could not bear to bring such words to my lips."

"Why not?"

"They are not Christian; they are not Christlike. Jesus would not say them—my blessed Jesus! He is my new Master and Lord. 'I count all things but loss,' for his sake. There is nothing on earth to be compared with the joy of serving the Lord. I serve Him now because He has forgiven me; not because I want Him to forgive me! That makes a great difference. The bond of gratitude is a strong one. Oh, 'the power of an endless life!' I know just a little of it. I am beginning to know it."

"Certainly you have a gift of expressing yourself. I have not. So you have me at a disadvantage."

"Not at all. The difference between us lies in a nutshell, if you word it concisely, though the importance of that difference is overwhelming. You depend for the whole of your happiness throughout eternity on doubtful possibilities, on uncertain salvation! Just for one moment conceive the alternatives as put before us clearly and plainly in God's own Word. You say you hope you may get salvation after death—a doubtful gift in the future. I come as a poor sinner, confessing my sins, and obtain this great salvation as a certain gift in the present time! And this is no delusion on my part. It is the result of Scripture teaching. My Bible is all opened up to me now. I never understood it before."

"This is a very abstruse subject!"

"Is it? and yet a little Irish boy expressed this truth very well, after the Mission in Belfast eight years ago. He said, 'I go to the other boys in the street that I used to play with, and I say to them, Come with me to the meetings! If one boy says No, I am not coming! What do you mean by preaching to me? You are no better than I am. What's the difference? I says, Oh, yes, Mike! There is a difference. You are one S., and I am two S's. What do you mean? he asks. You are a sinner, Mike, and I am a saved sinner. That is the difference. And now, I want you to be saved, too."

"You puzzle me, certainly."

"Here we are at the spot. Now you will hear Mr. Moody speak; and Mr. Sankey will sing, as well as the choir. Afterwards you will have an opportunity of remaining to the prayer-meeting if you like. We are in very good time, the doors are just opening!"

The Addison-road Meetings.

With unabated energy has the work of God been carried on at Kensington during the past week, the afternoon attendances increasing daily until the hall was taxed to its utmost capacity to admit the anxious throngs which train after train brought to the spot. The district around seems to have been thoroughly worked, and numbers come from other parts. In the evenings overflow-meetings have been held at Cadby Hall, conducted by Mr. Scroggie, but some difficulty has been experienced in persuading the disappointed crowd outside to avail themselves of this opportunity. Sometimes, too, when a goodly number have been gathered a few will disturb the meeting by leaving it before the speaker has fairly commenced. It is very hard to hold a disappointed audience, but Mr. Scroggie succeeds in keeping their interest when once it is awakened.

It is unfortunate that at more than one place the hall has been unavoidably erected in close proximity to a flourishing public-house, and it is sad to see men with their wives, and mothers with their children, adjourning thither upon failing to obtain admission. There are, however, some workers who, alive to this evil, have remained outside to turn the feet of such stragglers into the direction of the overflow meetings, or by a few quiet words endeavour to lead them into the path of life. There are many such ways in which a few Christians might be employed while the large meetings are going on.

The rush is over; the doors and gates are finally closed; only a few curious loiterers remain in the narrow street, peering through the fencing or turning unsatisfied away. The policemen, too, are glad to stand at ease, while even the vendors of hymn-books and so-called portraits have subsided into casual conversation with each other as they count their coppers, and for a while put up their wares. Might not some of these be reached? Shall it be that men who have been playing a more or less important part in the externals of such a great work as this, can pass through the entire Mission and never hear the Gospel from within or without? Might not a few more workers deny themselves to reach them, and then go, refreshed and strengthened, into the inquiry-room to lead others into light? The exercise of a little such practical Christianity would bring its own reward, and who knows the value of the fruit which might spring from it?

The scene within the hall varies but little from night to night, the seats immediately in front being reserved as usual for working-men. The wisdom of this is obvious to anyone who from the platform takes stock of their faces during the service. Their interest and attention seem unbounded, while now and then a note of appreciation escapes from the lips of one who feels the power of the speaker's words.

A working man said to me one evening, "It's my last night in London, sir. I'm going to start for Canada to-morrow, as I can't get on here; but, please God, I'll never forget what I've heard in there. I've been abroad before, sir, but I never spent my last evening like I have to-night." The poor fellow, an intelligent young Irishman of six and twenty, had been a confirmed drunkard from fifteen years of age. He was reclaimed a few months ago, but has many times since felt the awful craving for drink. He was much encouraged by Mr. Moody's assurance that God was able and willing even to take this appetite entirely away.

A very large number of men rose one evening in response to Mr. Moody's appeal after speaking upon the return of the wanderer in our Lord's parable. After 135 persons had thus testified their desire for salvation, Mr. Sankey and Miss Beauchamp sang, "Come home," and in the solemn stillness Mr. Moody asked: "Will no one else say, 'I will arise, and go to my Father'?" and the former number was supplemented by forty more.

The four meetings of Sunday last were marked by the usual immense audiences and general enthusiasm. Nearly three thousand men stayed to the after-meeting at night, and 230 rose for prayer.

It is interesting sometimes to make a few while travelling to and from the meetings. The Metropolitan station presents a busy spectacle when the hall is emptying; the regular, steady-going passengers, who know but little change from their daily routine of "in in the morning and out at night," are somewhat disconcerted when they find themselves uncomfortably packed by the ingress of these meeting-goers. "Where on earth do all these people come from?" exclaimed an old gentleman, who fared rather roughly as he sat next the door. He had hitherto had the carriage to himself, but when he found out who his new companions were he escaped at the next station. Thus the work attracts attention and becomes the more widely known.

On another occasion, two very stylish ladies got in and greeted a third, presently asking, "Where do you think we're going?" "Oh! I'm sure I couldn't guess." "Why, to Addison-road, to those meetings. We have not been before, and our friends assure us we shall be crushed to death, but we have platform tickets." Their subsequent conversation, however, proved that their usual tastes were very different from any such religious movements as these. Still it is encouraging to learn that the good influence is penetrating even such circles as these.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES.

The Saturday afternoon services for children have been conducted by Messrs. E. J. Kennedy and S. D. Richards, of the Children's Special Service Mission. The attendances were about 3000 and 2500 respectively. A short after-meeting was held at the close of each service, when many children remained for conversation with the workers.

Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan.

We thankfully record the continued success of these friends at the Town Hall, Bermondsey. The attendance has been well sustained, the audience being as far as can be judged the very sort that a Mission service like the present alone can reach. There is an overwhelming population of non-churchgoers in the district, chiefly of the labouring class, and we are glad to say that it is to this section that a very large number belong of those whose heart the Gospel has reached.

As there is no ante-room for inquirers, there has been some little difficulty in dealing personally with them, but it is met by friends taking up places all through the hall and galleries; and, indeed, excellent use is made of opportunities both before and after the service. Converts are spoken to with regard to their difficulties. Indifference is often changed to interest; in some instances the objections of infidels are judiciously put aside, and the Father's love to his children warmly pressed home upon them. A poor woman whose heart the Lord has opened tells how for the last two Sundays she has not opened her little shop as formerly, and she fears the loss to her may be more than she may be able to bear. A kindly hand points her to promises in the Word, and her faith is strengthened.

Perhaps the feature of the past week's meetings was the dialogue on Wednesday evening between Major Whittle and the Rev. Marcus Rainsford, of Belgrave Chapel. We give a part of it in another column, but the perusal in print of the answers will fail to excite an interest equal to that with which they were listened to by the audience as they fell from the lips of this genial and eloquent servant of the Lord.

At the closing meeting of the week, Major Whittle said his heart had been made glad by what he had seen at these meetings. He could not help thinking they had been the best meetings he had seen in London. He told of a man who had not been in a church for years. A ticket was handed to him in the street. He came to a meeting, and the cry wrung from his heart was, "There is a God, there is a God. I want to be saved!"

Another case is that of a young man, whose appearance fully confirmed his story. He was entirely destitute, and this it was which was his chief difficulty, lest it might be thought he wished to impose for the sake of charity. He had parents in a good position in London, but through some little difficulty he ran away from them years ago. Kind friends have taken him in charge; his parents are being communicated with, and in the meantime he is rejoicing to know that his Father in heaven has received him, a prodigal, to his favour.

Three services were held on Sunday, the three o'clock meeting being for women only. Instead of announcing the text as usual Major Whittle asked Mr. McGranahan to sing it, and he and his good lady sweetly sung "Come unto Me ye who are weary." Rich blessing followed the preaching and singing of that Word. The meetings are to continue till Good Friday, which is to be a busy day, the first of its three services being specially for converts and inquirers.

Messrs. Pentecost and Stebbins.

The meetings last week in Tolmers-square Church, Hampstead-road, under Dr. Pentecost and Mr. Stebbins, were most successful. On Monday evening the large church was filled in the lower part, but the galleries had to be thrown open the following night, and for the remaining nights of the week the church was crowded. The congregations, mostly of the working class, listened very attentively to the earnest words of Dr. Pentecost. A great impression was also made by the sweet pathetic song of Mr. Stebbins. The after-meetings have been most interesting and encouraging. A number of inquirers have remained every evening.

Such a good work has been done that Dr. Pentecost and Mr. Stebbins have decided to continue the services for another week. When asked if they would like him to remain another week, the large congregation in response at once rose to their feet.

Mizpah Band for King's Cross.

On Tuesday evening, April 1, a meeting was held in the King's-cross Theatre, of a number of friends who take an interest in the deliverance of those who have become or are in danger of becoming victims of strong drink. The meeting was presided over by Mr. R. Simpson, of Glasgow, who gave an account of the prosperity of the Band formed a few weeks ago at Stratford, and also of the recently formed Band at Deptford. The Lord has richly owned their efforts in the preservation of those who had been delivered, and in leading numbers of other perishing ones to the Saviour.

The meeting was addressed by a brother who had been held in the bondage of Satan by the power of strong drink for twenty-six years; he gave a thrilling account of how he was brought to Christ, and how the Lord had been using him in leading numbers of other drunkards to the Saviour, who had not only given them complete deliverance from the bondage of strong drink, but from the use of tobacco, proving that Christ's desire was to give a clean salvation to all his followers.

An opportunity having been given for any one present to bear testimony, several rose to thank and praise the Lord for the great blessing they had received from Him through the instrumentality of Mr. Moody. Some said they had been helpless victims of strong drink for many years, but were now delivered from the craving, and had found true rest and peace to their souls by faith in the Lord Jesus.

The Cabmen's Mission Hall, King'-cross, having been kindly placed at their disposal, the Band will meet there weekly, where all interested in this branch of work will receive a hearty welcome.

Obituary.

JONATHAN D. CARR.

AT Carlisle, on April 6, Jonathan D. Carr, aged 77, fell asleep in Jesus, after several weeks' illness, during which, in the midst of much physical weakness, he bore a most blessed testimony. He constantly dwelt upon the love of Jesus, again and again repeating, "Oh, the love of Jesus!" or, "What should we do without the blood of Jesus?"

BARTHOLOMEW SMITH.

This good man, one of the converted gipsies, entered into his eternal rest on Thursday morning last. For several weeks he had been laid aside from the evangelistic work carried on in conjunction with his brother Cornelius, owing to very rapidly-developed heart disease. Every means were tried for his relief in his own little home at Leytonstone, but without avail, and, as a final resort, he was removed on Saturday last to Mildmay Cottage Hospital, where he was surrounded with the best medical skill and tender nursing care, but he got gradually weaker. When the worst was made known to him he urgently pleaded that he might be taken home to die beside his family, and the wish was granted. His devoted Christian wife and brother Cornelius carefully moved him to his own little cot on Wednesday afternoon, and there, soon after midnight, the faithful servant was ushered into "the presence of the King." The funeral took place on Monday last, in Leytonstone Churchyard. He was laid beside his beloved brother, Woodlock, who it will be remembered met his death by accident two years ago while out on Christian service at Chingford, Essex.

THE LONDON POOR.

At the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, a Conference, convened by a Committee representing delegates from Christian churches, Sunday-schools, religious bodies, and philanthropic societies, was inaugurated on Wednesday last week. There was a large attendance at the morning sitting, at which Sir W. McArthur, M.P., presided. The object of the gatherings was to consider how the influence of the churches could best be directed toward an amelioration of the present state of things.

The Chairman said the great interest which had been excited in all directions on this subject was largely due to the publication of the pamphlet called "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London." A Royal Commission had since been appointed to examine the condition of things, while many private organisations had been at work with a view to improve the state of the London poor, which, after all, would have been infinitely worse than it is but for the past efforts of the religious bodies. He did not know what London would have been but for the indefatigable and self-sacrificing labours of the London City missionaries, and other similar agencies. Intoxicating drink was doubtless one of the greatest evils to be encountered. If England could but be made sober, educated, and religious, she would then become the greatest influence for good on the face of the earth.

Rev. S. H. Booth, Secretary of the Baptist Union, spoke on "the object and spirit of the Conference," which was not so much to formulate any new methods of action, as to stimulate and enlarge those already in existence. If the sad condition of things were but adequately pressed home upon the churches, there was that in the Christian heart of London which was fully equal to meet all the demands made upon it.

Rev. Andrew Mearns, Secretary of the London Congregational Union, said that he had again gone over the ground dealt with in "The Bitter Cry." Limiting his visits solely to the one-room people, the state of things he found was about as bad as bad could be. In one case he found as many as ten persons living in one room. A great many lived in cellars. Some of the sanitary provisions, or rather, the absence of such provisions, was simply horrible. Immorality abounded to a fearful extent. Time was when those who gave themselves up to an immoral life openly in the streets were at all events of mature age, but now child-immorality was deplorably prevalent, and the age at which it begins seemed to be getting lower every year. In some cases a boy and girl lived together, the girl going into the streets at night, and the boy thieving.

Rev. Archibald Brown spoke of the appalling state of certain parts of East London, giving facts which had been arrived at by his own personal visitation of the slums. One cause of much of the abounding misery was traceable to early marriages. Some would be astonished if they knew all about the matter. Unremunerative labour was another prolific cause of poverty. At one house he found a hard-working woman engaged in "finishing" trousers, i.e., lining them throughout, putting on all the buttons, and hard pressing the seams, she having to find the thread, irons, and firing. The price per pair was 2½d. (Shame!) That woman worked from seven in the morning until nine at night, and just managed to earn one shilling per day. One sentence dropped from her lips that burned into his soul. She said, "I have buried eight children, but not one with regret. It's the best thing that can happen to children here, to die." The only way to reach the people thus sunk in misery and destitution through drink and immorality would be by individual members of our churches going themselves into these scenes of sorrow and taking them by the hand and telling them of the Saviour who came to seek and to save the lost.

A paper was read by Mr. Albert Spicer, on "The Extent and Distribution of the various classes of the London Poor." It was shown that in many parts of London the direst poverty and worst sanitary arrangements were to be found in close proximity to the dwellings of the rich. Mr. T. Marchant Williams confirmed the statements made by Mr. Spicer. The clearing away of old buildings had pushed the poor together. The landlords were too greedy of gain, and were masters of the situation.

Rev. G. M. Murphy contended that drink was the great mischief-maker of the evil deplored. He had observed that the poorer the inhabitants were the richer was the district in the number of public-houses; and the more squalid the homes and wretched the people, the more sumptuous the fitting-up of the drink temple.

In the discussion that followed, Mr. Hunter, of Southwark, suggested that Christian men with means at their disposal should buy up some of the vacant spaces in low neighbourhoods, where old houses formerly stood, and erect new ones with large, healthy rooms at a low rent. Rev. J. C. Whitmore said there were many thousands in this great city who are absolutely homeless, to whom the parks, the embankment, or any open space was a lodging. Very few perhaps in that meeting knew of the existence of "Ha'penny Refuges," places where persons can get shelter for two hours for a "Ha'penny." Rev. G. S. Reaney thought there was danger of waste in the method of indiscriminate impulsive giving adopted by many benevolent people. Mr. W. Harrison, of St. Giles' Mission, said what was needed was a more remunerative wage.

At the evening sitting Dr. Underhill presided. The general subject of discussion was, "The causes operating to degrade, and keep degraded, many of the London poor." Dr. Harrison Branthwaite expatiated on drink and overcrowding, as causes of the degradation. Mr. John Bell severely criticised the Torrens Act, for dealing with houses unfit for human habitation. Vestries did not demand its enforcement, partly on account of its cumbrous machinery, and the delay that was interposed in its legislative effect. Men of position, character, and influence were wanted for the office of vestrymen, and Christian men should do all in their power to get such elected.

Rev. J. Kent Philip, of Lewisham, said the question of Socialism was rising in importance. But the true Socialism was the old doctrine of "Bear ye one another's burdens," and not the gospel of plunder. The Chairman said not a few had been fatally contaminated through impure and demoralising literature. Vast numbers of young people from the country found no social or religious home to protect them from the temptations of London life.

THURSDAY.

This morning the chair was occupied by Mr. H. M. Matheson. He expressed gratitude for the facts elicited on the previous day. They were called now to deal with remedial measures, and suggested that it would be an admirable plan if every church should make a point of raising another congregation in a poor locality affiliated with it.

Dr. Allon contended that no force was equal to the problem before them but that of Christianity. Rationalism, with its philosophy and its ethics, left out the main feature of the great problem to be solved—the heart and life of the individual himself. It could only tell the drunkard to be sober, the profligate to be pure, the spendthrift to be less prodigal, and the selfish to be benevolent. They might as well tell fire not to burn. Christianity, however, changed the selfish heart, and made it a religious obligation to do good to others. The world was rapidly growing more humane and brotherly. Tenderheartedness was growing. Oppressiveness, brutal vices, wicked wars were being more and more discredited. During the last half-century it had become almost another world. All this had been effected by Christianity. Never was the cry for the redress of wrongs so clamorous or so widespread as at the present moment. It was waxing louder and louder, and that fact showed that Christianity was fulfilling her great mission.

Dr. Oswald Dykes suggested that an argument for unpaid and voluntary labour was to be found in the fact that respectable artizans disliked churches and chapels. Murmurs of dissent were raised by the audience when he expressed his belief that no agency had reached the kennels of the slums except the Salvation Army. That however, he said, was his conviction. He also believed that true Christianity had no sympathy with the idea of Socialism as it was commonly understood on the Continent and Great Britain at the present moment, a sentiment which met with the fullest approval of the meeting. The term "Christian Socialism" might be used innocently, but it was certain to be misunderstood. On the Continent there was no such thing as Christian Socialism, but there was a Christian principle which would accomplish the end that others sought to achieve by socialism, viz., a practical remedy for these evils—living for the public because it was God's public.

In the discussion that followed, Mr. James Matheson reminded the assembly of the great commission given to the disciples to heal the sick as well as to preach the Gospel; he feared the Church had almost forgotten its duty in this respect. A vast amount of female agency in our churches is at present unused. Mr. Binns contended that the Sunday-school was the most profitable outcome of the revival movement which originated in the time of Wesley. Mr. B. Clark argued that in the connection between the Church and the Sunday-school we must look for the future of the Church work. Rev. A. McAulay said they could only get four per cent. of the working men into church, but they could get seventy per cent. of the lads into Sunday-schools.

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., expressed great fears as to the enormous and rapid increase of the population, which was one cause of the present misery. He feared it would lead to some terrific revolution. The people should be taught to diffuse themselves over the unoccupied portions of the globe.

Rev. A. G. Brown said that the Sunday-school, grand agency though it was, did not reach the class of the destitute in which that Conference was specially interested—did not come within miles of it. The children of the slums were naked, were covered with vermin; and if they came to Sunday-schools it would be at the expense of every other scholar.

Rev. Dr. Clifford demanded the establishment of a municipality for London, and suggested the formation of a board of Christian Guardians, who should organise the charity which was administered. The meeting, before dispersing, resolved that the Committee be requested to consider whether any further steps could be taken in furtherance of the objects contemplated.

PUBLIC MEETING IN EXETER HALL.

The two days' Conference closed with a public meeting in Exeter Hall on Thursday evening. The audience scarcely occupied two-thirds of the area of the hall, but what was lacking in point of numbers was made up in enthusiastic intensity of feeling. Lord Shaftesbury presided for a part of the time; when weariness and another engagement compelled him to leave, his place was taken by Mr. John Bell.

Four addresses were given. Rev. J. Guinness Rogers contended strongly that if the churches are to do their duty in grappling with the evils and burdens that weigh so heavily on the poor, they must care for the temporal as well as the spiritual condition of the masses. Many churches are suffering from spiritual gout, brought on through absolute idleness. Rev. H. Price Hughes hoped they would not be satisfied with scratching on the surface of the problem; they must go to the root of the evil. The poor were in many cases better fed and housed than in former days, but it could not be said that they had their due share of the ever-growing wealth of the country. He scornfully repudiated the idea that in the matter of assessing the wages of the labouring classes they, as Christians, should be guided by the unbending laws of political economy or "supply and demand." Darwin might propound the theory that in the struggle for existence the weak must go to the wall; with the Bible in his hand, he indignantly denied such a doctrine. The Gospel knew nothing of privileged classes, of sacrificing the masses of the people to secure culture, power, and fame for the few; it sought impartially the happiness of all. It laid down a revolutionary law for the idle, and in any truly Christian society the man who neither toiled with his hands nor span with his brains had a very bad time of it. (Lord Shaftesbury, interrupting, was understood to ask why such questions should be discussed there.) Mr. Hughes said he thought they bore very closely on the subject before them. The crime of Dives in the Gospel was that he was nothing better all his life than one who fared sumptuously and clothed himself in purple and fine linen, while Lazarus lay dying at his gates. Proceeding to remark on the spread of socialistic movements, Mr. Hughes asked if the Christian churches were to allow atheists and other foes of true religion to anticipate them by declining to look at this question in all its bearings, and to have regard to the social interests of the toiling masses? The Church that took up this question, and dealt with it in a Christian spirit, would be the Church of the future.

Rev. W. L. Watkinson expressed dissent from some of Mr. Hughes' statements. What society needed, he thought, was neither reformation nor revolution, but regeneration. He closed with a strong appeal for a curtailment of the liquor traffic. In this he was not merely imitated, but outdone by Rev. Newman Hall, who gave numerous facts from his own observation as to the terrible ravages of the accursed drink. To show that many of the churches were alive to the state of the people, Mr. Hall described the different Gospel and other agencies at work in various parts of London, and the success that had attended these efforts. If every individual Christian and every collective church would do what they can in their own immediate sphere, much of the evil and the sorrow would be speedily removed.

Conviction for Open-air Preaching.

MR. J. W. WOODALL, a direct descendant from the family of Anne Askew, the martyr, and a grandson of Rev. John Whitbridge, one of the founders of the London Missionary Society, was, with fourteen others, who assisted and listened, summoned before the Shrewsbury magistrates for alleged obstruction, by preaching in a little-frequented occupation road leading to some large railway works. The manager stated in Court that he fully sanctioned the meetings, because his men were benefited; also that the town refused to repair the road, and his company had to repair it. It was also proved that for months a cart had stood in the road, and the police had not objected, although no carts are allowed to stand in the streets. Overwhelming evidence was brought to prove there was really no obstruction, and yet all the fifteen were convicted, and fined 1s. each and costs. By an ingenious manipulation of the summonses, Mr. Woodall was convicted on two counts, involving double fine, &c.

As the Chairman refused to let the defendants go to gaol, and many of them were poor men, lately converted, Mr. Woodall paid the fines of all but himself, and, feeling that liberty of speech is at stake, he is desirous of appealing to the Court of Queen's Bench. The magistrates have virtually refused a case, but it is felt a mandamus ought to be applied for. Mr. Woodall for thirty years has been a voluntary worker for the moral and social elevation of the people (after business hours and on Sundays), and has preached hundreds of times in the streets. If any of the Lord's stewards feel inclined to help to pay the expenses and to prosecute the appeal, subscriptions may be sent to John Whitridge Woodall, 7, Mardot-head, Shrewsbury, or to the office of this paper.

Sailors in Sweden.—Will your readers help to the opening of a Home for Sailors in Halmstad, Sweden? There is a great need of monetary gifts, Bibles in the German and English languages. I should like to take out with me to the ships some suitable tracts for distribution. May I ask for your prayers?—Fr. Engelke, Halmstad, Sweden.

MR. MOODY'S SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

By Mrs. E. F. A. DRAKE.

WHO does not know of this enterprise of Mr. Moody, this school for homeless and unfortunate boys, away back among the hills of Northern Massachusetts? In quiet old Northfield Mr. Moody was born, less than half a century ago, but his interest in the beautiful village and all its belongings seems centuries old, for in it he has planted his Seminary for young ladies, which is broadening and blossoming wonderfully, like any well-developed plant; and just across the old Connecticut, in the town of Gill, is his younger child, the Mt. Hermon Boys' School.

Why, someone will ask, is another school needed in Massachusetts, the "State of schools"? Because there is not another like it in all the country. Because just such a school was needed to meet the wants of those for whom it was founded. Mr. Moody in his travels about the world saw this want; his heart was touched, and its desire has found expression in this beginning, about which we believe a great enterprise may grow.

We feel that we scarcely do it justice to call it a beginning, for it is already three years old. But its first years have been those of struggle for more perfect development, and it has hardly yet learned that it has feet upon which it can stand, and walk, and may some day run. Its board of trustees had laboured under many difficulties which have been met and conquered, and interested as they are in the work, we feel sure they will set it firmly on a hill of prosperity as high as the natural hill on which its buildings stand.

The history of its real beginning is full of interest, for it tells of the large-hearted donors who saw the need and the possibility, and whose hands threw down large gifts, and hearts sent up earnest prayers that the "might be" should become a reality.

Two large farms were bought, and the commodious farm-houses were made ready to receive the boys. In these two buildings, about thirty were given a home, and the school its existence. In September last, just before Mr. Moody's departure for Europe, five new brick buildings were dedicated, and are now filled with boys gathered from the North, East, South, and West. Nearly all nationalities are represented, and a more unfortunate, hopeful, bright, homeless, happy, fortunate lot of boys could hardly be found the whole world over, than these seventy-five lads, ranging in age from eight to sixteen. A few of them may have homes, and friends who support them here; but by far the greater number have no homes and few friends, save those who have been raised up to them through the school. Some come from homes broken up by the demon drink; others have been "picked up" in the streets of our larger cities; but all alike find a friend in the large-hearted founder of the school, whom they love and reverence as they would a father.

"No. 1" of the five houses is the English House. Why? Because here are housed, and mothered as well as may be, twelve orphaned English boys whom Mr. Moody received as a gift from Manchester and Liverpool. All, from the oldest to the smallest of their number, "Our Ben," as they call him, bid fair to make true Americans, while they do not forget Old England their "home."

What does Mr. Moody hope to make of these boys? He prays that they may come up under the fostering care of the school, to be "gap-men," standing between the clergy and the people, ready to fill any gaps where earnest workers for the Master are needed. The course of study has been planned to meet the wants of such a class of Christian workers, a thorough course in English, which may be supplemented by our higher schools should a more extended course be desired by any of the boys after finishing here.

The price, £20 per year, set for the board and tuition of each boy, is merely nominal, and does not now nearly cover the cost, but it is hoped that it will when the school is well established. Of the five new buildings erected, four are homes, the fifth being a common cook-house. The school-building now used is a small wooden structure erected when the school had its beginnings, and barely seats the boys now there, when closely packed, and affords poor accommodation for recitations. A larger school-house and chapel are greatly needed at once.

Are there not many friends of the cause who desire to be connected with so worthy a work, each of whom will stand behind one of the boys and be responsible for his support? This means pledging one's self for £20 a year for the boy, or giving outright £600, which purchases a scholarship. It is greatly desired that one hundred friends may be raised up who will give £20 each, for one hundred boys, that the support may be no longer a burden resting upon a few, but that the burden and blessing alike may be shared by the many.

At no time can the school be more perfectly endowed than now. Much is needed here, and many stewards of the Lord stand ready to give when the need is known, we feel certain. It is not an American school for Americans, but a school of the Lord and for all. All are invited to give; while America and England should give the most largely, for they have the larger number of representatives, whom it is most earnestly hoped and prayed may be representatives indeed.

A little Greek boy who drifted as a waif from his native land to California and then to Northfield, has had a home here for three years. He is now scarcely ten years old; and his name, Stephanos Harral-ambitis Rapley, seems a ponderous one for such a child. He is a black-eyed, active little fellow, and promises well. James Sangentisch is a Russian boy, and does his fatherland justice. Within the last few months four tall, black-haired, keen-eyed Indian boys have come to this school-house. They are older than the greater number of the boys, but seem happy in their surroundings.

Those who are at all acquainted with the opening of such a work need not be reminded of a library, museum of maps, globes, and those many other necessities that make successful the working of a school, and that open the eyes of the students to their needs and their ability to acquire. The school needs many friends, and more means to lift it up to the standard already raised for it.

Prayer for Sabbath Observance.

THE Sabbath Observance Prayer Mission Society has issued an invitation to a Sixth General Union for Prayer for the entire sanctification of the Sabbath-day, from April 13 to 20, 1884.

The following subjects for prayer are suggested:—1. That Christians of every land may take into more serious consideration than ever what is to be done to remove those public forms of Sabbath profanation which have long existed, as also to resist those that are attempted to be introduced. 2. That every facility may be afforded in families, for the servants as well as themselves, attending public worship on the Lord's Day, and that servants may rightly employ the opportunity thus afforded of seeking the Lord. 3. That all issues of newspapers on the Lord's Day may cease. 4 That Christians may consecrate the entire day to their own spiritual edification, and to the promotion of the highest good of others.

The invitation is publish d by Nisbet & Co. Copies, at 6d. per 100 (by post 8d.), may be ordered through any bookseller.

THE ENGLISH SUNDAY CLOSING BILL.—The debate on the second reading of this measure stands adjourned till Thursday, the 24th inst. It is hoped that a large number of numerously signed petitions may be sent for presentation on April 22 and up to the end of the month, and, if not ready before, during the first week of May. May we request those who have not written to their representatives kindly to do so, and beg of them to be in their places on the 24th and support the Bill. We would again ask for earnest prayer that notwithstanding all efforts to the contrary the Bill may be passed this session of Parliament.—Yours truly, Edward Whitwell,

Stafford-chambers, Manchester. Hon. Sec.

THEORIES OF THE ATONEMENT.*

TO those who wish to be acquainted with the various theories which have been from time to time put forth to explain the nature of the Atonement, the little book referred to at the foot of the column will afford most valuable help. The different views it deals with are concisely, and—what they are not always by their authors—clearly stated. The notes contain references to the passages in the various writers on which the author's summary of their views is founded, and it would be difficult to find compressed into a small compass so much information upon a controversy which can hardly be neglected in the present day, especially by those who are teachers.

The doctrine of the Atonement, and the controversy that has arisen on the subject, are, however, two different things which should not be confounded. For the one, the Christian who is wise will go to the Word of God and to that alone, seeking with prayer for the Holy Spirit's guidance to be taught therefrom the truth of God. For the other, one must have recourse to the writings of men, but it will not a little help to confirm the Christian in the truth of what he has gathered from the Word of God, to find that the same view substantially has been held in all ages by those who give evidence of having been taught of God, i.e., of having been convinced of sin and led to fly for refuge to Christ as the Saviour of sinners. Those, and alas! their name is legion, who approach the subject without this essential qualification for understanding it, may theorise to the utmost extent of human ingenuity; those only who know the plague of their own hearts can rightly understand the remedy which God has provided. It is the lack of this knowledge of sin which lies at the root of so many of the objections to the doctrine of the Atonement made in the present day by earnest, thoughtful men, who approach the subject rather in the spirit of the theoretical questioner, "Lord, are there few that be saved?" than that of the practical inquirer, "What must I do to be saved?"

These two questions, we know, received very different answers. To the theorist our Lord gives a practical reply: "Strive to enter in at the strait gate," but does not gratify the mere curiosity involved in the question propounded. To the practical inquirer the Apostle gives a direct answer, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved," and adds the information, not asked for, that the same way of salvation was available for his house. The first got less than he asked for, but what he got was what he needed to know—the intensely practical nature of the subject on which he was theorising. The other got more than he asked for; he asked only for himself, but salvation was set before him for his house also; and as his question was a practical one, so was his reception of the answer, for that very night "he rejoiced, believing in God with all his house."

May we not learn from this that the mere theorist on the subject of the Atonement will often go empty away, while the anxious soul will have cause to rejoice in the truth of Psalm cvii. 9, "He satisfieth the longing soul and filleth the hungry soul with goodness."

But while Mr. Lias gives much valuable information to his readers as to what the various theories of the Atonement are, he is by no means himself a satisfactory teacher on this all-important point. In fact, it would appear from his preface that the object of his lectures is to refute the notion that what has generally been accepted on the subject by evangelical teachers is of necessity to be believed. In his preface he thus speaks: "A certain theory of Atonement, which, though by no means excluded by the language of Scripture, is not laid down in Scripture itself, has been insisted upon as the very keystone of the Christian faith. The rejection of this theory has frequently been regarded both by supporters and opponents of Christianity as the rejection of revealed religion. The object of these lectures is to show that there is no ground whatever for such a supposition; that the theory in question was not propounded by the first preachers of the Gospel, nor by their successors for the next fifteen hundred years, and that it is not accepted by the vast majority of Christians of our own time. Consequently, a man may be a very good Christian without believing it, and a very serious hindrance in the way of belief is thus removed."

If Mr. Lias could make good his assertion that this theory "was not propounded by the first preachers of the Gospel" he would have gained his point, but in this we think he fails. He explains—we would almost say explains away—the many passages which speak of Christ dying for the ungodly, for sinners, &c., as if they conveyed no thought of vicarious endurance of punishment, or of satisfaction to the justice of God on account of sin; whereas it is undeniable that this is the thought which they naturally suggest, as a quotation which Mr. Lias makes from Dr. Pusey's writings well puts it: "The doctrine that Christ made amends to the justice of God by taking our place is plainly contained in every place of Scripture which speaks of the vicariousness of his death, or our redemption by his blood."

Of all the views on the subject of the Atonement that Mr. Lias passes in review, the one which seems to find most favour in his eyes is that propounded by the late Dr. M'Leod Campbell, of the main features of which he gives the following concise summary: Christ "presented on behalf of all mankind as their representative a full and sufficient acknowledgment of their guilt; a full and sufficient repentance for having committed it. His sorrows were no penal infliction of God's wrath, but the simple result of his full realisation of the position in which those for whom He pleaded, and with whom He was identified, had placed themselves by their transgression. His death was the Amen of Humanity to the just and righteous sentence, 'the wages of sin is death.'"

From this we see at a glance that substitutionary repentance, instead of substitutionary punishment, lies at the root of Dr. McLeod Campbell's conception of the Atonement; and so are enabled at once to detect its error by calling to mind that Scripture describes repentance as our part, not Christ's, in God's way of Salvation; whereas punishment is distinctly that accorded to Him, if at least such words as those of Isaiah liii. 5 are to be allowed to have any meaning: "He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon Him, and with his stripes we are healed."

It may seem strange how any who reject the judicial view of Christ's substitutional death can face such a passage as that just quoted. Mr. Lias seems to feel its force, and gives a translation of his own of Isaiah liii. 4—7, not much differing from that of our version, except that he puts "by our transgressions . . . by our iniquities" in place of "for." But this really tells against his view, for whilst we have in the New Testament many passages that explicitly teach that Christ died for our sins, we have here, according to his emendation (which the Hebrew will admit), the even stronger statement that these sins were the cause of his sufferings and death. The change is very similar to that which should be extended to Rom. iv. 25, where "He was delivered for our offences" might be more literally translated "on account of our offences." But this only confirms the substitutional character of the great transaction on Calvary, and proves—what Mr. Lias seeks to disprove—that the sins for which Christ died were sins laid on Him as on a substitute, and that by the penal infliction which He in infinite love and mercy underwent, the full intensity of which we can little understand, He did indeed "put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself."

One well-known feature of the "school of thought" to which Mr. Lias seems to belong, appears in his endeavour to depreciate the value of the death of Christ as compared with his incarnation: "It was reserved for Protestant theology (he says) to make the death of Christ, rather than his incarnation, the keystone of the Gospel system." But what does Protestant theology—to its honour be it spoken—do in this matter but bring out to light what had long been hidden in the darkness of the middle ages, the teaching of Holy Scripture? When St. Paul determines not to know at Corinth anything "but Jesus Christ, and Him crucified," he certainly seems to make the Cross "the keystone of the Gospel system." And in writing to the same Corinthian Church, when reminding them of what he had preached, he gives a summary (1 Cor. xv. 5), in which there is no mention of the incarnation at all, but in which the death and resurrection of the Lord Jesus are presented as indubitably "the keystone of the Gospel system." St. Peter, too, connects redemption not with the incarnation, but with the precious blood of Christ; but indeed this is so plainly the teaching of the New Testament that one can only wonder how any Christian teacher can imagine it to be otherwise. It would appear, however, that Mr. Lias has in his mind that strange sacramentarian notion—which forms a link between High Church and Broad Church theology—of Christ's humanity becoming ours in some mysterious way by sacramental communication, for after referring to John vi. 53, which speaks of eating Christ's flesh and drinking his blood, he says, "That is to say, by a mystical and spiritual process, of which faith is an essential element, the flesh of the Paschal Lamb, the very humanity of the incarnate Lord, is to pass into us and become ours."

If it be true that the incarnation has supplied the food which sacramentalism ministers to the soul, we can well understand why the value of the cross must be depreciated in order that the sacramental system may be exalted; but this is not the teaching of Scripture, nor is it that of the sacraments themselves. Baptism points to the death and resurrection of Christ, not to the incarnation; and St. Paul affirms expressly: "As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup ye do show [not the incarnation, but] the Lord's death till He come." Temperance Notes.

Mr. George Blaiklock has, during the past week, visited and addressed meetings in the Isle of Wight.

Mr. W. Forbes gave addresses last week at Maidstone and Chatham, and in different districts of the metropolis. On Good Friday he begins a series of addresses at Hull, Yorkshire.

"The Gospel Temperance Monthly" is the new title given to the organ of the Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance Mission. It is sent free to all subscribers to the Mission, or may be had at Hoxton Hall or of Partridge & Co.

Sunday Closing in Ireland.—In a pamphlet entitled "A Social Experiment," Mr. T. W. Russell has adduced statistics from Parliamentary returns, showing that, during the five years in which the Act has been in force in Ireland as compared with the five years previous, the number of Sunday arrests for drunkenness, in the rural parts, have been reduced 53 per cent. In the five towns where Sunday closing has not been carried out, but where the hours of sale have been shortened, the reduction has not been more than 37 per cent. We heartily commend the perusal of this conclusive paper to all Temperance reformers. It is published by the Irish Association for Prevention of Intemperance, Eustace Buildings, Dublin.

Messrs. Glover and Booth in Melbourne.—A Gospel Mission by these gentlemen was opened in Melbourne on February 19, in the Exhibition Hall. Some 5000 persons were present, all classes of the community being represented. In the course of his speech Mr. R. T. Booth referred to the successful Missions he and his companion had just held at Hobart Town and Launceston. In the former place 4000 pledges had been taken, the pledgers including the Prime Minister of Tasmania, several lawyers and doctors, and one "landlady," who shut up her public-house. At this opening meeting in Melbourne 700 persons signed the pledge. A correspondent, writing on Feb. 27, reports an attendance of nearly 6000 every night, 11,100 having taken the Blue Ribbon and 4440 the pledge up to that date.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For great blessing on a Gospel Mission at Broadwater.

PRAYER.—For blessing on special services for young men, held near Dublin.——For blessing upon a conversational Bible-class.——For much blessing on the distribution of Mr. Moody's addresses in a small country town.——For an outpouring of the Spirit on evangelistic meetings to be held at Stornoway, N.B., by Rev. G. Campbell. Also for blessing during the fishing season there, especially on the work among the women.—For some Christian soldiers lately moved to Nowshera, India, where they have no help in the way of Christian privileges.——For an officer and his wife in the Punjab, India, that the Lord may open doors of usefulness to them.——For meetings in connection with the Kirkwall Young Mens' Christian and Evangelistic Association, commencing on April 13.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

A BUDDHIST PLACE OF WORSHIP

is about to be opened in Paris. A rich English lady undertakes the responsibility. She has secured land, an architect, and a colossal statute of Buddha. This is not the first time that this worship has been celebrated in Paris. During the last Universal Exhibition there some Hindoo Rajahs sought authority to celebrate their worship, when M. Bardoux, not content with obtaining the signature of the President of the Republic, gave them, out of the private funds of the Exhibition, a superb statue of Buddha, which is now in the Louvre.—Le Christianisme au XIXe. Siècle.

THE CEVENNES.

La Chambre Haute reports some revivals in the various towns and villages of the Cevennes during the month of February. The churches rejoice greatly in this outpouring of the Holy Spirit, through which the devotion of many Christians has been increased, and also in the conviction and apparent conversion of many who have not been in the habit of attending any religious meetings. "After-meetings" are becoming a regular feature of French evangelistic work. New Gospel Halls in connection with Mr. McAll's work have just been opened at Dijon, Sotteville-les-Rouen, and Melun.

MISSION INTERIEURE.

The Paris Committee of this Mission lately held a public meeting at which some encouraging results of the visits made by the agents to many churches and places were given. The committee has five conférenciers at its service, M.M. Fourneau, Réveilland, Hirsch, Bertrand, and G. Meyer, besides many pastors who help as opportunity is given. These visits of the evangelists are much appreciated by both faithful pastors and people. The evangelists receive a hearty welcome even in Roman Catholic districts, though sometimes they meet with opposition. But in general the French authorities are very willing to allow the meetings, some even going so far as to announce them on white placards (official paper).—Le Christianisme.

SOCIAL PURITY.—Mr. Henry Varley did good and useful work during the month of March, giving lectures on Purity, to soldiers, in the Soldiers' Institutes at Woolwich and Chatham. There was not a discordant voice at either place, Mr. Varley's reception being a most hearty one. It seems a strange anomaly that men who can listen with interest and sympathy to lectures on the obligations and advantages of chastity, should be made the excuse for the retention of Acts based upon the degrading doctrine of the necessity of vice. He had also lectured in the Congregational Church, Slough, to probably the largest audience of men ever seen in that town; to about 1000 men in the Town Hall, Holborn, London; then at Luton, on two nights, in the Plait Hall; and again to a large audience at Canterbury, and on two evenings in the large Drill Hall at Derby; on the 27th to civilians, at Chatham, and the next evening at the adjoining town of New Brompton.—Sentinel.—Mr. A. S. Dyer has delivered addresses on the subject during the past week at Bridgewater, Truro, and Penzance. The attendances have been large, and at the close of each meeting resolutions have been carried demanding the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts.

Notices of Books, &c.

THE DISCIPLESHIP OF LOVE. Elliot Stock. This book contains a series of sermons delivered during Lent and Easter last year. They are full of comforting and stimulating thoughts, which at this season of the year may be found particularly acceptable.

A fresh memento of the late lamented Dr. Punshon comes to us in the form of a lecture by that renowned orator, entitled, "WESLEY AND HIS TIMES." It is characterised by all the lecturer's well-known power, and is published by Woolmer, 2, Castle-street, City-road. 4d.

THE PRESENT DAY TRACT SERIES of the Religious Book Society continues to grow in the number and value of its publications. Among its latest issues are essays on THE UNITY OF THE CHARACTER OF THE CHRIST OF THE GOSPELS, by Prebendary Row, and on THE VITALITY OF THE BIBLE, by Dr. Blaikie, both worthy of highest commendation.

JOHN WESLEY, HIS LIFE AND WORK. By MATTHAW LELIEVRE. T. Woolmer. 1s. The author has been awarded the prize by the French Methodist Conference for the best Life of Wesley, no standard life of that eminent divine having before been publishedby that body. It is a specially interesting volume, and will be read with pleasure and profit by all lovers of good men. We commend it heartily.

SCRIPTURE VERITIES: GERMS OF THOUGHT ON BIBLICAL SUBJECTS. By Rev. D. PLEDGE. Elliot Stock. 2s. 6d. The author gives in a concise and readable form his views on the leading truths of revelation. Many thoughts are expressed of a suggestive and helpful kind, and the book is calculated to be of service to many who have neither time nor ability to study more elaborate treatises on such themes. It is decidedly evangelical in tone.

HEALTH LECTURES FOR THE PEOPLE. Macniven & Wallace. This, the fourth series of popular lectures published by the Edinburgh Heal h Society, forms a volume admirably adapted to promote the physical and social well-being of our population. The lecturers are men of great eminence in the medical profession, and the subjects chosen of first-rate importance, among them being "The growth and development of a child in body and mind," "Physical exercise: its use and abuse," and "The difficulties of health reformers."

We have received from Messrs. Cassell & Co. Part I. of their GREAT INDUSTRIES OF GREAT BRITAIN, to be completed in thirty parts, price 7d. each, and Part I. of their TECHNICAL EDUCATOR, to be completed in twenty-six parts, price 6d. each. Both these works promise to be of great service and value to the general community. They are profusely illustrated, and the authors employed are experts, well able to treat on their respective themes with completeness and accuracy. The latter book will be a great boon to working men and youths who desire to excel in the various pursuits they are called to follow, while the former is replete with interest to all classes of readers.

ALFRED SAKER, A BIOGRAPHY. By E. B. UNDERHILL, LL.D. Alexander & Shepheard. 2s. 6d. The subject of this memoir was a true missionary after the apostolic school, and must ever stand high on the roll of devoted and heroic servants of Christ. He was a man "full of faith and of the Holy Ghost," simple and tender as a child, yet great and noble in all that constitutes Christian manliness and strength of character. No more fitting biographer could have been found than Dr. Underhill, whose personal knowledge of Mr. Saker and his work all through his career combines, with refined skill as an author, to make his book one of special delight and instruction to the reader. As a study for young men, and as an incentive to earnestness in the work of Christ, this biography is pre-eminently worthy of wide circulation.

THE FOURFOLD LIFE: ITS ANTECEDENTS AND CONSEQUENCES. By H. SINCLAIR PATERSON, M.D. J. F. Shaw & Co. Dr. Paterson is too well known as a Christian polemic and defender of the faith to need commendation from us, but of this production of his pen we cannot speak too highly. The ground it covers has been frequently trodden, but no sameness or mere repetition is to be found in its pages. The great facts of our Lord's life, death, and resurrection are treated with a freshness and skill which betoken a master mind as well as a fervent spirit of faith and love. After reading this volume we turn to the Gospel records with quickened perception of their divine fulness and deepened confidence in their veracity. Such books are of surpassing value in these days of sceptical and irreverent thought.

THE NATIONAL LEAGUE JOURNAL and THE SENTINEL for April (1d. each, Dyer Brothers) give a good idea of the increasing interest felt throughout the country on the subject of the State Regulation of Vice.

GEMS FROM THE BIBLE. By E. P. Nisbet & Co. The object of these selections is to "furnish district visitors and others with portions suitable for reading to the afflicted and infirm, thus obviating the necessity of searching for such passages in the sick room." It may be a convenience, but we question whether visitors ought not rather to equip themselves fully before starting on these errands of mercy.

LOVING MESSAGES, a sequel to "Heart Lessons." By LOUISA CLAYTON. Religious Tract Society. This is a well-written book and worthy of its title; it is especially adapted for mothers' meetings. The subjects are well chosen, the first nine chapters being addresses on those women "who each had a talk face to face with the Lord Jesus." The illustrations are always to the point and a suitable prayer is given on each subject.

JOHN WICLIFFE, THE MORNING STAR OF THE REFORMATION. By DAVID G. DEANE. Partridge & Co. Public attention will be drawn to the life and times of this great Reformer during the current year, the 500th anniversary of his death. This little volume is well written, full of information, and pleasingly illustrated, and gives in clear and concise form a record of the principal events of a career which was laden with great issues for our own country and the world at large.

OUR GOLDEN KEY: A narrative of facts from "Outcast London." By Lady HOPE. Seeley, Jackson & Halliday. The brief extract we gave from this book in our last issue does not, of course, fairly represent the scope of its contents as described in the subsidiary title. So much has been said and written about the deplorable condition of the London masses that we are in danger of overlooking the vast amount of genuine work that has been done. This veritable record of Gospel triumphs, from Lady Hope's capable and graphic pen, will at once awaken to thankfulness and stimulate to redoubled effort. In telling something of what has been accomplished by an agent of the City Mission in one of the worst districts, her ladyship has rendered a fitting tribute to an agency that deserves the heartiest support.

STORMS AND SUNSHINE OF A SOLDIER'S LIFE. 2 vols. 15s. David Douglas, Edinburgh. This work records the career of Lieut.-General Colin Mackenzie, who belonged to one of the noblest families in Scotland, and died in 1881 at the age of seventy-four. Written from a soldier's point of view and in strong sympathy with the hero, it naturally dwells largely upon the deeds of "glory" and "valour" which characterise military service. Most of the General's life was spent in India. From his first entry into the army, his fearless courage won the respect and admiration of his fellow-officers and gained for him rapid promotion. Still he thirsted not for "a bubble reputation at the cannon's mouth." More than once did he hesitate, from feelings of pity and sorrow, in the execution of his duty. He was always religiously inclined, but after his conversion at the age of thirty, his Christian character was very clearly seen. His life abounded in adventure and dangers, and this account of it will be read with the deepest interest.

THE ENGLISHMAN'S BIBLE. By THOMAS NEWBERRY. Hodder & Stoughton. 10s. We are glad to see this new and cheaper edition of a very valuable work, which no Bible student who can obtain it should be without. Its object is to put the English reader as far as possible in possession of the advantages of a Hebrew and Greek scholar, and it proves almost a royal road to a knowledge of the original texts of Scripture. The articles, numbers, emphatic pronouns, tenses, particles and prepositions, correct and uniform renderings, together with divine titles, are all indicated by the use of small capitals, and other marks and signs employed by the editor. A mass of other information is also given, as, for instance, the meaning of proper names, chronological and parallel references, the whole Bible being arranged in paragraph form, and the subject of each paragraph given in the margin. The labour expended upon the production of the work must have been immense, but the result attained amply compensates for all the toil, if regard is had to the benefit conferred upon the numerous readers of the Word of God who are unable to command a personal knowledge of the original languages of the sacred writers. An indexed atlas is appended to the volume, which is got up in a most complete and elegant manner as to its typography and general arrangement.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. John Harris has conducted sixteen days' successful services at Pedlington, Thame, Oxon.

Broadwater.—A very successful seven days' Mission has been held here by Major Graves, and much blessing has resulted.

Glasgow.—The United Evangelistic Association of this city has completed its eleventh year of work. At one of the noon prayer-meetings last week thanksgiving was offered for the blessing given, and for the means supplied.

Dr. Somerville in Derry.—During the past week the Rev. Dr. Somerville, of Glasgow, has conducted evangelistic meetings in Derry with much acceptance and success. The week-day meetings have been held in the Union Hall, which has been occupied daily by large audiences. The local ministers are taking a prominent part in the services.

Ilfracombe.—A sixteen days' Mission has been held in this place by Mr. Charles Inglis. The interest in the meetings has been great, so much so that four meetings have been held on the Sunday, and two each week-day. A good many have professed conversion, and Christians of all denominations have received much blessing in the Bible-lectures.

The Christian Mission, Greenock.—Special meetings have been held here for the last month, conducted by Messrs. Smith and McNab. The Lord has been wondrously saving souls at these meetings. These brethren are open for engagements in churches or halls. Applications to Mr. Walter Fisher, Christian Mission, West Burn-square, Greenock, N.B.

Mr. Opie Rodway.—The visit of this evangelist to Caerwent and Caldecot has been attended with much blessing. At the former place great good has been done. The Church of Christ has been remarkably quickened, and very many precious souls have been converted. The Baptist chapel at Caerwent, where the services were conducted, was far too small for the many who were anxious to hear the Word of Life, crowds having to leave, failing to get into the chapel. Some of the oldest members of the Church tell me they never remember such services anywhere before. On saint and sinner the services have made such deep impressions that we believe Mr. Rodway's visit will be long and gratefully remembered. At Caldecot the services were good, and a few souls were saved, but the Divine influence was not so strongly felt here as at Caerwent. S. H. I.

Caerwent.

The meetings will be continued on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, in the same week, at 3 and 8 p.m., by Dr. Pentecost and Mr. Stebbins. The North London Choir will assist at all the Mildmay meetings.

Christian Work at New Cross.—Some three or four years since I commenced the organisation of a Free Church, and have succeeded. The cost for accommodating a building formerly a workshop was so great that, although I got a little help, I am still liable for about £300. If this sum were now contributed, the work would be greatly assisted. There is a church and a Sunday-school, both in a promising state. The undertaking was entered upon, and has still been carried on, with a view of supplying a pure form of public worship on Church of England lines, and a faithful testimony to Protestant principles. Any contributions that may be sent to me I shall thankfully receive.—W. Glenny-Crory, Minister, Free Church of England, Hatcham-park-road, New Cross, S.E.

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

A "HOPELESS CASE" of CONSUMPTION.—Mr. EDWD. WAINSCOTT, of HEREFORD.

This patient, now living at 20, Wye-street, Hereford, applied to me in July last. All the usual symptoms of confirmed Phthisis were present; in addition, blood was brought up in serious quantity, and swelling of the feet had commenced. He continued the use of my medicines, with liniment, &c., (as I believe) without intermission for four months. I received a letter from him in November as follows:—

"Dear Sir,—I am glad to say I have now been at my employment three weeks. Before I applied to you I was attended by four physicians. I was blistered, poulticed, and took a large quantity of medicine. They said, 'It was a hopeless case—that I was in deep Consumption, that my left lung was entirely gone and my right greatly affected.' I was recommended to you by a young man whose case had been similar to my own. At that time I was so thin that people did not know me. When they came to see me they said, 'Ah! it won't be long before he is gone.' But, praise God! I have risen again. Dear Doctor, you will see a case like mine, No. xxxvii. in your book, only that I think mine was worse. I hope that you will make this known."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

Or, The Profit and Pleasure of Bible Study.

By GEORGE F. PENTECOST, M.A.

With Introductions by Rev. Joseph Cook and Rev. J. H. Vincent, D.D.

"The Author is well known in this country, as well as in America, as an able and successful evangelist and preacher. The book is the well-arranged product of a fresh and vigorous mind; steeped in biblical thought and spirit: and is fitted in no ordinary measure to give clear views of the scope and purpose of the Bible; to confirm faith in its Divine origin and authority; and to guide to such a use of it as may build up the reader, both in holiness and comfort, and in zeal and usefulness, unto Eternal Life. While admirably fitted for young converts, no Christian can read it without both stimulus and profit."—The Outlook, Feb. 1, 1884.

FUNCTIONAL ACTION OF MAGNETISM.

Although Electricity is known to produce physiological effects, there are some points of difference between Galvanic and Magnetic Electricity. "Galvanism develops itself in concentrated currents, and is produced from metals by exciting liquids, and requires conducting wires and nerves to make it operative. Magnetism is that form which manifests itself in a perpetual aura or atmosphere around the magnets discharging it, and approaches more nearly to a perpetual self-sustained influence than any other force. Magnetism is, at any rate, a perpetual property of the substance discharging it. Galvanic Electricity, from its power of concentration to a given point, has a powerful effect in certain acute disorders, in relieving pain by counter irritation, in dissolving gouty deposits and tumours, and in depolarising over-strained nervous centres. Magnetic Electricity is diffusive, and acts by waking up or exciting to greater vigour the recuperative forces already in the body, increasing the circulation of the blood, and rendering it capable of building up tissue, and effectually repairing the mischief because it can so directly operate upon the cause.

From Mr. W. T. MARK, 76, Partridge-road, Roath, Cardiff.

"December 20, 1883.

"I have now been under your treatment seven months for functional derangement and palpitation of the heart, especially after meals, and violent throbbing by night. I am very thankful to say that it has had the desired effect in regulating the heart's action. The good work has been going on slowly but surely, so that now, while I am writing, I hardly know I have a heart, the action is so normal. The nocturnal throbbing is vanishing almost like darkness before the day-dawn.

"Supposed incurable heart disease is so prevalent that I think sufferers should know that there is a 'balm in Gilead,' and I am glad to give my name with this statement of experience for any use you think well to make of it, and the more so because it has been in no way solicited."

Concurrent with the above, will be found the following remarks of a gentleman who wrote me a short time since:—

"September 20, 1883.

"I am thankful to say your treatment has been of great service to me. Before I adopted it my heart (pulse) gave twelve good beats, and then an apparent miss; now, however, my pulse is plumper and regular."

Having spent many years of patient, laborious, and continued study in adapting his treatment to some of the most obscure and intractable affections, Mr. Garratt now claims, as the result of his professional career, to have attained a success unparalleled in the healing art. Those who desire further information on his method of treatment should peruse his essays, explaining the radical effect of Magnetism upon the human organism in health and disease. It is Mr. Garratt's careful study to adapt the remedy to the requirements of each case—a practice based upon the principles laid down in his published essays, which can be obtained post free on application. He will always be happy to confer with any scientific or medical gentlemen, either personally or by letter, upon any phase of the subject, or any ease for treatment, and will send a private list of 850 names as referees to any address.—B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

SELF-SUPPORTING MISSIONS.

THE recent Conference on Missions held at Pastor F. White's Powis Hall, and reported at some length in our columns, was marked by far more than a passing interest and importance. The addresses were generally of a most practical and stimulating character. Those of Mr. and Mrs. Guinness were so wide in their grasp of truth, and so eminently suggestive, that we are constrained to call further attention to them.

That of Mrs. Guinness, on "Self-supporting Missions," was first in order, and now claims our thought. The change which was spoken of as having come over men's minds during the last fifty years in reference to personal and unofficial effort to make known the Gospel is undoubtedly great, and much to be rejoiced in. Its application to the work of Christ at home is increasingly wide and graciously productive of beneficent results. Unpaid spontaneous service is being rendered in our midst on every side, and as a consequence fields are worked and souls are won which would otherwise be entirely neglected.

Let us at once say that the special work of the pastorate is not in question. We recognise it as clearly asserted in the New Testament and worthy of honour and warmest sympathy wherever it is faithfully sustained. But wholly apart from this point lies the further and equally important one of the necessity for every soul indwelt by the Spirit of Christ using the utmost endeavour to make known in every place the savour of his Name. If the world is to be evangelised, the work must not be left to the regular ministry, or to salaried workers, however zealous, efficient, and worthy they may be.

The facts referred to by Mrs. Guinness to prove the need for workers of a class and on a scale hitherto unknown, demand serious reflection. Nine-tenths of the world is unevangelised. Some 3000 Protestant missionaries represent the concern of the many millions of professing Christians in England and America for the vast mass of mankind at present sitting in darkness and the shadow of death; while out of all the wealth lodged in the hands of the Churches a million and a half of money is the extent of liberality annually bestowed on the claims of a perishing world.

In the face of all this we have tens of thousands in England alone who have capacity, energy, and opportunity, if only they felt the responsibility, to go forth and proclaim the salvation of God. Spheres long closed to Christian effort are now open, and calling in vain for workers, while in our midst are multitudes possessed of every facility to answer the call, but remaining inactive, and indulging themselves in mute unconcern and selfish ease. To a very large extent this is due to the mistaken ideas which obtain as to the requirements for Mission work abroad. We can but think great mistakes have been made by some in setting up loftier standards than are necessary in this respect, By all means consecrate the best we have to the service of Christ, but it is not the highly cultured alone who can be efficient as soul-winners. Nay, more often than not, those whose common sense and native tact combined with faith in God, were their chief equipment, have been the most signally owned in this direction. Not by wisdom of words or by splendid gifts and attainments have the noblest successes been won in the great harvest field of the world, but rather by plain unvarnished declaration of the Gospel, accompanied by the demonstration of the Spirit and of power.

But there is room for all. We have cultured men and women in our churches who could easily lay their ten talents on the altar of Christ, and constrained by a Saviour's love go forthwith and fill positions requiring consecrated skill. We have others who, apart from special gifts of such a kind, are admirably fitted to act as pioneers in the glorious work of proclaiming the Saviour of sinners to a benighted world.

Men of wealth and refinement travel far and wide for pleasure, for research, and for mercantile pursuits; why not also for the salvation of souls? Thousands emigrate mainly for the sake of change and wider scope for earthly gain; why should not thousands do so purely for the Master's sake, that his "way may be known upon earth, his saving health among all nations"? Is Mission work to be regarded merely as a means of livelihood for those who feel called to make it a profession, or is there not as deep, ay, and deeper need abroad for individual and unofficial action, than we have felt among ourselves?

The great point is to get the Church of God to realise the urgency of the world's need and to comprehend the imperativeness of the Saviour's claim upon all its energies, faculties, and opportunities. Have we aimed at securing this in our respective circles as ministers, parents, teachers, and friends?

Should not a crusade be vigorously undertaken against all apathy and indifference of feeling, and mere conventionalism and ecclesiasticism of practice in respect to this solemn matter? We are living in times and in the midst of circumstances of special concern, and we are bound to look directly to the great Head of the Church for intimation of his will, and to be ready to follow his call in any and every direction. Our preconceived plans and long cherished ideas may have been at fault from his point of view, or having served their purpose may require remodelling and re-construction.

The time has come when, in view of the speedy advent of our Lord, and in face of the rapidly accumulating forces of evil, we should arise, shake ourselves from the dust, and while sustaining with quickened ardour all old methods which have proved themselves effectual and accepted of God, further inquire what new plans of action and undeveloped resources yet remain to be employed.

This is not the business simply of our great institutions, as represented by their directors and committees, but of all who are disciples of Christ. A great work remains to be done, and but little time in all probability is left to do it in; and it is for each and all of us, independently of every other consideration, to ask what are we doing, and what can we possibly do, to accelerate the progress of the Gospel all over the world. We are too much bound down to routine plans of action, too ready to be content with things as they are. We need to be aroused to fresh zeal, and animated by renewed ardour. Come, sacred Spirit of our God, quicken all those who are Christ's with thy inspiring breath, until, as the Voice Divine is heard, saying, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" myriads are heard responding, with eager joy, "Here am I, send me."

Resurrection Life.

"He is risen." "Risen with Him."

A BRIGHT and radiant glory clings
Around the Easter morn,
That touches, as with angel wings,
The weary heart and worn.

Earth's gloom is lost in sunshine,
By the risen Saviour's side;
All brightness gathers brightness here,
Peace, peace flows far and wide.

And deep within our hearts to-day
Abiding sunlight glows;
We share the resurrection joy;
New life from Jesus flows.

For we, we too are dead—in Him—
To sin, and self, and strife;
His Cross for ever stands between Us and this earthly life.

And trustfully goes up to Him,
The spirit-prompted prayer:
May we each hour on earth we live,
Thy saving power declare.

Oh, may our heaven-born happiness,
To weary ones speak rest;
The sad and lonely hearts we reach,
Be comforted and blest.

May all whose lives we daily touch,
Feel Christ is passing by;
And, owning his sweet, saving power,
May lost ones be "brought nigh."

Medical Missions in Palestine.

JAFFA.

DEAR SIR,—I visited lately the Medical Mission Hospital and dispensary at Jaffa, conducted by Miss Mangan, and in connection with Miss Walker-Arnott's work. The Mission appears to be admirably conducted, and is doing every year more good to the people of that land, who, in spite of their wondrous privileges in the past, abide in such gross ignorance of the true Christian religion. There is a daily attendance of about fifty of the sick poor in the consulting-room, and the hospital beds are filled up with cases from among them. To both classes of patients the Gospel is unweariedly and faithfully presented by Miss Mangan, Miss Newton, and other devoted ladies connected with it.

The great need of this work, so necessary and so admirably conducted, is a proper building. The work is carried on at present in a native house, which has been altered and added to in an irregular way, but no amount of such "improving" will ever make it suitable. I think the living agency in the shape of Christian ladies by far the most important, and hope that many more at home who have the leisure and the means may be led to join this or similar work in Palestine.

NAZARETH.

Since visiting Jaffa I have seen the new Medical Mission Hospital and Mission House at Nazareth, over which Dr. Vartan presides. The hospital is not yet completed, but from an examination of the plans and the site, I can commend it most cordially. It is placed on a height above the town, has a good water supply, and every accessory needful to heal the sick. A surprising amount of ingenuity and forethought has been exercised by the doctor in the carrying out of his work, so that the new building will in its arrangements and accommodation stand in the first class of hospitals. About £4000 has been subscribed and about £1000 more is needed to finish and complete the structure. For the building and large plot of ground this is a very moderate expense.

Commending both these institutions to the liberality of Christian friends, I am, dear Sir, yours very faithfully,

BRING YOUR FRIENDS TO CHRIST.

By Mr. D. L. MOODY.

(Concluded from our last.)

NOW I come to the fourth class—the workers. These four men (Mark ii. 3) were real workers. They were worth more than a houseful of these Pharisees and doctors of the law who came merely to criticise and look on. I do not know who these four men were, but I have always had a great admiration for them. Perhaps one of them had been blind and the Lord had given him his sight. The other may have been lame from his birth; when the Master restored him to strength, he thought he would like to use it in bringing someone else to be healed. The third man may have been a cured leper, and he wished to help in getting some other afflicted one cured. Perhaps this palsied man was his next-door neighbour. The fourth man, it may be, had been deaf and dumb, and he thought he would employ his hearing and his speech in helping someone else. These four young converts said to themselves: "Let us bring our sick neighbour to Christ. It may be the palsied man said he had no faith in Christ himself. But these four friends told him how they had been cured and if the Master could heal them surely He could heal a palsied man.

Now it seems to me that nothing will wake up a man quicker than to have four persons after him in one day. People are sometimes afraid that they will entrench on each other's ground if more than one worker happens to call at the same house. For my part, I wish that every family had about forty invitations to each meeting. In the East-end I heard of a man, a non-churchgoer, who did not believe in the Bible or religious things. Some one who was distributing tracts asked him if he would go to the meetings. He got quite angry. No, he would not go; he did not believe in the thing at all; he would not be seen in such a crowd. A second man came along, not knowing that anyone had been before him, and asked if he would accept a ticket for the meetings. The man was still angry, and, as we would say in America, he "gave him a piece of his mind." He told him to keep his tickets. By-and-by a third man called and said, "Would you take a ticket for these meetings?" The man by this time had got thoroughly waked up, but yet he declined to receive the ticket. He went into a shop to buy some tobacco. The man in the shop put a ticket for the meetings into the packet; when the customer got home and opened it, lo and behold there was "a Moody and Sankey ticket"! He got so roused up that he went, not to our meeting, but to Mr. Archibald Brown's church. I do not know that he has come clean out, but I believe he is, at any rate, in a hopeful condition.

If one visit does not wake up a man whom you want to reach, send a second visitor after him; if that has no effect, send a third, and a fourth, and a fifth, and a sixth, and a seventh; go on in that way day after day. It is a great thing to save one man, to get him out of the pit, to have his feet set on a rock, and a new song put in his mouth. Nothing will rouse these men quicker than to have a number of churches after him. If you cannot bring him yourselves, get others to help you.

These four men found an obstacle in the way. The door of the house was blocked, and they could not get near the Master. They may have asked some of these philosophers to stand aside; but no, they would not do that. They would not disturb themselves about a sick man. Many people will not go into the kingdom of God themselves, and they will throw obstacles in the way of others. After trying probably for some time to get in, these four men began to devise another plan. If it had been some of us, most likely we would have got quite discouraged, and carried the man back to his home. But these men had got faith, and perseverance too. They were going to get their friend to Christ some way. If they cannot get him through the door, they will find a way through the roof! "Zeal without knowledge," people say. I would a good deal rather have that than knowledge without zeal. You can see them pulling and tugging away at the burden. If you have ever tried to carry a wounded man up a flight of stairs you will know it is not an easy matter. These four men were not to be defeated, and at last he is up there on the roof.

Now, the question was, "How can we get him down?" They began to tear up the tiling. I can see those wise men looking up and saying to one another, "This is a strange performance; we have never seen anything like this in the temple or in any synagogue we were ever in. It is altogether out of the regular order. These men must be carried away with fanaticism. Why, they have made a hole large enough to let a man through. Suppose a sudden shower were to come, it would spoil the house."

But these four workers were terribly in earnest. They let the bier, on which the man was lying, down into the room. They laid their friend right at the feet of Jesus Christ; a good place to lay him, was it not? Perhaps some of you have a sceptical son or an unbelieving husband, or some other member of your family, that scoffs at the Bible and sneers at Christianity. Lay them at the feet of Jesus, and He will honour your faith. "When He saw their faith," I suppose these men were looking right down to see what was about to take place. Christ looked at them, and when He saw their faith He said to the palsied man, "Son, be of good cheer; thy sins are forgiven thee." That was more than they expected; they only thought of his body being made whole. So let us bring our friends to Jesus, and most probably we shall get more than we expect. The Lord met this man's deepest need first. Perhaps his sins had brought on the palsy, so the Lord forgave the man's sin first of all.

The wise men began to reason within themselves: "Who is this that forgiveth sins?" The Master could read their thoughts as easily as we can read a book. "Is it easier to say, 'Thy sins be forgiven thee,' or 'Rise up and walk'? But that ye may know that the Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins"—He said unto the sick of the palsy—"I say unto thee, arise, take up thy bed and go unto thine house." The man leaped to his feet, made whole. He rolled up the old bed, swung it across his shoulders, and went to his house. Depend upon it these philosophers who would not make way in order to let him in, stood aside pretty quick to let him go out. No need for him to go out by way of the roof; he went out by the door.

Dear friends, let us have faith for those we bring to Jesus. Let us believe for them if they will not believe for themselves. It may be there are those here who do not believe in the Bible or in the Gospel of the Son of God. Let us bring them to Christ in the arms of our faith. He is unchangeable—"the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." Let us look for great things. Let us expect the dead to be raised, the harlots reclaimed, the drunkards saved, and the devils cast out. I believe men are possessed of evil spirits now, just as much as when the Son of God was on earth. We want to bring them right to the Lord Jesus Christ that He may heal and save them. Let this cursed unbelief be swept out of the way, and let us come to God as one man, looking for and expecting signs and wonders to be done in the name of Jesus. He can perform miracles to-day, and He will if we ask Him to fulfil his promises. "He is able to save to the uttermost."

If there is an unsaved man here God has the power to save him from his sins to-day. If you want to be converted, come right to the Master as did the leper of old. He said, "Lord, if Thou wilt Thou canst make me clean." Christ honoured his faith, and said, "I will; be thou clean." Notice—the man put the "if" in the right place. "If Thou wilt." He did not doubt the power of the Son of God. The father who brought his son to Christ said, "If Thou canst, have compassion upon him." The Lord straightened out his theology then and there. "If thou canst believe." Mother, can you believe for your boy? If you can, the Lord will speak the word, and it shall be done. It will be a good thing for us to get right down at the feet of the Master as the poor woman who went to Elisha and told him of her dead child. He asked his servant to take his staff and lay it upon the dead child. But the mother would not leave the prophet. He wanted her to go with the servant, but she would not be satisfied with the prophet's staff, or even with his servant; she wanted the master himself. So Elisha went with her; it was a good thing he did, for the servant could not raise the child.

We want to get beyond the staff and beyond the servant, right to the heart of the Master Himself. Let us bring our palsied friends to Him. It is said of Christ that in one place He could not do many mighty things there because of their unbelief. Let us ask Him to take away from us this cursed unbelief, that hinders the blessing from coming down, and prevents those who are sick of the palsy of sin from being saved.

S. Norwood Coffee Palace & Gospel Hall.

DEAR SIR,—During last summer I obtained possession (on lease) of what had formerly been one of the largest public-houses in this neighbourhood—situated at the Norwood Junction Railway Station—and had it converted into a Coffee Palace. At the same time I purchased the freehold of a hall adjoining, capable of seating 300 persons. By opening a door between the coffee palace and the hall the two properties have practically become one. I do not now appeal for help to meet the capital outlay which was necessitated by the acquiring and adaptation of these premises, but merely to repay my out-of-pocket expenditure since the commencement of the work, amounting in all to about £200. This I can ill afford out of a very limited annual income. In the future—as I am thankful to say the Coffee Palace takings are improving—probably the receipts will more nearly balance the outgoings. A very blessed Gospel and Temperance work is being carried on, and we have large attendances at the services in the hall, a good proportion being men.

The surrounding population is chiefly composed of poor, who are therefore unable to give any material pecuniary help. The work is entirely undenominational.

I shall be grateful for any assistance your readers may be inclined to send. Will they also remember us in their prayers?—Yours faithfully,

ALGERNON C. P. COOTE.

A SERVICE in the ROCKY MOUNTAINS.

OF all the noisy places in the world a mining town upon the Sabbath-day will surely carry off the palm. Saturday is the day for cleaning up the "claims," that is, taking out the gold which during the week has been deposited in the pits or boxes alongside the main flume. . . . Saturday night is the great night for carousing and revelling, after the payment for labour has been made or the profits for the week have been declared. Sunday is the day for marketing, and laying in the needed supply of provisions, or for the selling and buying of mines, and the trading and bartering of all kinds incident to a frontier life. A bright day naturally brings forth a greater company than a dull one, and the streets are more thronged with people.

It was a bright day when Steamboat and the minister stepped forth from the cabin. The town was all astir, but about the cabin all was still; it was built a little on one side of the road, and so was out of the way of the passing crowd. For a moment they stopped to gaze upon the scene of beauty which environed them. Away up the gulch at its very head stood a towering mountain like some great tonsured head uncowled, and clad in the whiteness of snow, rising from the midst of a fringe of spruces, which had grown upon its sides, stopping just about half-way up to the top. Between the beholder and the mountain was a range of smaller hills, so that the spruces only seemed to band the mountain. The climbing sun had tinged with its beams the white peak until it glowed with a silver sheen. The hills wore the green of opening spring. . . .

As they walked away, Steamboat said, "Where is your meeting to be?"

"A strange place, but the only place which was offered. Yesterday when I was tired out, and was thinking of giving it up as a failure, a saloon keeper called to me, and proffered his place, promising to get it ready, and to get me a congregation. This I accepted." . . .

"Well, that is a strange place, and a strange crowd you will have, I can tell you; the worst men in the camp meet there." . . .

The place of meeting was reached. Around its door there was gathered quite a crowd, they had heard of the new preacher, and that he was going to hold a meeting at "Aquafortis Jock's." So curiosity, and the lack of something to do combined, had caused them to come together; they admired the pluck of the stranger who would preach in such a place, and they were prepared to give him a hearing, providing he took their fancy.

As the two friends approached, they made way for them, and now and then one of the crowd passed the compliments of the day with Steamboat, looking with that quick searching glance, with which men weigh a new acquaintance, at the stranger who accompanied him.

They entered the door. True to his promise Jock had brought fresh saw-dust, and put it upon the floor. The day before, in the saloon, there had been a bagatelle table standing, where men played a game for the price of the drinks. This had been removed; all the bottles which were wont to stand upon the shelves behind the counter had also disappeared; the counter had been washed and wiped dry. . . . Everything had been made as neat and tidy as the place would allow, and Jock stood beside the door ready to welcome the preacher.

As they entered, the word was passed along, "Here comes the preacher, make way for him."

As he clambered over the seats he heard the company remarking upon his appearance. "He's a young fellow;" "He ought to have stayed with his mother awhile;" "He's forgot his good clothes, and borrowed some other fellow's;" "He don't amount to much anyway;" "What did he want to come out here for? he must expect to make money, but he'll be fooled." Such remarks he caught, and not a single word of encouragement from any one in that audience. As he passed around the corner of the counter, to take his stand upon the box, one rougher than the rest and a would-be wit cried out,

"Give us a gin sling, red hot!"

This raised a laugh, and the clergyman's face flushed for an instant ere he could compose himself. He stopped for a moment, and asked his Heavenly Father for help and guidance. Stepping upon the box he commenced by saying, "Boys, I am a stranger, and I know you love fair play; give me a chance, and I hope we shall not be strangers for very long."

Stopping for an instant and taking a Bible from his pocket, he laid it upon the bar before him, and said: "As we have no hymn books, let us sing together that hymn, which I am sure we all have sung time and again in our old homes,

"Rock of ages cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in Thee."

Then in a clear tenor voice, he commenced to sing with all the pathos and feeling of which he was capable. Every word of the grand old hymn became to him a prayer. Scarcely had he commenced, before a hush fell upon the audience, and you could hear the deep breathing of these men. He sang the first verse alone. Those about the door crowded up to catch the words and music, and stood motionless, whilst they listened.

After he had finished the verse, he said, "Will not some of you kindly help me to sing? Some of you must know the words. Have you not often sung it in your childhood in the old home circle? Let us sing the first verse together."

He commenced again; slowly and feelingly he sang the first line. Not a voice save his own was to be heard. As he commenced upon the second line, an old grey-haired man sitting in the corner joined in very feebly, but soon another, and another, until before the verse was ended all in the room were singing. It spread to the street, and those gathered there were joining in the hymn. The singing had attracted others, and now the space in front of the house was filled with men, eagerly seeking to get a view of that which was taking place in Jock's saloon.

The singing ended, a simple prayer followed, asking that God's blessing might follow the day's service.

Then they sang "Jesu, lover of my soul," and as they were singing it, one and another dropped their heads, as memory carried them back to their boyhood days, and on not a few of those rough cheeks there glistened tears.

Taking up his Bible the preacher read a few verses from the third chapter of St. John's Gospel, and taking the 16th verse of the chapter for his text, he began to speak to them about God's wonderful Gift. He touched upon the greatness of the Gift, his only Son, from Heaven's throne to an earth hut, from glory to suffering. Then the object of that Gift, to show men how to love, how to live, how to make sacrifices, for He came to redeem them through his own sacrifice, when they could not redeem themselves. Then the conditions of the Gift; none excluded, all needing it. Then the effects of that Gift on the world, on individuals, and how it was because of the wonderful love shown in this Gift, that he (the preacher) had come to preach to them; it was not their money which he wanted. God had loved him, God loved them; they were all brothers; some had wandered away from home, but their Father loved them yet. Then he spoke of the greatness of the inheritance, and as he spoke of their coming out to seek riches in these rough places, and enduring such hardships that they might have an easy and a happy time by-and-bye, he asked them what they thought of God's Son coming to die, so that he might give to them a share in his inheritance. He only asks your love in return for all this love shown; ought He not to have it? Then he spoke of their looking to a share in an inheritance back in the old home, and how happy a meeting it would be when they returned there with all their riches won; but how much happier would be a reunion in heaven, when the separated ones might be gathered as one family, never again to be scattered.

They listened, as only men deeply stirred could listen.

The sermon was only about ten minutes in length, but the effect could be easily seen upon all faces. Then after a short prayer, they sang the hymn, "There is a fountain filled with blood."

The minister afterwards thanked them all for their kindness to him, a stranger; but in passing out, they all seemed to draw away from him, and he could not understand it. Stretching forth his hand, whilst he was trembling with fear lest it would be refused, he said, "Will not some of you kindly shake hands with me? I know I am young. I do not know your ways, but I will try and learn them. You should have had an older and a better man sent to you, but I am here now, won't you please be friends with me?"

The appeal touched their hearts, and they pressed around him, and asked him, "If he would not preach them another sermon."

"Not now," he answered, "but in the evening if you will provide a place, and come to hear me."

"Here, here is the place," shouted a dozen voices, and Jock said, "Yes, here is the place, you can have it and welcome to it, if you will only come."

"I will."

"Sing 'Rock of Ages' again," was the cry; and again they sang, "Rock of Ages, cleft for me."

The song ended, the crowd parted, and the preacher and his companion moved away. It was seed sown by the wayside.—Sunday at Home.

The Ratcliff Bridge of Hope.

IN a letter from Miss Macpherson, highly commending the appeal for extended premises, by Miss Steer, recently inserted in our columns, she says:—

"Only those who dwell among scenes that a Christian lady cannot portray, can tell the relief it is to go from end to end of this square mile, containing 180,000 precious souls, and be able to say to every fallen sister, 'Go to Miss Steer, 26, Prince's-square.' Even this winter we have been saved sleepless nights, by at once being able to obtain shelter and hope of sound counsel for many a wanderer from the path of virtue.

"I, for one, shall deny myself a much-needed rest abroad, and give her my mite. Will our richer sisters not at once help in this cry for more room, to save those who in their very youth are demoralising our sailors? The angels and all saints must rejoice over the fact of 700 helped by loving care in four years."

A THREEFOLD VICTORY.*

By MAJOR WHITTLE.

THREE things are presented by the Apostle in the verses from 1 Cor. xv. over which he rejoices that believers have the victory—the law, sin, and death.

THE LAW.

"The strength of sin is the law." Victory must therefore commence here. So long as the holy law of God condemns me, there can be no victory in anything. I cannot pray to God in faith until I know my sins are forgiven. I cannot love God, while I believe I am under his curse. I cannot serve God acceptably until I am justified by God. On the other hand, God cannot bless me while his law still condemns me. He cannot impart his Spirit to me, while guilt is yet upon me in his sight. To be made right legally in an absolute and entire release from every demand of the law, must be of necessity the first step in salvation. "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through Jesus Christ our Lord." He "was delivered for our offences." He was "raised for our justification" (Rom. iv. 25).

"Put my where it says our, and read it again, slowly," was said to an anxious soul. "I see it! I see it!" was the happy response, after the request had been complied with. Reader, do you see it? If not, will you read the verse again? Read it slowly. Think what it means. Look to the Saviour in his death as bearing the very sins you now feel to be condemning you. If Jesus Christ upon the Cross does not bring light to your soul, light will never come.

Do you not see from this verse, that the ground of your justification before God, the full and complete pardon of every sin, is simply the fact of Christ having died and satisfied God's law for you, and on your behalf; and that you may know you are justified before God, in that He has raised Christ up from the dead to show you that He has accepted Him, and accepts you in Him?

SIN.

For the second aspect of victory, viz., over sin, look at Rom. vi.: "Sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace." The central truth is—the spiritual union of the believing soul with a personal, living, risen Saviour. The failure in overcoming sin begins, and is continued, because of failure to enter by faith into the enjoyment of this relationship. For peace of conscience as to my sins, I must see Christ on the Cross, in his work of atonement. For power to overcome my sins, I must see Him as "the first-born from among the dead," the risen Head of his Church; and He, a living Saviour, must dwell in my heart. If, in my knowledge of Christ, I stop at the Cross, I cannot know his delivering power in my daily life.

The wonderful truth of Rom. vii. 4—showing the purpose of God, in setting the sinner free at the Cross, to be the marriage of the sinner to Christ, as raised from the dead—is apprehended so feebly, that the power of Christ in his salvation is hardly known. Christ found his bride in prison, shut up under penalty of the law. He died to release her, that she then might marry him. If the marriage is not consummated, how could the salvation be enjoyed? So far as He, the Bridegroom, is concerned, it is. He accepted us when we came to Him; for "Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out." But, alas! his bride is very half-hearted, and slow to understand the fulness of his affection and the abundance of his power and grace for the supply of her every need. "Put on the Lord Jesus Christ." "Alive unto God in Jesus Christ."

"Married to Him who was raised from the dead." Surely, if we obeyed these exhortations, and accepted in simple faith the truth as to our standing before God in Christ, we should have victory over sin. The mistake is often made that the actings of the flesh are the cause of the low spiritual life of believers. The truth is, that the low spiritual life of believers is the cause of the actings of the flesh. Let the soul come into a higher spiritual atmosphere by being "married to Another;" let Christ be enjoyed and trusted, and fed upon through his Word, and the flesh is kept subdued. Engaged with Christ, the mind "makes no provision for the flesh," and it is kept under.

So that it is not by fighting our sins in detail that we get the victory—indeed, in this way, we find that the sins get the victory—but by coming into closer fellowship with Christ. Treat and trust Him, as a loving wife would trust her husband; as Ruth, the Moabitess—who found grace in the eyes of Boaz, and he became her redeemer and husband—trusted him to pay all her debts, and provide for all her needs. It would have grieved him, a mighty man of wealth, to have had her worried in the slightest degree about either.

Alas, how often we have grieved our blessed Lord by our doubts and suspicions as to whether He really has redeemed us from all our sins, or our unbelief as to the grace He has promised for all of our need.

DEATH.

"The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death" (1 Cor. xv. 26, 54, and 55). So death is an enemy; it always has been, and always will be; it is the last enemy to be destroyed. But, as an enemy, the believer is assured that in Christ he has the victory. With the question of sin settled, and judgment behind him at the Cross, instead of before him beyond the grave, the sting of death is removed; and the cause of its greatest terror, the fear of judgment, gone. Death no longer comes like a police officer to a believer, to bind him and take him to prison to await the great assize, but is allowed by God, as an enemy indeed, to hasten his children home—like a bad man who frightens the children as they come from school, and they run the faster to their father's house.

We have, as believers, the victory over death, in the triumph of our Saviour in coming up from the grave. The victory there gained was a victory in which every believer has a share. This robs the grave of its terror, should we be called upon to lie therein. There is no question as to our coming up out of the grave. That was fully settled when He arose.

Sin cannot keep us there: for Christ took our sin and carried it to his grave, and God raised Him up above it all.

Satan cannot keep us there: for Christ by his death has overcome him that had the power of death; and He has the keys of death and the grave under his control. None can go in without his permission; and all must come forth when He shall speak the word.

Corruption cannot keep us there: for "this corruption must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality" (1 Cor. xv. 53).

WHAT IS THE GOSPEL?—6.

By Mr. GEORGE F. TRENCH.

IN Matthew, it is the good tidings of the Kingdom, preached by the Lord, by John the Baptist and the Twelve, that the promised restitution from heaven of the Kingdom to Israel, and the assumption of the crown by the Son of David, was about to be accomplished in Jesus of Nazareth, "the carpenter's son," as their Messiah. That in Him the promises made to Abraham and to David, whose lineal heir he was, should be fulfilled; and, as foretold by the prophets, an era of blessing inaugurated, including the forgiveness of sins, the health of the body, its liberation from Satanic tyranny, the supply of its daily need, the control of the elements, cessation of war, the conversion of the Gentiles, and the resurrection of the dead.

For the enjoyment of these good tidings, the repentance of Israel and their acceptance of the Lord Jesus nationally, were the necessary and only conditions. His rejection and murder interrupted and postponed their realisation.

Meantime, the Lord, anticipating his death, and announcing its redeeming character, invites all sinful and weary souls to pardon and rest in Himself, and announces in parables an ad interim Kingdom of a mixed character, in which the godly are not to use force to exterminate the unbelieving, but rather be prepared themselves to suffer violence for his sake, till He comes in his Kingdom for the eternal punishment of the wicked, and the eternal blessing of the righteous. God is made known in word and miracle by the Son, as the Father, full of pity and love, watchful and attentive to his children's need; whose righteousness is to be (not of rites and forms, but) that of love, grace, humility, and peace, according to the spirit, if not the letter, of the law of Moses. A circumstantial account is given of the Lord's death and resurrection, but their place as the foundation of all these blessings is left to later writings to be explained.

In Mark, the Gospel is not a form of doctrine, but the living Son of God, presented, not from his birth, but in his public ministry, the great Prophet of Galilee and Judæa, full of active pity, grace, and healing power, the visible, tangible manifestation of God, come down to deliver his people, "who went about doing good, and healing all who were oppressed of the devil," and thus in miracles of bodily deliverance showing forth, as in types, the soul's regeneration.

The doctrine of the Gospel is heard but incidentally, viz., that the Kingdom of God is at hand, that man is offered forgiveness of all sins, the sick a great physician, the weak a friend; that Christ's blood should be shed for a ransom, and eternal life be given to those who love Him. It teaches too that men must repent, receive the Lord Jesus as little children, believe the Gospel and be prepared to suffer, even unto death, for it and Him.

His rejection, betrayal and murder, lead to the announcement of his true glory and coming triumphs.

The Gospel is a net, its preachers are fishers of men, and its purpose is the salvation of all who believe in Jesus, of which his resurrection and ascension are the sure guarantee.

In Luke, the Gospel is the presentation of the Lord Jesus as Son of Man (traced back to Adam), in and of Israel, but with sympathies and purposes of mercy as wide as the human race. He appears here specially as the exponent of the grace of God, and of God in grace, bringing salvation to the lost. His mission is to preach to all, by the Spirit of God upon Him, this Gospel of release for Satan's captives, light for blinded hearts, and the sinner's acceptance with God—to expose the tender mercy of God, and his joy in receiving sinners and remitting their sins, to show by act and word that poverty and helplessness and sin attract God's compassion, who loves even his enemies, and values the love of the sinful who turn to Him.

For the knowledge and enjoyment of all this, nothing is needful and nothing will avail but the reception of Himself, with self-renunciation and turning from mere worldly good, law-keeping, and religious forms for his sake.

This Gospel, "good tidings of great joy," conforms the receptive soul to its revelation, and draws us to follow a rejected leader and to bear his Cross; who now a greater Prophet than Jonah, will yet appear a greater King than Solomon, to reverse the positions of all things here, everthrow the proud city which crucified Him, and conduct to thrones of glory the poor of this world who love Him.

Navvy Mission Libraries.

SIR,—Five years ago you kindly inserted a letter in THE CHRISTIAN appealing to your readers for the gift of unused books to form libraries to be lent by the Navvy Mission Society in all parts of England on works where navvies in numbers were congregated. The Mission at that time had only one library, but in response to our appeal so many volumes were sent that we were enabled to form twenty-six circulating libraries of 225 volumes each. It is impossible to say how useful these books have been. Our plan is to encourage their free use in the Mission-rooms, and to lend them out in the huts and houses at one penny per week each volume.

The books have been well used and much appreciated. We are sorry to say all our libraries now need replenishing, the dull heavy books are still there, but a large proportion of the interesting ones are worn out or gone. Some books, such as "Uncle Tom's Cabin," might have feet, they go off so much "on tramp." In vain do our missionaries seek them up; lent quickly from hand to hand, they disappear. We therefore again earnestly appeal for the gift of any interesting books which may be lying useless on your readers' library shelves.

These would indeed be a blessing on our lonely moors, our crowded dock sides, our long railway cuttings, giving higher and better thoughts and innocent enjoyments to the men to whom we owe our pure water, our railways, and the other conveniences of life. Such memoirs as "The Story of John Wesley," "Felix Neff," "Chinese Gordon," "The Log Cabin," "William Wilberforce," &c. Travels of any kind, such as "Livingstone's," "Kane's Arctic Voyages," "Heralds of the Cross," "Miss Bird in the Rocky Mountains;" Natural histories, as Frank Buckland's good stories; any book, in fact, new or worn, with a good moral and religious tendency, will be most thankfully received and used by us.

In most homes a few such volumes could without great self-denial be spared, and we earnestly appeal to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to send us such. May we also beg (as we have no funds for the purpose) that the carriage of all parcels may be prepaid to Mrs. Sleight, Newington, Hull. Any gifts of money to repair our present books will also be gratefully acknowledged.—We are, gentlemen, faithfully yours,

K. M. SLEIGHT,
ELIZ. GARNETT,
Hon. Librarians of the Navvy Mission Society.

ENQUIRY MEETINGS.—SIR,—Can any of your readers send to me the addresses of a few Mission Halls, in or near London, where evangelistic services are held, with an after-meeting for anxious inquirers?—Yours truly, W. F. HATHAWAY.

"BRIEF LIFE IS HERE OUR PORTION."

By Rev. C. H. SPURGEON.

FROM SERMON SUGGESTED BY THE DEATH OF PRINCE LEOPOLD.

IS life so short? Does it only appear for a little time, and then vanish away? Then let us put all we can into it. If life be short, it is wisdom to have no fallows, but to sow every foot of ground while we can. It will be prudent to pack our little space as full as possible. Somebody said the other day of our dear friend Mr. Moody, that he was the only man who could pronounce "Jerusalem" in two syllables. It shows the activity of the man that he can speak as much in two syllables as other people can say in four: he is always at it, working for his Master double tide, rowing with both hands. Some speakers are long in delivering short sense; instead of saying much in little, they say little in much. Oh, for some one to teach them to say "Jerusalem" in two syllables!

Let us put plenty of life into our existence, plenty of work into our life, plenty of heart into our work, and plenty of warmth into our heart. Oh, may God give us to live while we live! May we not only live but be all alive.

Is life so short? Then do not let us make any very great provision for it. I have heard of certain people who are so imprudent that they never lay by anything for a rainy day, to whom I would say, "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise: which having no guide, overseer, or ruler, provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest." It would be a poverty-stricken world if all followed the example of improvidence which is set by certain spiritual blunderers. There is a thriftiness which we all ought to exercise; but there is no justification for laying up treasure which will never be used. Ants do not store up grain for storing's sake: they do but divide over the whole year the harvest of a month. To hoard up endless gold is a species of insanity. If I were going a day's voyage, I should not wish to take with me enough biscuit and salt beef to last for three years; it would only cumber the boat. One walking-stick is an admirable help, as I often find; but to carry a bundle of them when going on a journey would be a superfluity of absurdity. Alas, how many load themselves as if life's journey would last a thousand years, at the least; some men have amassed hundreds of thousands of pounds: when are they going to enjoy their wealth? They are getting more and more, and this occupies all their time: they are so busy cooking that they never have time to dine; they are so taken up with filling the wardrobe that they are all in rags. We do not want a ton weight of candles if we are only going to sit up for a few minutes. Let us be wise enough to suit the supply to the need.

Is time so short? Then do not let us fret about its troubles and discomforts. A man is on a journey, and puts up at an inn, and when he is fairly in the hostelry, he perceives that it is a poor place, with scant food, and a hard bed. "Well, well," says he, "I am off the first thing to-morrow morning, and so it does not matter." This world is an inn, and if there are certain discomforts in it, let us remember that we are not tenants for years, but only guests for a day. Let us make the best we can of the temporary accommodation which this poor shanty of a world affords. Our life is removed as a shepherd's tent, which was a hovel in which the shepherds watched their sheep. A shepherd who has to watch the sheep for a short time does not set to work to build a granite palace, or a brick house: he is satisfied with a reed hut, and does not complain of its scant space and slender strength. So let it be with us. Let us sing together—

"The way may be rough, but it cannot be long;
Let us smooth it with hope, and cheer it with song."

Must life vanish away? We know it must. What then? Do not leave this life to be ravelled out at the end. I would like to have a well-hemmed life, with a finish about it. I would like to have my life enclosed with a ring-fence of completeness. Too many leave life's business in such a way that they leave endless trouble for their families: lawyers devour their substance, and their children are impoverished. See that your will is made, your debts paid, your charities distributed, and all your affairs are arranged. Set your house in order; it is your duty as a citizen; it is your higher duty as Christian. Do all that you would like to have done if you knew you would die to-morrow. I like Mr. Whitefield's order; for he could not go to bed comfortably if his gloves were not in his hat ready for the morning. He felt that he could not tell when he would be called away; but he wished to have everything in its place whenever the summons should come.

Must this life vanish away? Then recollect it is the beginning of another. The life present melts into the life to come. What kind of life will that other be? Do you not think that if it is to be a glorious life it ought to commence here? Who would like to enter heaven, could it be possible, and feel compelled to say, "I cannot join in the music, for I do not know the tune; I cannot take up the hymn, for I know nothing of the song. I cannot glorify God, for I never did so while below. I cannot adore the Lamb, for I never trusted in him while I was on earth." You must learn the music here, or you will never sing in the choirs of heaven. Oh, that this might arouse some of you! By the memory that this life must vanish away may you be led to seek that eternal life which will abide in its excellency world without end.—Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, No. 1773.

The Second Coming of the Lord Jesus.

THIS subject is awakening deep and increasing interest in the hearts of Christians. The invitation from Melbourne to unite in prayer for the speedy advent of the Lord to set up his kingdom has met with a warm response from many English Christians. "The Second Coming Prayer Union" proposes therefore to devote three days to conference and prayer on this deeply momentous subject. The meetings will be held (D.V.) in the New South London Conference Hall, in the Clapham-road, on May 14, 15, and 16.

In this Conference all who know that this fallen creation shall only be delivered from the bondage of corruption, when we who believe shall receive the adoption—to wit, the redemption of the body—can cordially unite (Rom. viii. 20—25). And truly it is a time for those who fear the Lord and who think upon his name, to meet together and speak their mind one to another, and offer the prayer, "Come, Lord Jesus; come quickly" (Mal. iii. 16, 17).

And must not such meetings be pleasing to Him who prayed "That they all may be one, as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee; that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me" (John xvii. 21). And may we not confidently expect that the blessing of such meetings will greatly extend beyond the numbers of those attending them? S. MEREDITH.

WHAT A LITTLE GIRL DID.

IN the neighbourhood of New York, a feeble little church has been endeavouring to build a house of worship for itself, or perhaps it would be more proper to say that their more wealthy neighbours have been building it, but the church members have contributed according to their ability. Being anxious to raise more money than the people were able to contribute, one of the officers of the church procured some cards with the name of the church printed on one side, and on the other side these lines:—

"If you cannot give your millions,
You can give the widow's mite,
The smallest gift for Jesus
Is precious in his sight."

These cards were given to some of the children of the church to sell for ten cents. each.

A little girl took some of them to a shop in which her father worked, and passed around from one to another, soliciting purchasers, until she came to a man who was regarded by his fellow-workmen as one who had no interest in religious things, and was not disposed to give money to any object. "Will you buy one of my cards, sir?" said the child. "I don't want any cards; what is it for?" She explained that she was trying to raise some money to help to build the ——— Church. "What; a little girl like you trying to build a church?" "Yes, sir," was the modest reply. "Read that to me," said he. She read the verses. "Well, here are ten cents for you," and he took the card. Expressing her thanks, the child turned away, only to be recalled. "You can take the card," said the man, "and sell it to some one else, and get ten cents more." "Thank you, sir," she said, this time looking at him with beaming face. She turned away the second time, but was again recalled. "Little girl," he said, "will you read me those verses again?" She read them, when, much to her surprise, the man took out his pocket-book and handed her a ten-dollar bill. With reiterated thanks, the child went away rejoicing.—New York Observer.

THE TWO GOATS.

Lev. xvi.

Let us imagine that we are in the midst of Israel's camp; sadness is all around, for the people are mourning on account of their sins. Sin and sadness always go together. It is the Day of Atonement. "And what does atonement mean?" asks some young questioner. Wait, and we shall learn. Yonder is the Tabernacle, the centre of attraction at this important hour. Look! the priest has two goats; one he is about to kill. See! its blood flows, and is caught in a prepared vessel, to be carried into the holy place. This is the only time the priest is allowed to enter beyond the veil. Now he has passed from our sight, and as he does so, stands before the mercy-seat, where God reveals himself in the bright glory. There, in the divine presence, he sprinkles the red drops seven times.

But what will he do with the other goat? It is brought forth, and we see him place his hand upon its head and confess the guilt of the people, "all their transgressions in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat" (v. 21). Presently, a fit man leads the creature away: for it is bearing the iniquity of Israel, and cannot be allowed to remain near God's holy throne. On, on, on, past the tents, out into the desert, and then the man stops. All is silent! He looks around: no one is near to see Israel's sin. "Go," he cries, as he releases the animal, and it bounds over the plain. He watches until he can see it no more: the sin of the people is put away.

But how can sin be thus put away? Because the first goat died, and so bore sin's punishment: then the second goat could justly carry it away into a land of forgetfulness (v. 22).

I think I hear a little child ask, as the goat is led past the tent door, "Mother, is that my sin?" "Yes, child." "And where is my sin going?" "Right away out of sight." "And will it never come back?" "Never, child." "And who put it on the goat?" "The high-priest, child." "But who said he was to do it?" "God, my child." "Then it is all right, mother, I know." "Yes, child, and now you, and I, and all whom that goat represents, are clear in God's own way."

Thus Jesus bears our sins. "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all" (Isa. liii. 6).

"The Lord in the day of his pity did lay,
Our sin on the Son, and He bore them away."

"Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world" (John i. 29).

"My faith would lay her hand
On that dear head of thine,
While like a penitent I stand,
And there confess my sin."

But how can Jesus take away sin? Because He is also "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Rev. xiii. 8). So that Jesus is both goats in one. He dies and makes an atonement for sin. He goes without the camp, and takes our sins where they will never be found.

Thanksgiving at Clapham.

A VERY enjoyable gathering was held on Monday evening of last week, at Grafton Church, Clapham, under the presidency of Mr. M. H. Hodder. A number of friends came together to render united thanksgiving to God for the great things He had done in connection with the late Mission under Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, at Lavender-hill Hall, Battersea.

During the evening many emphatic testimonies were given as to the wide extent and genuine character of the work. These testimonies went to show that not only in individual cases of conversion, but among the ranks of the ministry and those who were already believers, the blessing received has been very real and full of promise for the future. One case of special interest was that of an avowed sceptic, who testified that his visits to the hall were the means of his conversion. He heartily commended to others the Saviour he had found so precious. The testimonies flowed on in quick succession, and altogether it was a very joyous occasion.

The presence and song of the South London Choir and the Clapham Male Choir added much to the heartiness of the praise. Mr. Guinness Rogers, the pastor of the church, was not present, but his son proved a good substitute, expressing much sympathy with the movement.

OUR RAILWAY MEN.—The ladies interested in our Metropolitan Railway Men have just given them two meat teas, at St. Matthew's Schools, Queen's-road, Bayswater. After tea very earnest addresses were given by different gentlemen. The workers are much encouraged, as many came out both evenings decidedly for the Lord. Miss Jackson, 21, Stanley-gardens, London, W., would be glad to hear from any who would help by sending Gospel packets to the men every month.

Mission Work in South Arcot, India.

ON Wednesday, April 2, a very interesting meeting was held at the House of Rest, Kilburn, on behalf of this Mission. The work is carried on by Miss Reade, who about two years ago removed from Punrooty to Cuddalore. She has been for the last five years greatly assisted in her work by Miss Groom, who is now in England for a few months to recruit her health; and who, on this occasion, gave some very stirring details of the Mission. The principal work consists of evangelising among the natives, visiting zenanas, and medical Mission work amongst the women and children. In all these departments the Lord has given many tokens of his approval and blessing.

The work also includes an Orphanage for forty girls. These children are entirely dependent upon the Mission for support and education; the object is to train them to be true witnesses for Christ, as they grow up and go out into homes of their own, in the various villages, where the light of the Gospel rarely, if ever, penetrates. No one could listen to Miss Groom's narrative without feeling profoundly thankful that such an effort was being made to reach the deplorably neglected women and children of our Indian Empire. Miss Groom will be thankful for any help towards the support of the Mission, which may be sent to her at the House of Rest, 8, Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn, N.W.

MR. GEORGE MÜLLER AT BENARES.

THIS Indian city was favoured, from February 20 to 25, with a visit from Mr. and Mrs. Müller, of Bristol, never likely to be forgotten by the many who rejoice in its spiritually refreshing power. Mr. and Mrs. Müller were the guests of Rev. J. and Mrs. Hewlett, at the London Mission House, where, on the evening of their arrival, nearly all the missionaries and missionary ladies of the five different societies, and some of the other friends of Missions at Benares, assembled to welcome them. Mr. Müller delivered a profoundly impressive address, in which he pointed out two indispensable requisites for our missionary success. First, all our purposes, plans, and efforts must be for the glory of God. Secondly, we should never let work, however much our hands may be crowded with it, take precedence of caring for our own souls.

There was a general expression of great joy at meeting Mr. Müller, and of deep thankfulness at hearing his wise and loving counsel. The following day he addressed an assembly of educated natives at the London Mission College, on Isaiah liii. The audience consisted of about two hundred, partly teachers and students, and partly outside friends. Though the bent of the minds of most of them, through being still professedly non-Christian, must have been very different from Mr. Müller's, yet his winning manner in speaking of the fulfilment of God's prophecy to work out redemption by Christ for the human race, and of his own happy experience through trusting in that redemption for fifty-eight years and three months, made such a deep impression that we still hear members of the audience speak with wonder at his words coming with such power from his heart.

On Friday, 22, he delivered to one of the largest audiences of the English-speaking residents of Benares that ever assembled in the London Mission Church, a most soul-stirring account of his great life work. The narrative he then gave of the answers he had received to prayer for the church of which he is minister and for the establishment and maintenance of the wonderful Scriptural Knowledge Institution for Home and Abroad, in all its branches, seemed one of the most astonishing narratives of God's dealings with man ever presented to the world. Mr. and Mrs. Müller departed from Benares on February 25; but many still thank God from their hearts for the spiritual stimulus caused by their visit. It is difficult to see how God could bestow a greater blessing upon India than to send for its spiritual quickening a man of such faith and prayer as Mr. Müller.—Indian Witness.

A DIALOGUE IN BERMONDSEY

BETWEEN

Major Whittle and Rev. M. Rainsford.

WE conclude the interesting conversation between the Evangelist and the Pastor. We hear that it was greatly blessed to many in the delivery, and we trust that perusal may be helpful to others.

Major Whittle.—This question is asked: "If I decide to accept Christ, and trust Him, how may I know that He receives me?"

Rev. M. Rainsford.—Just take Him at his word. Listen to it: "Whosoever cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out." Is there any reason in the world why you should not take Him at his word? Of course if He tells lies; if He makes promises that He will not or cannot fulfil; or if He gives invitations that He will not honour, you cannot be saved. But remember, the Scripture says that God cannot lie; He cannot deny Himself.

Major W.—"Do not believers have the witness of the Spirit? What is the witness of the Spirit?"

Mr. R.—"The witness of the Spirit" is the written Word of God. It is written, 1 John v. 10, 11, "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself," that is, the record, the written Word of God. He that believeth not God hath made Him a liar, because he believeth not the witness God gave of his Son, and this is the witness that God has given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." That is "the witness of the Spirit." Note that the words "record" and "witness" are the same in the original. The believer receives with joy and comfort the word of a faithful God who never deceives, and who cannot be deceived.

Major W.—"Is it not right to wait for this witness before I say I trust in Jesus?"

Mr. R.—Why wait for it? You have got it. There it is in the Bible: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." Is God going to send another Saviour, or another Gospel, or another Spirit to bear witness to the things of Christ? When Christ went away, He said, "I will send you another Comforter, who shall testify of Me." The Spirit came, and He is now testifying of Christ through this Word. Every time you read a promise in the Bible, the Spirit of God is witnessing with your spirit. Every message in the Word of God is the Holy Ghost speaking in the language of heaven to your poor human soul. My friend, do not wait for the "witness of the Spirit." We have got it. Remember what the Apostle says in Romans x. 8—11: "The Word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith, which we preach; that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. For the Scripture saith, Whosoever believeth on Him shall not be ashamed." The moment you take Christ's Word into your heart, the Spirit witnesseth with your spirit.

Major W.—"Is not the work of conversion and salvation a gradual one? Surely I cannot take Christ all at once?" That was said by an inquirer last Sunday.

Mr. R.—Surely if salvation is a gift, and a free gift, it need not require much time to accept it. If I offer a man £100, how long time will the gradual process require? A working-man came to me a few days ago to tell me of his conversion. He heard a dialogue between Mr. Moody and myself at Wandsworth to this effect:—Mr. M.: How long would you give a sinner to come to Christ and be saved? Mr. R.: Do you speak of a real bad one? Mr. M.: Yes, a real bad one! (and the poor fellow said, "I listened sharp to that, for I knew I had served the devil for forty years!") Would you give him twenty-four hours? Mr. R.: Certainly not. He might awake in hell before half the time! Mr. M.: Well, how long would you give him—one hour? Mr. R.: No, certainly not; but just time enough to say, Lord, I believe; thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift. "Oh, sir," said the man to me, "that did for me! To think I might come to Christ and get salvation then and there, right off, it was wonderful good of Him, and I just took Him at his word, sir, and I am so happy ever since. I thought I must come and tell you." My friend, a look does not take long; and God says, "Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth, for I am God, and there is none else" (Isa. xlv. 22).

Major W.—"I have wanted to be a Christian for some time, but I have been afraid to commit myself, for fear I should not hold out."

Mr. R.—That is a queer sort of trust in the Saviour, isn't it, now? If you can trust Christ to save you, don't you think you may trust Him to keep you when He has saved you. It cost Him his life to save you. He need not die again to keep you. It is written, "If when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life" (Rom. v. 10). And you remember David said, "Thou hast delivered my soul from death: wilt not Thou deliver my feet from falling, that I may walk before God in the light of the living?" (Ps. lvi. 13). Yes, He is "able to keep us from falling, and to present us faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy" (Jude 24). Do not doubt Him any more. Just trust Him day by day; that is the way to hold out.

Major W.—"I have a sinful habit; I have been an intemperate man. What shall I do with this appetite if I accept Christ?"

Mr. R.—Suppose I had a heavy load and could not carry it, but there was a good friend here stronger than myself; should I not ask him to help me? I will tell you what to do. God has laid help on One who is mighty. Take your burden to Him, whatever it is, and He will carry both you and your burden. You are sure to fail apart from Him. You can do all things with Him. He is exalted to the right hand of God on purpose to give repentance, forgiveness of sins, and strength to his people. He says, "My strength is made perfect in weakness" (2 Cor. xii. 9).

Major W.—"Is all sin taken out of me when I believe in Christ, so that I shall have no more desire to do evil?"

Mr. R.—I wish it were! I read in the Word of God that "the flesh lusteth against the Spirit." I wish there was no flesh to strive with. I read again, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh." I am to wrestle, not only with flesh and blood, but with principalities and powers and the rulers of darkness in high places. Why, God calls me to be a soldier, to be a runner, to fight the good fight of faith. So He says: "Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth." Oh, yes; it is a fight. But the house of David shall grow stronger and stronger, and the house of Saul shall grow weaker and weaker. That is my experience.

Major W.—"If I give up the world and the pleasures I now enjoy, what shall I get to pay me for it?"

Mr. R.—When I was a boy I was very fond of tops and marbles, but I never think of playing a game with them now. I tell you what it is: When Christ gets into a man's heart He turns all these worldly things out. You get new affections, new wishes, new hopes. "When I was a child," says the Apostle, "I thought as a child, I spake as a child; but when I became a man I put away childish things." When Christ gets into a man's heart He changes his tastes; he does not care for the old society, the old companions, the old scenes. Old things have passed away, and all things have become new. God never asks you to give up anything. He asks you to take in Christ. Everything will soon run out when He comes in.

Major W.—"I am willing to come to Christ, and to come now; what shall I do? How shall I come?" Thank God, a good many are saying that.

Mr. R.—Take Him at his word. Do not simply be talking about it. The Lord presents Himself to you as freely as the air you breathe. He is the gift of God. Take the gift and use it. Take Him as the One who healeth all your diseases and saves you from all your sins. Take Him as your Wisdom, your Righteousness, your Sanctification, your Redemption—all you want from God and all God wants from you. Take Him and thank God for Him. That is the way to be happy and to be safe. It seems so easy; I wonder we are not all rushing to Jesus Christ.

MRS. HILTON'S CRECHE.

IN recent discussions about "Outcast London," it has been well remarked that, bad as things are in many parts of the city, we can form little idea of what they would have been but for the patient, persevering, and successful toil of many, who have laboured when others heeded not the cry of the poor and needy. In planning fresh methods for meeting the deep necessities of our population, let us not abate our support of the workers who have borne the burden and heat of the day in past years. Our friend Mrs. Hilton of the Crèche, Stepney Causeway, E., sends the details of some cases recently received by her there:—

"(1) Three children of John Henry Billing, who is undergoing penal servitude for life for the murder of his wife. The sisters of the unfortunate woman were scholars in the Ratcliff Sunday-school, and are now teachers. The circumstances were very sad. The poor woman had become the victim of strong drink. The eldest girl, aged ten, witnessed the tragedy, and was chief witness in the case; the second is a girl of seven, and there is a boy of two summers. We were thankful to be able to take these unfortunate children, and to endeavour to brighten their lives, which had thus early been shadowed by such terrible sorrow.

"(2) A girl of ten, whose father, a man of good family and position, had, by drink and dissipation, wrecked his life, and had died by his own hand. The mother had also contracted habits of intemperance, and was associating with disreputable people. She is a beautiful woman, not more than thirty years of age. Every effort is being made to rescue her, but at present without success.

"(3) Little Nellie, a child of three, whose father had deserted her, and whose mother is leading a disreputable life, was brought to us by her grandmother, who advised us to take her for a time, as she hoped the father, who is in Sydney, would send for her. She said the mother took the child with her, and was frequently to be seen dragging her through the street after twelve o'clock at night. I consented to take the dear child until a reply came from Sydney. When I went to the Crèche the morning after her admission, I asked the matron to bring my new little girl to me. I said, "Well, Nellie, are you to be my little girl?" She replied, "Oh, yes, for I've dot such a naughty muver; she gives me no bread and butter, no fwocks, and no nuffin at all."

"(4) Louise, a girl of ten, whose father was dying of consumption in the sick asylum, and whose stepmother was treating her very cruelly. The child's mother, who died when she was three years old, had been a faithful and highly-esteemed servant of a friend of ours for many years; they were so distressed at the condition of the poor child, that they asked that she might be admitted till some arrangement could be made.

"We have thirty or forty applicants. I can only trust that our financial needs will be met, and that want of space will be the only reason for refusing aid to these helpless little ones."

We are sure the recital of these touching facts will awaken a sympathetic interest in the minds of our readers, and lead them to help Mrs. Hilton in her labour of love among the suffering children around her.

Notes and Comments.

OUR "List of May Meetings" will be found on page 22 of this issue. Those friends who may have occasion to refer to it afterwards are recommended to detach and preserve the page.

As we send this issue to press early, on account of the Easter holidays, we are not able to give our weekly summary of the special evangelistic work in different parts of London. In our next issue we hope to furnish some account of the closing meetings by Messrs. Moody and Sankey at Addison-road, and of Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan at Bermondsey, as well as the first week's services by the former at Hampstead, and those by Messrs. Pentecost and Stebbins at Mildmay-park.

Last week, at the Central Noon Prayer-meeting, Major Whittle gave four consecutive addresses on "The Lord our Passover" to large and deeply-interested companies of believers. The earnest, searching words of the Major, and the delightful songs of his fellow-workers, Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, were much appreciated and enjoyed.

On a previous page we give some extracts from Major Whittle's new book, LIFE, WARFARE AND VICTORY, just issued by the publishers of this paper. The Major, whether in his spoken addresses or in his writings, is a very thorough workman—"one that needeth not to be ashamed." We believe this volume will be of immense service, especially to inquirers and to young Christians; we therefore confidently commend it to the attention of all who are themselves seeking to enter into the light of conscious acceptance with God, or who desire to help others to the possession of this privilege.

The question whether the Pope shall leave Rome or not continues to engross the attention of many who watch the current of continental events. The point is one of no very great importance. Rome can certainly do without the Pope; whether or not the Pope can do as well without Rome is not so easily settled. But for the fear that to abandon the scene of bygone papal supremacy and magnificence would lessen prestige and diminish the exchequer, doubtless the step would have been taken long ere this. Anyway, it is to be hoped that wherever he is, the power of his Holiness to do mischief, and to enslave the consciences of men will continue to wane, and by no means be permitted to revive.

Mr. Archibald Brown, at the late Conference on the state of the poor, spoke very forcibly on the mischief caused by Christians marrying the ungodly. He said he had repeatedly met with deplorable illustrations of this in visiting the outcasts of the East-end; women who had been members of churches, Sunday-school teachers, and tract distributors, had, through marriage with unconverted husbands, brought themselves into spiritual and social destitution of the saddest kind. The need for faithful teaching on the sin of believers marrying other than "in the Lord" is very great; many Christians do not recognise the sacredness and Divine authority of the principle involved. One of the main causes which led to the destruction of the antediluvian world was the sons of God contracting unhallowed alliances with the daughters of men.

A friend who is resident in the Netherlands states, in a recent communication, that Mr. Moody's addresses, translated into the Dutch language, have been owned of God to the salvation of not a few in that country.

An Evangelisation Society has been formed in Victoria, similar to the London Society. Mr. Charles Carter, writing to us from Melbourne, on February 27, says that wonderful blessing has attended its operations. He believes a great future is before it. He has acted as secretary for three months, in the absence of the regular secretary, who was laid aside through ill-health. Mr. Carter returns to England in the Lusitania.

"A Constant Reader" asks us to state a few of the reasons why an anti-smoking crusade should be vigorously prosecuted. We point in reply to the rapid growth of the habit among the youth of our land—a fact that few of the seniors who indulge in it would attempt to deny, or regard with complacency. The habit induces in many cases a thirst for drink, and so leads to intemperance. Tobacco, as a narcotic, has a most deleterious effect upon the physical constitution, specially so where used in early life. It involves a large waste of money, which might be employed to far better purpose. It proves a great nuisance in the streets and other places to thousands who dislike its use, and suffer in various ways from its being thrust upon them. Its morally injurious effects upon the young, in leading to reckless habits of life, inducing fast companionship, and leading indirectly to a host of other evils, no thoughtful person can question.

We have received a letter, signed by three gentlemen as wardens of Christ Church and All Saints' Church, Burton-on-Trent, denying the inference which they think might be drawn from Mr. Dearden's letter—that an extraordinary amount of drunkenness and sin has marked the Lord's work in that town. They say that "it would be difficult to enumerate a dozen cases of Christians, workers or otherwise, falling through the sin of drunkenness." And they think, "considering the vast numbers whom it has graciously pleased the Lord to bring to Himself, and the nature of the business carried on in the town, that this is a marvellously small proportion, and a striking testimony to the Lord's power to keep his people even in the midst of great temptation."

A letter has also reached us from "A Christian, though not a Teetotaller," who firmly believes "that statistics would prove that there is no more, perhaps less, drunkenness in Burton than in any town in the United Kingdom of the same population." We shall be interested in the verification or otherwise of this supposition. If there is not more drunkenness in Burton than in any other town, there must, one would conclude, have been more than ordinarily earnest and successful evangelisation. This, indeed, is in keeping with the letter of the churchwardens, who take note of the great temptations occasioned by the business carried on in the town, while speaking "of their twenty years' experience of a decided and blessed work of the Holy Spirit of God."

We repeat, however, what we said in our last, that the controversy, which we regret had become so personal, cannot be resumed here.

The impression made on some American minds by Mr. Matthew Arnold's recent lectures in the States, may be judged of from the following stanza of a poem written by a lady, after hearing him in Boston:—

> "He stands, the spectre of his age,
> With hopeless hands that bind the sheaf,
> Claiming God's work without his wage,
> The bard of unbelief."

A creed without definite faith in God is indeed a hopeless one, and a reputation for lofty genius displayed in mournful dirges over a world from which the light of truth has fled, and in which mystery alone remains, is scarcely one to be envied. The prophet of "sweetness and light" has succeeded in convincing men that he is "faith-forsaken," and has crossed the Atlantic to obtain the doubtful distinction accorded him in another stanza, of "The melancholy Guest."

Commenting on the parable recorded in Matt. xxv. 41—46, Bishop Ryle, the other Sunday evening, made the following weighty remarks. We commend them to the thoughtful attention of all our readers:—

"I declare I know very few passages of Scripture more solemn and heart-searching than this. It is not charged against these unhappy, lost souls, that they had committed murder, adultery, or theft, or that they had not been churchgoers or communicants. Oh, no! nothing of the kind. They had simply done nothing at all. They had neglected love to others. They had not tried to lessen the misery, or increase the happiness, of this sin-burdened world. They had selfishly sat still, done no good, had no eyes to see, or hearts to feel for their brethren, the members of Adam's great family. And so their end is everlasting punishment! If these words cannot set some people thinking, when they look at the state of the masses in some of our large towns, nothing will."

Among those who entered heartily into the work of the Mission lately held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey in Stratford, was Rev. J. Knaggs, of the Congregational Church. He gave his church for overflow meetings, and cordially co-operated with the evangelists. His church is now reaping the fruits. At the recent anniversary meeting of the congregation, the pastor stated that, as an outcome of the special Mission, 289 persons were candidates for church membership.

What is termed Christian Socialism is progressing amongst us. It has a journal of its own, and lately some of the leading men of various communities have given in their adhesion to it. The Rev. H. Price-Hughes declared in its favour at the Exeter Hall meeting in connection with the recent Conference on the state of the London poor, while the Rev. G. S. Reaney wrote to The Echo last week in unmeasured terms of sympathy with it. His closing words form a terrible indictment against the Church systems of to-day; opinions will vary as to its justice and truth. He says:—

"Modern Christianity is a big revolt against the Socialism of Christ, and the methods of political economy (of which a philosophical Atheist was the chief teacher) which seem so much in favour with well-to-do congregations, are little less than legalised confiscation."

We recently referred to the difficulties that had arisen in Sweden, leading to an abandonment of the Evangelical Alliance Conference at Stockholm in September next. We are glad to learn, however, that arrangements have been made for holding the Conference at Copenhagen, August 25—30. It is anticipated that the gathering will be a large and representative one. A detailed programme will shortly be published by the Alliance.

Mr. Thomas Hughes writes to The Record concerning Sunday postal deliveries, that if two-thirds of a "rural district" memorialise the post-office in London to that effect, Sunday delivery in the district will be discontinued. This fact is not generally known; if acted upon by influential residents, a needless encroachment on the rights of letter-carriers to Sabbath rest might, in many instances, be prevented. Even where this could not be attained, individuals, by requesting the local postmaster to retain their letters until Monday, could do much to lessen Sunday labour.

One of the grievances calling for redress in connection with our public hospitals and infirmaries, is the restriction on religious freedom which in many cases prevails. A case is reported, in connection with the Leicester Infirmary, in which a "Sister" deprived a patient of a copy of Mr. Haslam's "From Death into Life," which he was quietly reading and deriving comfort from. The Governing Board, when appealed to, approved the act, and asserted her right to do so. That nurses, be they "Sisters," or known by any other name, should be allowed to interfere with religious convictions, or to prevent the reading of any book calculated to benefit a patient able to read, is a state of things no managing body should permit. In many places religious intolerance, amounting to persecution, is shown to patients who desire to enjoy their own opinions.

A letter appeared in a recent issue of The Leicester Journal, referring to the above fact, which contains a paragraph worth quoting. It is eminently desirable that Christian men and women should more generally and heartily espouse the cause of the poor and oppressed. The writer says:—

"It is not the power of wealth, nor the sympathy of numbers that is most wanted, but it is the courage of the few: the courage of men who, for the honour of that Name which is above every name, will stand against the world if necessary for the rights of the poor, and go forward in the path of justice, unswayed by fear or favour, politics or precedent. Where are these men? They are needed in Leicester; they are needed everywhere. Some may doubt this, because they have not yet heard the undertone of suffering, but the voice must be heard, and brave hearts are needed who will consent to stand forward, to be ear and mouthpiece, and arm of strength to the suffering poor."

There are doubtless men in every town, who, if the idea were presented to them, would be willing for Christ's sake to band together, to stand by each other in making inquiries into the working of existing charities and local laws, to listen to the complaints of the poor, and to inquire into the ground of such complaint, where the working of such charities and laws is concerned, and to publish it when necessary. By such means a powerful testimony would be borne to the practical influence of the Gospel over the heart and life of its professors, and it would not be so easy for the taunt to be thrown out that Christians care but little for the poor while infidels plead and uphold their cause.

The Indian Witness says it is noticeable and instructive that Lord Ripon openly observes the rites and proprieties of his religion with a courage which no Protestant Governor-General—not even Sir John Lawrence—has shown. He worships in the Roman Catholic Church wherever he may happen to be; he ostentatiously helps Roman Catholic institutions when he is free to act in a private capacity; and recently he displayed the ardour of his faith by kneeling down at the door of a convent in the city of Secunderabad to kiss the ring on the hand of a bishop, who, with four priests, was about to enter. One is often led to ask how and why it is that the devotees of false creeds are so frequently found more bold and self-renouncing in the confession of their faith than the bulk of those who avow Evangelical truth.

Our dear old friend, John Hambleton, is about to leave England for Australia, accompanied by his young companion, F. Brewster. They propose to travel with Bibles and Christian literature through that great colony.

A Great Western Railway signalman writes to The Record respecting the disadvantages under which his class labour in regard to Sunday duties. They (the eight-hour men) never get a clear Sunday off duty. This is largely due to the running of goods and mineral trains on the Lord's Day, a practice which might surely be dispensed with. If this were done a number of signal-boxes could be closed, and a great number of men enabled to get to a place of worship who now cannot do so. This is a point that directors who aim at philanthropy and Christian usefulness should attend to.

Dr. Donald McLeod, in a recent lecture on "Social Inequalities," pleaded that there was an equality and an inequality ordained of God. In the divine sense inequality was productive of social benefit, but that which led to class separations and hatred was of the devil, and should be resisted with all earnestness by the Christian Church. The evil to be deplored is not that men are unequal, but that inequality should result in pride of rank, or of intelligence, or of any other distinction. Pride induces selfishness; selfishness is the parent of oppression, and oppression in any and every form necessarily causes discontent.

The Temperance cause in Boston has evidently made its mark. A proposition to have a wine room in the Art Club of that city was recently defeated by a vote taken after a month's canvass, only 68 voting for, and 363 against. Rev. Joseph Cook, commenting on this and other Temperance facts, has been advocating the introduction by law of Temperance text-books to the public schools. The Legislatures of Michigan, Vermont, and New Hampshire have already provided for this in the schools under their control. The State of New York has also enacted that in all schools supported by public money, provision shall be made for instructing pupils in physiology and hygiene, with a special reference to the effects of alcoholic drinks and narcotics upon the human system. No certificate is to be granted to teachers who have not passed examination in these subjects.

On being asked what three or four books recently issued in defence of scientific belief in God and its relations to Christian truth, he would most recommend, Mr. Cook, after referring to Professor Drummond's work on "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," and one or two others, said he should place prominently among them the fascinating biography of Professor Clerk Maxwell, one of the most accomplished opponents of Materialism England has produced. The value of this book as a testimony to the power of the truth to command brilliant intellect, and enlist the highest culture on its side, cannot be too highly spoken of.

A modern writer has said, "The instinct of society is to let things alone, to permit nothing to ruffle the cruel serenity of its pleasures, to vote everyone a bore who dwells upon any scheme for human improvement one moment longer than is necessary for the purposes of small talk." Against this instinct we have all reason to be on our guard. To be comfortable is the desire and aim of most people, and anything which upsets the equilibrium of our cherished surroundings, however desirable for society at large, is apt to be selfishly resisted and set aside. The Christian, above all men, should look not on his own things as the first consideration, but on the things of others, for he is called to be the follower of One who came "not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many."

The following words by Professor Sabatier, taken from Le Journal du Protestantisme, have a ring of genuine truthfulness which gives them great force. He refers to the question of public morality, and says:—

"Who will sound the alarum-bell? Who will brave the ridicule of society? Who will dare to call evil evil, and good good? The old Huguenot conscience, which would not bend before the dragoons of Louis XIV. and which will not be disconcerted by the smiles or the raillery of modern epicureanism. This, at least, is its work and mission in our country. It must be the first to utter the protest. Who will speak if it does not? We may seek after the best dogmatic formula, or the best ecclesiastical organisation, but of what use will these correct forms be if the moral and religious sap dries up or is corrupted; if life is perishing and conscience succumbs?"

The advocacy of doctrine, if divorced from practical righteousness, is more calculated to do evil than good. It makes hypocrites, deadens conscience, hardens sinners, and is apt to corrupt saints.

The immense influence which the National Church in this country has over the young, may be judged from the fact that in spite of the rapid increase of Board Schools, a far larger number of children are in Church of England schools than in those of any other class. The statistics issued by the Education Department show that the average attendance in national schools for the year ending August 31, 1883, was 1,562,507, as against 1,028,904 in board schools, 247,990 in undenominational schools, 162,310 in those of Roman Catholic influence, and 125,503 under Wesleyan control. The nature of the influence brought to bear upon the mass of child life represented by these figures is indeed of supreme importance. The future of the nation is to a great extent determined by it.

To lower the standards set up by the Word of God in reference to the spiritual obligations of a Christian profession is a sore evil, and one certain to result in moral failure and defeat. The tendency to do this in our day is but too manifest. The bulk of professors pursue a course in relation to worldly conformity which can by no means be regarded as treading the narrow way. Laxity as to doctrine and practice is openly pleaded for as required by charity and tolerance of the opinion of others. On many points involving fidelity to Christ as the Master and Exemplar of life, the ground is given up, and spirituality sacrificed. Let us bear in mind that confession of Christ in evil times, and the boldness which dares to be singular and to be counted narrow for Christ's sake, are virtues He has enjoined on his disciples and singled out for special reward.

HE had eyes that were very quick to see sorrow. He was once watching a young bricklayer at his work, when he perceived there was something on his mind which was making him unhappy. In his own pleasant way he soon entered into conversation with the young man, and almost before the latter knew it he was pouring out his tale of sorrow into the sympathetic heart of Colonel Gordon.

"Mother has left us, and gone away from home; and everything there is so miserable that it is not like home at all."

"What do you do with your evenings?"

"I cannot do anything with them, sir. There is no light, no warm place in which to sit, no quiet in which to read; so I stand about the streets when I have finished work."

"Come and spend your evenings at the Fort House. You will find books and papers there, and pen and ink, and other lads too."

"Thank you, Colonel, I shall be very glad to do that."

So the young bricklayer became a nightly visitor, and had many a talk with the Colonel. Very happy evenings they were, both to him who did good and to him who received it; for no one could be in the company of Gordon without being morally and spiritually elevated.

One evening the young bricklayer was at Fort House as usual, when he was suddenly taken ill and hæmorrhage of the lungs set in. The Colonel at once sent for the doctor. He found the young man very ill, and likely to continue so for some time. What was to be done? He could not be sent in his present state to his own miserable home—that was not to be thought of. But the doctor and the Colonel consulting together decided that he might be removed in a cab to the house of Mrs. S——, where he would receive all necessary attention.

The Colonel delivered him into Mrs. S——'s charge, giving the Good Samaritan's injunction and assurance, "Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again I will repay thee."

He was not long before he came again, for he visited him continually. "What can you take? Can I bring you anything?" he would ask; and would never forget to say to Mrs. S——, "Be sure to let him have everything he fancies." He bore the cost of everything: met the doctor's expenses, paid for the lodgings, and was constant in his thoughtful helpfulness. He had plenty of work to do, but could always find time to read the Bible to the young man, who liked listening to that and to the Colonel's talks and prayers better than anything.

At last the doctor advised that he should be removed to the local infirmary, for he was in a rapid consumption.

"Shall I see you there, Colonel?" he asked, with wistful eyes.

"Certainly; I have a good many friends there, and I am often calling to see them."

"I know that I am going to die."

"But you are not afraid, for now you know who says, 'I am the Resurrection and the Life.' He will be as near to you in the infirmary as here, and as near to you in death as in life."

"Oh, yes, I know Him now!" And so he did, for as the narrator said, "the Colonel had led him to Christ by his life and teaching."

So the young bricklayer who would do no more work was taken to the infirmary, and was able to show to the patients there what Christianity could do for a dying man. "Read the Bible to me," he would say to the nurse; "there is nothing like it."

"But you are tired."

"Yes, I am very tired. I do long to go to Jesus." On another occasion he said, "I can see such beautiful sights—like little peeps into heaven. Can you see them? I shall soon be there!"

"Is there anyone you would like to see before you die?" asked his good friend, the Colonel, when he saw the end was near.

"Yes, I should like to see my mother." So the mother was telegraphed for, and arrived in time to see what the Saviour of the world is able to do for those who trust in Him. And then the young bricklayer went away, as he was longing to do, to be with Jesus, and to thank Him for sending him a friend and teacher in Colonel Gordon.

Another incident in the Colonel's life at Gravesend was the following: A boy in the employ of a tradesman robbed him. The culprit was discovered, and the master angrily declared that he would send him to prison. The mother of the boy was almost heart-broken, but she had heard of Colonel Gordon, and knew that, like his Master, he never turned away from the sad and troubled ones who sought his help. So with all a mother's earnestness, she went at once to the Colonel, and trying to check her tears, she told him the story.

"I cannot understand it, sir; he has always been an honest boy, and I do believe that this is the first and last time. If he could only have another chance! But if he is sent to prison I am afraid it will end in his ruin."

"I am afraid it will. I will do what I can for him. What would you like me to do?"

"Oh, sir, if you would intercede with his master, and persuade him not to send my boy to gaol. I will be grateful to you all my life."

So the Colonel went and saw the tradesman who had been robbed. He was very angry. He thought the boy deserved to be punished, and that it would do him good, and serve him right, and be a warning to him and to others, if he had a few months in prison. But Gordon pleaded very earnestly for him, and everyone respected the Colonel, and was glad to do as he wished.

"What will become of the boy? I cannot keep him here now."

"Oh, no, of course you cannot. But if you will promise not to prosecute him, I will take charge of him, and perhaps we can make a man out of the rascal yet. At least, I should like to try, if you will let me."

"Very well, Colonel. I will not punish him, and I hope he may repay your kindness."

"Thank you very much."

The Colonel spoke very gravely to the boy, telling him how he had barely escaped going to prison, and pointing out to him how he had broken the laws of God, as well as man. "But you shall have a chance," he said. "Your master has kindly forgiven you, and if you ask God, He will forgive you also. And I will help you, if you behave well in the future and try to do your best. Will you?"

"Yes, sir, indeed I will," said the boy, through his tears.

"How would you like to go to sea?" asked the Colonel.

"I should like it very much indeed, sir."

"Very well. Now you must go to school for a year. I will pay for you, and you must attend to your lessons, and try to learn as much as you possibly can in the time. Will you!"

"Yes, sir, I will try to be a good boy in everything."

"You must come up and see me sometimes at the Fort House, and you must spend your evenings at the Boys' Home, and I shall see you there. By these means I shall know whether you are keeping your promise. If at the end of twelve months I find that you have really been a good boy, then I will get you a berth in a good ship, and you shall go to sea."

The boy thanked the Colonel, and so did his mother; and, in fact, they continue to do so, though, perhaps, he does not know it, to this day. My informant says: "The lad is now a man, and goes to sea; while his mother resides in Gravesend still. He has a good character, and both the mother and the sailor bless the name of Gordon, who saved the lad from prison and the mother from disgrace."

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—April 20, Ezekiel iii. 10—21; April 21, Ezekiel ix. 1—11; April 22, Ezekiel xi. 14—25; April 23, Ezekiel xviii. 1—4, 19—24; April 24, Ezekiel xviii. 25—52; April 25, Psalm xcv. 1—11; April 26, Psalm cxvi. 1—13.

Scattering the Seed of the Kingdom.

MANY deeply-interesting testimonies continue to be given by Christian workers abroad as to the importance of free Scripture distribution. From the letters recently sent to Mrs. Robertson, 1, Oakhill-park, Hampstead, N.W., hon. secretary of the Society for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures, we are glad to extract the following:—

"I cannot express to you the joy some have shown when seeing they could read without difficulty the precious book of truth. For example, I gave a Bible to a gentleman who came to our Rue St. Honoré meeting. He was the son of Christian parents, but had left aside the good in order to do according to his heart, and a lot of misery has been his share. I offered him the Bible, which he read day after day. When he left the town for his business he sought to see me in order to tell how changed he was, and how thankful for the Bible and to the God of the Bible.

"A young man of about eighteen was the only son left of a large family. He told me how his father when dying made him promise to do good and give himself to God. Left to himself, he forgot his promises, until he heard in one of the meetings the history of the Prodigal, which history I showed him in the Book he received. He afterwards came asking me for some of the same (New Testaments) to give to his friends."

BOHEMIA.

Writing from Vienna, Dr. Baedeker says: "A railway-guard to whom I gave a Testament, was so happy and joyful that he considered himself highly favoured in having me for his passenger. And when, on the return journey, I travelled again by his train, he did not know how to express his satisfaction. Bohemia needs the Bible, and the people are thankful for it."

RUSSIA.

In later letters, dated Odessa, Dr. Baedeker writes: "At Gratz I had some interesting cases by talking to the people in the street or in shops, and also in a large shoe factory, where, by permission of the director, Scriptures were given to some hundreds in various languages. In the railway-carriage the offer of a New Testament to ladies or gentlemen often led to very interesting conversations. The railway officials were always thankful. A lady who travelled with us to Buda-Pesth accepted a Hungarian Testament for herself and a German Testament for her son. She showed her gratitude by giving us a quantity of the most delicious grapes, grown in her own vineyard.

"I had permission granted me by the authorities to hold public meetings, at which I endeavoured to meet some of the prevailing doubts and to claim the attention for the Bible which is due to it. These meetings were attended by large numbers of Jews and infidels, and there was a brisk demand for Bibles and Testaments by men who had neglected or rejected its claims altogether. They were not poor for the greater part, but they were such as would not have bought Bibles for themselves for lack of interest."

Evangelistic Notes.

Adderley-green, Longton.—Mr. H. Murch, of the Evangelisation Society, has held three weeks' special services here. The meetings were well attended nightly by many of the working-class, whom it is so desirable to bring under the sound of the Gospel.

Lenton, Nottingham.—Special services for a fortnight have been held here, nominally under the auspices of the Church of England, by William Taylor, of the Evangelisation Society, formerly a navvy. The various Nonconformist bodies co-operated heartily, and a spacious hall was crowded night after night. Bands of singers went round the streets an hour before the service each evening, and numbers of non-churchgoers were induced to come in by the kindly invitations given them. Mr. Taylor's addresses, possessing the true Gospel ring, were listened to with earnest attention; there is every reason to believe that lasting good was done.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

DROME.

TWO young English ladies have been holding evangelistic meetings at a village in Drôme; the room has been filled every evening for three months.

SIGNOR CAPPELLINI,

well known for his earnest and successful evangelistic labours among soldiers in Rome, has received an honorary distinction from the King, in recognition of the good work he is carrying on.

BROOKLYN.

Mr. and Mrs. Clark Willson, the singing evangelists, lately held three weeks' series of services at Talmage Tabernacle, Brooklyn, which were attended nightly by large multitudes with good results.

M. FERDINAND DE LESSEPS,

the new member of the French Academy, has been writing about the journey of the Queen of Sheba to Jerusalem to visit Solomon. He says, "There can be no doubt of the journey. All the Eastern peoples attest it, and speak of it in the same terms as the Scriptures. The Abyssinian annals say that the queen lived at Saba, or Azab, the country of incense and myrrh, situated not far from the Red Sea."—Le Christianisme.

GOSPEL PROGRESS IN INDIA.

Rev. D W. Thomas, of Bareilly, writes to The Indian Witness that at a quarterly meeting held by him at a place called Islamnugger, the week before last, forty-one persons, including adults and children, were baptized. Fifteen other adults living in the vicinity are to be baptized at an early day. There had been two hundred baptisms within the bounds of the Rohilcund district during six weeks. This is really an astonishing record.

THE PUBLIC WASH-HOUSES OF PARIS

are the rendezvous of a large number of women. A French lady has begun a work in these places, which God has already blessed, and in which, it is hoped, many other ladies and young Christian girls will participate. The entrance to the lavoirs is quite free. The conversation carried on there is often of a very corrupting kind. What a happy and healthy change to take there words of kindness and encouragement in well-doing, Gospel words, and to sing some of the beautiful popular hymns!—Le Christianisme.

WORKMEN'S HOUSES IN PARIS.

One of the founders of this good work, M. Daniel Meyer, who from a workman has become a well-known merchant, devotes the whole of his time to philanthropic works. One of the inhabitants has written to M. Meyer expressing his great appreciation of the comfort derived from being conveniently housed at a small cost, and also of the moral elevation produced by the prospect of being one day their own landlord, and by the forethought and thrift required to make the necessary payments.—Le Christianisme.

ALGIERS.

M. Bost, of Boufarik, Algeria, pastor of the Reformed Church, has been giving an account at Lausanne of Protestant work done in his large parish, consisting of five or six villages. M. Bost thinks the evangelisation of Mahometan Arabs almost impossible. The Mahometan thinks himself more advanced than the Christian, Mahomet having come after Jesus Christ in order to throw light upon his doctrine and to complete his teaching. M. Bost seeks to get hold of the children, and for this purpose has an orphanage, numbering from thirty to forty young girls and about the same number of boys.—Le Christianisme.

CAMBRIDGEPORT, BOSTON.

A very blessed revival is in progress in the Pilgrim Church, Cambridgeport, and the number of genuine conversions reported has increased by the score. The pastor, the Rev. Geo. R. Leavitt, has been very happy in the choice of means and the way of work. One of the striking incidents of this great revival, which has proceeded with all the old-time fervour, is that a careful list of every member of the congregation not a Christian, so far as known, was made, and hearty prayers were offered in secret and by name for these persons by the pastor and his earnest coadjutors; and the result has been a very remarkable shortening of the list as names of converts began to be taken off that long roll.

ONGOLE, INDIA.

In acknowledging the receipt of some picture slides, the gift of a friend in London, Mr. Keirnan, of Ongole, reports much blessing on the Gospel work in the district. Quite a number of natives have lately been baptized on open profession of faith in Christ. Some of them have had much prejudice and many trials to encounter, but their faithfulness is very marked. Ongole is in the Telegu district, which has of late years yielded a rich harvest of Christian believers, through the labours of the English and American missionaries.

SENEGAL, AFRICA.

Mr. Taylor, a French missionary is seeking to found a new Mission at Dagana in Senegal. The Chief welcomed with joy the proposal to open a school there, and spoke of the general regret among the natives that they had neglected to profit by the school which had once been established there by the Roman Catholic Mission. In some neighbouring villages the missionaries were able to preach the Gospel and pray with the people. When asked if they would like to have a missionary among them, they all, as one man, raised their hands with an enthusiasm which deeply touched the missionaries. The object of their journey was attained; doors are opened, men and money only being needed.—Journal des Missions Evangéliques.

EVANGELISATION IN ROME.

Lord Radstock is continuing to hold special services in Rome. The meetings are fairly well attended, but scarcely sufficiently by the class Lord Radstock wishes to attract. Indifferentism to all religious subjects is the great obstacle here; it is so difficult to persuade men even to go and hear any address in their own language, far more, therefore, when they hear it will be delivered in French; and the women, as a rule, are as indifferent as the men, or they are bigoted Roman Catholics, emtirely under the influence of the priests. This makes missionary work in Rome very hard and discouraging to those who are not well acquainted with the state of Italy. Canon Wilberforce is also in Rome, and has held drawing-room meetings; but these are intended principally for the English visitors. The Rev. A. O'Conor, of Manchester, has lately taken the duty at Trinity Church, Piazza San Silvestro. His sermons are attracting a good deal of attention.—Record.

THE FRENCH SOUTH AFRICAN MISSION

Is thrown into some perplexity by the withdrawal of the Government subsidy hitherto granted to teachers. M. Dieterlen sends from Hermon an energetic appeal to the Church to save them from the dilemma of being without funds or of giving up the schools. The native teachers declare they will remain at their post until after the harvest, even if they do not receive a penny. Mica, one of them, says, "I shall keep my school until this pair of trousers is worn out, then I shall have to see about replacing them."

M. Christol is eagerly studying the Sessonto language. He says: "It will be cause for great joy when I can speak with facility of the Saviour to these dear Basutos whom in France I learnt to love."

In January M. Coillard wrote that he was at length en route for the Zambesi. On February 5 he writes from Pretoria: "The journey was very trying, but much kindness was a compensation." Whilst M. Coillard is advancing with his caravan to fulfill his promise of carrying the Gospel to the Barotsis, the courageous Stanley Arnot is preparing the way.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE-READING ASSOCIATION.—A gathering of the members and branch secretaries of this association was held in the Lecture Hall of the Sunday-school Union, London, on April 1, under the presidency of Mr. F. F. Belsey. The hon. secretary, Mr. C. Waters, gave a statement, showing the progress which the association had made since its establishment in 1882. Up to March 31 of the present year there had been issued upwards of 53,000 membership cards. These were distributed in Australia, New Zealand, the United States, Newfoundland, Russia, France, Cape Colony, and other countries, besides about 650 branches in the United Kingdom. Steps were being taken to introduce the association into the Sunday-schools of the Continent, and already a number of branches had been formed in France, and the card issued in the French language. The chairman, Rev. J. T. Briscoe, of Peckham, and Mr. T. Brain addressed the meeting.

Our Naval Brigade in Egypt and England.

OUR Naval Brigade has been engaged on active service in Egypt. "You will be sorry to hear," writes one, "that H. C. of our ship was killed the other day; he was an earnest worker in our Gospel Temperance band, and when he left he took a little stock of ammunition in the shape of tracts and cards; they were found on his dead body." "Please don't forget to send the 'Blue Backs' regularly," writes another just before the battle of Teb; "we have not time to hold our meetings now, but we do look out for the little 'Blue Backs,' to speak a word to us from you on the battle-field." "Our battalion is stationed at Ramleh," writes a private of the Royal Marines, "and we don't know whether we go to the front, but we are pushing on the Temperance work, and wherever we go we hope by God's blessing, to fight the drink. Send on 'Blue Backs' and Brigade News. Our motto is, 'For Christ and Temperance.'"

The readers of The Christian who have so kindly helped my Gospel and Temperance work in the Royal Navy, will be glad to read these jottings from the Soudan, and to know the value attached by our men to the "Blue Backs." The circulation of these letters now stands at 22,000 per month. They go East and West, North and South, to every corner of the globe, to man-o'-war's-man and merchant sailor alike, and also to our fishermen, carrying the good news of the love of Christ. Every ship in the United States Navy receives them monthly, and they are translated into French, German, Italian, and Dutch.

I think it but right to mention that we are £234 on the wrong side of our books, in our Evangelistic and Temperance work among the blue jackets. I have always found that a simple statement of liabilities has been sufficient, under God, to give me "shiners enough," as the men say, to go forward.

At Portsmouth we are crowded out on every hand, especially in the hall where our meetings are held; the doors are opened, and the place is filled in ten minutes, when they have to be locked again, leaving a disappointed crowd outside. I intend to build a large hall, and meanwhile, during the summer, to use a tent which will hold between 400 and 500 people, and is now about to be pitched on our spare land at the rear. Its expenses are estimated at £65.

Our "Royal Naval Purity Society" is doing a great and good work; about 400 officers and men already belong to it. The testimony of many is, "Would to God it had been started before; we will join it, and God will give us grace to lead pure lives." The admirable pamphlet of Mr. H. Varley to "Young Men and Youths" is the very one to circulate on the lower decks of our ships of war; if anyone would entrust me with a few hundred or a few thousand copies, I would send them on a glorious mission through the British Navy. Our blue jackets are working well at Portsmouth, Devonport, and Sheerness, so that we have a "Naval Brigade" in England as well as in Egypt.

Sailors' Rest, Portsmouth.

NATIONAL BIBLE SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND.—At the April meeting of the Western Board it was agreed to encourage the preparation of a Gospel in the dialect spoken in the Loo Choo Islands. It was reported that 15,000 copies had been issued in China of the Society's new Wun li Gospels. A new colporteur was accepted for work in north-west India. The Evangelical Society of Geneva reported the sale on the Society's behalf, during last winter, of 9826 Bibles and Testaments in France, Switzerland and Italy.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—The last quarterly devotional meeting in connection with the Alliance was held in the Rink Hall, Blackheath. Mr. Henry Hill presided, and Rev. Charles Wilson gave the address. Many friends took part in the after conversation; and it was felt to be a time of real Christian fellowship and interchange of mutual exhortation. These periodical gatherings of the Alliance are of much benefit as a bond of union between the different sections of the Church. We should be glad to see them more largely attended and more widely appreciated.

The Thames Church Mission.

THE friends of this Society held their anniversary on Monday, last week, when two meetings took place in Lower Exeter Hall. The Lord Mayor presided over that in the afternoon, and adverted to the value of a Mission specially adapted to promote the spiritual interests of sailors. They are exposed to many and grave temptations. All of us who are connected with London should do what we can for the sailors who quit our port. There can be no doubt that the labours of the missionaries, both afloat and ashore, are made a blessing to the men to whom they minister the Word of Life.

The report presented by Mr. E. J. Mather, Secretary, gave an interesting account of the labours of the year. Perhaps one of the most encouraging features in it was the reference to the largely increased attendance of sailors at the religious services which have been organised for their benefit. In illustration of the frequent recurrence of instances in which the counsels and prayers of pious parents have been brought before the mind of one who for years had repelled their entreaties, he narrated the following: A man who called himself a sceptic came to one of the agents, and said he hoped God would bless him for speaking so kindly to such rough fellows. When asked if he had benefited from what he had heard, he replied he could not say he had, for there was so much in the Bible that was untrue. "I handed my pocket Bible to him, and requested him to point out to me any of these 'untruths.' I need not say he was unable to do so. We then spoke of the necessity of the new birth, and at Matt. xi. 28—30 he completely broke down; as the tears fell he said, 'That's just what my poor old father and mother used to tell me,' adding, 'They are both in heaven now, but God helping me I will see them again by and by.'" The missionary adds, "We believe he has since accepted the Saviour's invitation, and is now a faithful follower of Christ."

Mr. E. Birkbeck, M.P., bore his testimony to the godly character of many of the fishermen of Norfolk. They were always glad when Saturday night came, because they wished to attend church or chapel on the following day. The floating grog shop, or the "coper," as the vessel was named, was a source of great mischief among fishermen, but the Mission vessels of the Society had been of the utmost service.

Rev. Dr. L. Borrett-White said it was a source of great satisfaction to the Tract Society that they had so vigorous and useful a colporteur as the Thames Church Mission. Other addresses were given by Rev. S. G. Scott, Rev. J. M. Braithwaite, and Mr. H. Fordham. In the evening several of the Society's missionaries gave interesting details of their work among sailors.

MODERN CALCUTTA.—If a Jeremiah were sent forth by God now, he could say many startling things here in Calcutta. Practices which are justified without a scruple of doubt, and which the best men are half-reconciled to through familiarity, would be denounced as inexcusable breaches of the immemorial laws of the kingdom of God. The opium traffic, the liquor licensing, the toleration of brothels, the universal breaking of the Sabbath, the neglect of the worship of God, the selfishness of the press, the unfaithfulness of the ministry, the legislation in the interest of vice, and the vain life of society, would be rebuked in the most terrible way. We have become so accustomed to these things that we are in danger of regarding them as almost unavoidable in the circumstances of the present day. But the Jews had similarly slid into their ways, and could scarcely conceive of a different state of things; so much so that Jeremiah's exhortations simply provoked their anger. We may be sure that when the day of reckoning with this generation comes, the open Bible will be the standard by which every excuse is weighed. Well may the people then call to the rocks to fall upon them and hide them from the wrath of the Lamb.—Indian Witness.

PRISONS IN SOUTHERN ITALY.

By Mr. Chas. Cook.

THE Director-General of Prisons told us to expect that we should find the prisons of Naples in a very bad condition. We asked him "why do you not try to make some improvement in them?" A shrug of the shoulders was the only reply. On reaching Brindisi we went to the old castle overlooking the harbour, now used as a convict establishment. Here there were 750 convicts; to our surprise we found them at work, though it was Sunday. We were told by the Director that they all worked seven days in the week. Here we had some little difficulty about giving away the Gospel portions, but at last we got permission to do so.

As the prisoners saw us giving away the books they came to us in a body. The Governor told them to stand aside and let us pass; still they pressed upon us, and I took all the remaining books I had, and threw them into the midst of the convicts. A hundred men were soon scrambling for the precious books, which consisted of the Gospels of Matthew, Luke, and John. The horrible sound of their chains and fetters clashing and clanging was dreadful to hear. As we re-passed them on our way out their faces had quite brightened up. If our visit had been nothing but a cheerful episode in the dull dreary monotony of their existence, we should have been well repaid. Many of these unhappy prisoners were doomed to life servitude in chains. Many were at work making small fancy articles out of ivory and pearl; toothpicks representing Jesuit priests were favourite articles of manufacture among them. These were on sale in the prison, and could be bought for a mere trifle. The Governor, on handing us the visitors' book to sign, asked us to write what we thought of the prison and its system, as he said, "I have to send it to the Minister of the Interior." The entry I made in the book was as follows: "We found the prison clean, and the prisoners well cared for; but we trust the time will soon come when chains will be no longer required, and every prisoner supplied with a copy of the Word of God."

Of Brindisi itself, I may say it is the dirtiest and most disgusting town I ever saw; its streets are a disgrace to the age in which we live.

Returning from Egypt, we crossed the Mediterranean in an Egyptian steamer; one of the most interesting parts of our Mission was the distribution of the Scriptures to those on board. Turks, Greeks, Albanians, Cretans, Italians, were all delighted to accept our little books, and knots of men were soon found comparing the different Gospels. Our Greek portions were very useful here, and having the Word in four or five different languages, we were able to supply them all. After visiting Greece, we sailed from the Piræus for Brindisi in the Greek steamer Elpis, and here again the variety of costumes told us of the many nationalities which were represented. Most of these were from Albania and Thessaly, and were going to the Island of Corfu. To all of these we gave books, several of them particularly asking us to give them the four Gospels. The sail down the Gulf of Corinth is peculiarly beautiful, and we were favoured with very fine weather, the snow-clad hills reflecting in majestic splendour the glories of the setting sun.

Brindisi was soon reached, and a run of thirteen hours brought us to Naples. As we had been informed, we found the prisons dirty, and badly managed. In every cell and dormitory the food wasted was most noticeable; as many as eight or nine loaves might be observed in the cell, whilst a quantity of food was lying on the floor. We were again privileged to give to the men imprisoned the Word of Life.

We had just time to drive as far as Puzzioli (the ancient Puteoli where Paul landed), and see the large convict prison there, which we found well kept and clean, and where the officials permitted us to offer to the convicts our books, and graciously received them themselves. I was asked by a friend whether I did not think that after we had gone the books would be taken from them? I do not think so. Italy has lately made rapid strides, and the priests have far less power than they had. In proof of this I am able, with thankfulness, and yet surprise, to say that I have been officially informed that under certain conditions I could be allowed to put a number of Bibles in every prison library in Italy. The Director-General will permit portions of the Scriptures to be distributed to every prison.

Visiting Indian Tea Plantations.

WE have received from the Secretary of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society an account of a tour of visitation in Bholan Dooars, by Rev. H. Rylands Brown, of Darjiling, in December and part of January last, under the auspices of the Society. We extract some portions:—

"After travelling all day I reached Teendarin, where are the workshops on the Darjiling and Himalayan Railway. Visited and held meetings; good and impressive services; some Babus were present. Spent several hours among the men on the subject of Temperance; exhorted some to abstain and others to stand fast. Went to a neighbouring plantation; at evening prayer we numbered seven; my host had not had a minister in his bungalow for some years past. Visiting several plantations, met with a Christian brother young in the faith, and was, I trust, the means of encouraging and strengthening him. Moved on into a district, newly opened up, but already containing upwards of sixty European planters. My proposal at one bungalow to close the day in prayer was accepted with the remark that 'that sort of thing was not much known in those parts.'

"At a place where I stayed for the night, met a number of planters, and was asked to conduct worship and to make comments on the reading, a most unusual occurrence; I afterwards found that a Roman Catholic, a member of the Church of England, a Scotch Free Churchman, and another, had bowed with me that night in prayer.

"After dispatching coolies and bearer with my baggage, I began a heavy day. I called on two planters, whom I had not met before, and then rode on to breakfast with another, the son of an English clergyman, whose sister had written to me to visit him; was received most cordially. Again I mounted, and made my last visit in the Dooars, at the bungalow of a lady and gentleman who had some months before lost a little one. Although it was the middle of the day, we sang together; I read and commented on the Scriptures, and then we bowed the knee in prayer. It was a very delightful and refreshing season. I then rode off for another sixteen miles, having already ridden ten since the morning. My servant and the coolies did not turn up, so I had to sleep in a wretched Dâk Bungalow, in Dâk Bungalow blankets.

"During this tour I distributed copies of Dr. Mackay's works, Spurgeon's sermons, and other literature, including some Temperance pamphlets. The many open doors convinced me that God was working with me."

The toil and hardships endured by Mr. Brown in this journey resulted in a very severe attack of fever, which prevented him from proceeding on a tour in Assam, which had been planned for him; but the gratifying intelligence has been received, that through the blessing of God he has been quite restored. Any help towards the important work of this society will be thankfully received by the Secretary, Rev. Peter Bannatyne, 7, Adam-street, Strand, London, W.C.; or 9, London-street, Edinburgh.

MR. W. R. BRADLAUGH has just closed a very successful series of meetings in Dalbeattie, under the joint auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association and the E. U. Church. Many striking cases of conversion have occurred, and the blessing of the Lord has crowned the work.

HOLINESS AND FAITH HEALING.

(BY A CORRESPONDENT.)

A CONFERENCE on these subjects was held during the past week at Trinity Church, Triangle, Hackney. Meetings were arranged for the afternoon and evening of each day, from Monday to Friday inclusive. The proceedings throughout were presided over by the pastor of the church, Rev. John Allen. Among the speakers were Rev. W. E. Boardman, Mrs. Baxter, Admiral Fishbourne, Dr. Asa Mahan, Miss Murray, Dr. Woods Smyth, Miss Mason, and others. Praise, prayer, personal testimony, and addresses, with here and there a solo sung by Mrs. Somerton, were the usual order of each service. There was an evident spirit of expectancy, and it is not too much to say that a large measure of God's presence and power was vouchsafed. Requests for prayer were presented, not only with unusual earnestness but with an almost startling confidence of immediate answers.

In referring to the meetings held throughout the past year, Mr. Allen stated that many sick persons had been healed, the greater part of whom had returned to give praise to God. These included several cases of consumption, bronchitis, hip disease, internal ruptures, diseased heart, abscesses, three of cancer, and two of blindness. One of the most remarkable was that of a boy who was deaf and dumb, but who now both hears and speaks. Personal testimonies to healing through faith and prayer were given by many present.

The general teaching of the speakers at the Conference was clear and definite. Holiness was defined as consisting of God's indwelling in the heart, and an absolute abandonment of all known sin. The doctrine of sinless perfection was universally disclaimed, and the root principle of sin in the believer was shown to be not annihilated, but held in subjection and kept under. The argument for bodily healing was based on the theory that all sickness is of the devil, whose works Christ came to destroy; and that the purpose of redemption includes wholeness of the entire being, spirit, soul, and body. The passages of Scripture chiefly quoted in support of the doctrine were "I am the Lord that healeth thee," "Himself took our infirmities and bare our sicknesses," and the well-known passage in James v. about calling for the elders of the Church, &c. Selections from the Messianic Psalms, which disclose the state of our Lord's sinless body, were referred to, as indicating that He bare our sickness as well as our sins. The case of Job, the woman whom Satan bound eighteen years, the custom of the ancient Church of delivering to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, were dilated upon. The simplicity of believing for bodily healing was shown to have its immediate parallel in the faith that looks to Christ for pardon and sanctification. Not the least striking feature in this movement is the almost universal experience of great spiritual blessing accompanying the physical healing, while the power for service simultaneously conferred is in some cases almost incredible.

As the services continued day by day, the interest increased, and the meeting of Wednesday evening was more largely attended than any previous one. Practical results were urged and looked for at each service, many standing up by way of request for prayer for healing of soul. One lady was anointed for healing of the body. Nothing could exceed the discretion manifested by the pastor in the conduct of the meetings, as well as the remarks which he interspersed throughout. All present were entreated to seek with whole heart so priceless a blessing, a sanctified soul in a healed body; also, to be taken up with the Great Healer rather than with the healing. The blessed life could only be known by getting into it.

It is held by the conveners of the Conference that the commission of our Lord to his disciples to go forth and preach the Gospel and heal the sick, has never been abrogated, though so long lost sight of and neglected by the Church. Also, that in these last days the gifts of the Saviour to his Church will be stirred up and revived in manifest power. A striking instance of the twofold healing was seen on Wednesday evening in the case of one who had served the devil and drink twenty-six years, and made himself a perfect wreck both in mind and body. He was, however, saved, sanctified, and ultimately healed. Six weeks after his conversion he was preaching the Gospel in front of the public-house where most of his former time and money had been spent.

Letters to the Editor.

HEALING BY FAITH.

DEAR SIR.—As this question is seething in our midst, Rev. Jos. Cook's thoughtful observations are very seasonable. It would be desirable, however, that he should give us his reasons for the "conviction," that miracles are no longer to be expected. I often hear the assertion made, that "the age of miracles has passed," but when I ask what proof from Scripture the assertors have, I never get them beyond a fresh assertion. It would be very important to get the well-digested views of a man like Mr. Cook.

I cannot have the smallest doubt, from all I have heard and seen, that functional disorders are frequently healed by prayer alone—of itself a great boon to the Church of God, but in no sense a miracle. Mr. Cook is, however, mistaken in believing that Mrs. Asa Mahan is the only case recorded of the healing of organic disease; I have both read and heard of professed cures of cancer, consumption, catarrh, diseased bones, &c. The healing of such without means is as much of a miracle to-day as in the days of our Lord. Mr. Cook's demand, therefore, for a scientific investigation of these cases is surely reasonable and right, and cannot be refused by Christian men.

Supposing the fact of miracles to be clearly sustained, what is the nature of miracle-producing faith? I wish Mr. Cook and others would give their opinion on the following point: What sort of "faith" is spoken of in 1 Cor. xii. 9? It can neither be saving faith nor the "faith" which is part of the "fruit" of the Spirit in Gal. v. 22, because all believers have the one, and more or less of the other. But it is one of the "gifts" of the Spirit which are "diverse," given "severally" to "one" this, to "another" that. May this not be the special faith needed for miraculous cures, or any other special and particular exercise of faith? If it is given by the Spirit "as He will," for his special purposes, there can be no sin of unbelief in its not being possessed. I am sure that if a clear answer were given on this point it would be a great relief to the tender consciences of many invalids who find themselves reluctantly obliged to use ordinary means.

A Constant Reader.

A MODEL CHURCH.

[We have much pleasure in publishing the following letter from our good and tried friend Mr. Geo. Kelsey.]

My Dear Brother,—As an old friend with whom I have enjoyed much Christian fellowship for many years past, you may be pleased to learn that I have been here at Mere for the last five weeks assisting one of our old Congregational churches, which seems to continue firm in the faith and service of Christ, the one great desire being the prosperity of the work of God, the growth in grace of the Christians, and the salvation of the lost.

This church has been established about ninety years; and from what I hear, I conclude that it has always been marked for its piety and zeal. The names of the late Mr. and Mrs. C. Jupe are mentioned by the people with much feeling. They were two most devoted members. The church has unitedly requested me to continue for the present and render what help I may be able. You know I am nothing. Let me ask your prayers that I may have strength of body and all needed grace to do all the Lord would have me do to his glory.

The few weeks I have been here I have noticed about 300 at each of the services on Sunday. There is an "after-meeting" in the evening for prayer and conversation with the anxious. The Monday evening meeting is attended by about 120, and is continued for about one hour and a half; after the first twenty minutes the meeting is "open," and any of the brethren and sisters, who will, lead in prayer.

There are two branches of this church, one at Zeals and the other at Huntingford, where the Christians unite in the special communion service. One of the members also conducts a cottage meeting on Sunday and Thursday evenings, about a mile from the town, where many have been brought to the Lord lately. On a recent occasion when I was at this service the room was packed; about sixty present. After reading a portion of Scripture and speaking for about twenty minutes, the meeting was "open," and ten or more took part in brief words and earnest prayer. There are other cottage meetings, Bible-classes, two Sunday-schools, two day-schools, mothers' meetings, and other good work. Most of the people seem to be members of the Temperance Society.

Nearly every day I visit some of the people in their homes, many of whom live over two miles from the town, and in most of the houses and cottages I engage in prayer, and very often others kneeling with me follow in prayer.

As you are deeply interested in every branch of the Church of Christ, and in all good work, pray that the Christians here may be kept faithful and that there may be given increased prosperity. And should you publish this letter, I ask the same prayer of each Christian reader.—I remain, my dear Brother, yours in Christian love, Mere, Wilts. Geo. Kelsey.

Christians and Jews.

SIR,—There has been some correspondence in your columns lately as to the duty of Christians towards Palestine. Allow me to remark that the duty of Christians to the Jews is a more important question. To show forth the truth of Christianity by deeds and by words is a plain duty.

For nearly forty years some help has been afforded to the destitute Jews in the Holy City by means of donations sent to me. At times we were able to employ some of the men on the plot of ground near the city, which I still hold for that purpose, and where the first serious attempt was made to train those who were willing to earn their bread by out-of-door work. Employment on this land has been impossible of late for want of funds. Women and girls were employed in sewing and knitting, and thus was begun the "Jewess's Institution." The small sums entrusted to me have been spent in relief distributed by a lady on the spot, in the shape of coffee, sugar, rice and soap. Her monthly reports are very touching; the sick, the blind, and the infirm being chief sharers in this small bounty.

The urgent need of the Russian refugees in London has absorbed most of the means at our disposal. The care of the nearly two hundred placed in Cyprus, when the Turkish Government opposed the settlement of Jewish colonies in Syria, has taxed our whole energies. We are anxious to carry out the earnest desire of Lord Shaftesbury, that a well-founded colony may be established there in his lifetime as a refuge for persecuted Jews.

The land granted by the Government in Cyprus requires far more outlay than the authorities at first supposed. The sinking of wells has, however, proved successful, and an abundant supply of spring-water is secured. Cottages should be built at once, and the corn land cleared for next sowing season. Each double cottage will cost about £120—clearing of scrub, pruning and planting, all require outlay.

Yours obediently,

E. A. Finn,

Secretary to Syrian Colonisation Fund.

THE WORKING LADS OF LONDON.—Last week a meeting was held in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, Aldersgate-street, under the presidency of Sir Wm. M'Arthur, M.P., in support of the Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel. The institution was inaugurated seven years ago, with the object of promoting the physical, mental, and moral improvement of boys employed in warehouses and shops. It was stated by the honorary secretary, Mr. Henry Hill, jun., that over 1100 lads had been benefited by it, having been provided during their leisure hours with the means of culture and of healthy amusement. A site had been purchased, upon which it was proposed to erect a building with accommodation for 1000 youths. The estimated cost was £9000, of which £4200 had been already subscribed or promised. On the motion of Mr. Sheriff Clarence Smith, a resolution commending the objects of the institute was cordially carried.

Notices of Books, &c.

Valuable pamphlets have been written by Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., on National Progress and Poverty, and Fallacies of Socialism. William Reeves, 185, Fleet-street. 1d. each.

Mr. D. C. Joseph, of the Evangelical Mission to Israel, Hackney-road, E., has published a German edition of his Hebrew Sheet Almanack for the current year. Copies may be had direct from Mr. Joseph for 1d. each.

Gospel Flags. These are a series of the ensigns of all nations, with selected Scripture texts in the language of each. They are well calculated to attract the attention of sailors. In sheets assorted, or packets, in any language, 6d., Thames Church Mission, 31, New Bridge-street.

The demand for Professor Drummond's remarkable work on Natural Law in the Spiritual World (Hodder & Stoughton) shows no sign of diminution. The sale of the seventh edition has been more rapid than that of the earlier editions. Such a success by a new writer is a striking sign of the keen interest taken in the relation of nature to the supernatural.

The Biblical Treasury. Old Testament Series. Vol. I. 2s. Sunday-school Union. This is a very valuable and useful work, alike for students and teachers, containing as it does much information in a small compass. Being a new edition of a well-known work, it alludes to recent discoveries which throw light upon the biblical allusions to many habits and customs of the East which are not yet generally known.

Is it Nothing to You? 1s. By Rev. H. Rowley. Hamilton, Adams & Co. This introduces some pertinent questions and important facts on the subject of Social Purity. Appeals and statements of this kind have done much of late years to rouse public opinion from its slumber. While, therefore, we gratefully acknowledge the good which has been accomplished, we still welcome every fresh effort to strengthen the hands of those engaged in pulling down the strongholds of sin and rescuing the fallen.

An Earnest Remonstrance Against the Recital of the Athanasian Creed in our Churches. By "A Member of the Church of England." 6d. Ridgway, Piccadilly. The title of this book speaks for itself. The author points out the origin of the creed and the supposed necessity for it, to combat the various heresies rampant in the Early Church. There is much historical information in the work, and by comparing it with the creed itself the reader will form his own conclusions.

Pity for the Perishing; or, The Power of the Bible in London. With Introduction by Earl Cairns. By G. Holden Pike. James Clarke & Co. There are few persons more qualified than Mr. Pike to write upon the condition of the London poor, which for many years he has made a special study. We trust this well-written, interesting record will serve to keep up the interest so widely felt at this time. Several chapters are devoted to the description of such leading agencies as Dr. Barnardo's Homes, the work of Mr. George Holland, Mr. Hatton, and others, and the valuable labours of Lord Shaftesbury.

There seems no abatement of the interest that is generally felt in the remarkable career of General Gordon. At least three fresh volumes have lately been added to the biographical literature of this Christian soldier. Two of these are before us. From one of them—The Life of General Gordon, by the author of "New World Heroes" (Walter Scott)—we have made a deeply interesting extract on another page. The book is written with marked ability, shows a high appreciation of the Christian character of the man, and is altogether a very succinct and worthy record of a wonderful life. It brings the General's history down to a very recent date. The other book—Chinese Gordon; the Christian Hero, by Major Colquhoun (Tract & Book Society, Edinburgh) has not been compiled with the same care and skill, but it will be sure to interest many readers who cannot possess themselves of the larger and more elaborate works.

APRIL MAGAZINES AND SERIALS.

Among other new serials announced by Messrs. Cassell are The Book of Health: Popular Gardening; and a re-issue of The Household Guide. The third instalment of The Encyclopædic Dictionary (1s.) is marked by the same comprehensive and exhaustive treatment as its predecessors.

Mr. Spurgeon has seldom penned a more timely utterance than the brief but pregnant paper—"Children offered to Moloch"—that takes the first place in the current Sword and Trowel (3d. Passmore & Alabaster). It is a grave indictment, but in no way exaggerated. We commend it to the serious consideration of parents.

In The Congregationalist (1s. Hodder & Stoughton), Mr. Guinness Rogers continues his articles on "Mr. Moody's Work." This month, in a most friendly yet candid spirit, he discusses it in its relation to the churches. We would direct the attention of young preachers to Mr. Pearson's practical and sensible paper on "Pulpit Preparation."

Archdeacon Farrar's latest work, The Early Days of Christianity, is being republished in sixpenny serial parts, by Messrs Cassell & Co. The first part, now before us, furnishes a very vivid glimpse of the fearfully degraded condition of the Roman world in Apostolic times. According to the author, the infamous Nero was the Antichrist. In this part we are also introduced to the later history of the Apostle Peter and his relations to the Church Catholic. The work will be completed in ten parts.

Those who like more substantial fare than fiction, however artistically garnished the literary dish may be, will find ample material to choose from in the April issues of Good Words and The Sunday Magazine (Isbister & Co.). The short paper in the former serial, "Our Vile Body," by Mr. Walford, has a message that needs to be attended to in these high-pressure days. No reader of the Sunday Magazine will be likely to miss the short and highly sympathetic sketch of "General Gordon, the Christian Hero," by Mr. H. C. Ewart.

Messrs. Partridge's Monthlies. The Welcome has a fine coloured frontispiece engraving of "Lake Erie." There are sketches of the late Lord Lytton and Mr. John Hullah. An article on "Paternoster-row and its Associations" has a special interest in view of the recent disastrous fire. Mr. Anderson, the railway poet, contributes a vigorous poem on the "Anvil and Newspaper" to The British Workman. What could possibly be more attractive, each in its sphere, than The Family Friend, The Friendly Visitor, The Children's Friend, The Infants' Magazine, and The Band of Hope Review?

In The Sunday at Home (Religious Tract Society) we have, besides much other pleasant and profitable reading, an illustrated sketch of Addington, the residence of the Archbishop of Canterbury; "A Visit to Hayti;" a laudatory review of Thomas à Kempis, "Invitation of Christ," by Rev. Paxton Hood; "The Land of the Pharaohs," by Rev. J. Ossian Davies. True to its time-honoured title, The Leisure Hour has a full and varied store of articles on general subjects. Friendly Greetings ought to find a ready entrance into many a humble home. The Cottager and Artizan and The Child's Companion are beyond all praise. The Tract Magazine should not be overlooked by the district visitor.

The Quiver (Cassell & Co.) has gained an honourable place among its contemporaries by the prominence it gives to sketches of the many phases of Christian work to be found in London. This month, for instance, it has appreciative accounts of Mr. Hatton's work among thieves, of the operations of Mr. Jones' "London Samaritan Society," and of a "Children's Bazaar" for one of the metropolitan hospitals. The other issues received from Messrs. Cassell & Co. are: Concise Cyclopædia, Peoples of the World, Old and New London, Greater London, Canon Farrar's St. Paul, World of Wonders, Dr. Ellicot's New Testament Commentary, Doré's Bible, Magazine of Art, Roberts' Holy Land, History of Protestantism, &c.

We have also received the following April Magazines:—The Voice of Warning—Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-school Magazine—Sunday School World—Indian Female Evangelist—London City Mission Magazine—Band of Hope Chronicle—Jewish Herald—Old Jonathan—Church Missionary Gleaner—Preacher's Analyst—Woman's Work—Life of Faith—Service for the King—Regions Beyond—Evangelical Christendom—Universal Instructor—Young England—Postman—Expositor—Clergyman's Magazine—On the Road—The Messenger—South American Missionary Magazine—Western Temperance Herald—Onward and Upward—Children's Advocate—Gospel Temperance Monthly—Irish Congregational Magazine—Congregational Magazine—Y.M.C.A. Beehive—Light and Truth.

"THE SEA-SHELL MISSION."—We have at various times been asked for details of the work of this Mission, and for the present address. Can any of our readers supply us with the desired information?

"Whose Names are in the Book of Life."

Phil. iv. 3.

TO Reason cold, these words may seem
A fancy fond, a golden dream;
But hearts that love will still believe,
And, in the figure, truth receive.
I trust the heavenly oracle;
O chide me not, but let me tell
How fair the page, as snow-drift white,
How soft the lines of rosy light,
Where shine the names of those on earth
Who boast a more than royal birth,
Whose lineage, traced in Jesu's blood,
Proclaims each one a child of God.

Athirst for knowledge, wouldst thou look
And read the wonders of that Book?
Can wisdom tell what names are there,
That earth may know each royal heir?
Not yet to man the power is given
To read the heraldry of heaven;
No mortal eye looks o'er the roll,
Nor scans the bright mysterious scroll.

But oh, that Spirit, vast and high,
That soundeth ev'ry mystery!
He searcheth all: He knoweth this—
Who are the heirs of endless bliss;
And here on earth there is a shrine,
Where sounds the loving voice divine,
That says to each, "Child, thou art mine!"

Where may we hear that wondrous voice
That bids the burden'd soul rejoice;
That tells the secret of the Lord,
That sweetest, dearest, precious word;
That makes me know that I am known,
And have a place before the throne?

Oh, speaks that voice in royal halls,
Or in the shade of temple walls,
'Neath fretted roof, or classic dome,
Or in the peasant's humble home?
Or in the desert, wild and bare,
Oh, shall I hear the message there?
In whirlwind fierce, or earthquake dire,
In rushing flood, or scathing fire;
Or on the shore, or on the wave,
Or at the cradle, or the grave?

It is not thus the solemn tone
Proclaims the True and Faithful One.
Not palace walls, nor temples high
Where turrets seek the arching sky;
Nor desert lone, nor rolling seas,
Nor rugged shore, nor floating breeze,
Nor leafy forests' deepest gloom,
Nor yet the cradle or the tomb,
Doth speak to men, assuring them
What brows shall wear the diadem.

To what fair region shall we roam?
Stay, weary wand'rer, look at home.
From home and country do not part;
The word is nigh thee, in thy heart,
The living word of simple faith.
Believe in Christ, and then the path
Is opened up before thine eye,
That gains the portals of the sky.
The voice that frees from slavish thrall
Sounds in the heart, or not at all.
It tells thee not who else has rest;
But says to thee that thou art blest.
Tho' all beside is mystery,
Let—"Thou art Mine," still comfort thee.

Oh, look within, nor look around;
Just where you stand is holy ground.
In endless circles cease to roam;
But hear the voice that speaks at home.
For he at home who cannot rest,
Go where he will, is nowhere blest.

Believe and live! you then shall know,
Tho' toiling long and hard below,
That in the Book of Life above,
Thy name is writ in tints of love;
Writ by a nail-imprinted hand,
That guards thee in a stranger land.
And He shall bring thee on the way;
And, in the last tremendous day,
While flames encircle either pole,
Unfurl the long and dazzling scroll.
Oh, may thy name at last appear,
As surely there as mine is here!

Lewisham. Joseph Pitter.

Dublin Mission.

THE Mission closed in most of the churches on Monday 7th inst., and the general testimony is that it has been a means of much spiritual blessing to the city at large. The congregations continued to grow and increase throughout the week, and the after-meeting work greatly increased in interest, large numbers of persons being desirous of receiving personal help.

Mr. Aitken continues preaching to very large congregations at St. Patrick's Cathedral under somewhat novel circumstances in Mission work. It is the custom of the Cathedral that Bach's "Passion Music" is sung during each evening in Holy Week. The custom could not be abandoned on account of the Mission services, as the "Passion Music" is greatly appreciated here, and large congregations always attend to hear it. It was arranged that Mr. Aitken's Mission sermon should follow the musical recitation or representation of the circumstances of the Passion, and each night it has been observable that there has been no exodus from the church at the close of the music. The vast congregation has waited on, evidently quite as much interested in the Mission preaching as in the musical part of the proceedings, and each night there has been a most satisfactory after-meeting in the Lady Chapel. A grand Temperance meeting was held on Tuesday evening, to follow up the effects of the Mission; it was addressed by Dean Dickinson, the Archdeacon Shore, Mr. Berguer, and Mr. Aitken.

Mission Appeals.

WHITCHURCH, HANTS.—Mr. THOMAS SALMON is anxious to receive gifts of books, periodicals, and tracts on behalf of the Navvy Mission. There are a thousand of these men employed on the neighbouring railways; it is important to scatter good seed amongst them.

RAILWAY MISSION.—Mr. GEORGE CLARKE brings the claims of this work before our readers, seeing that the public are so largely dependent upon railway servants day by day. They number something like 400,000 in Great Britain, and this Mission puts forth worthy efforts to reach them. Address: 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

NORTHAMPTON.—The Salvation Army have lately acquired the old county prison in this town as an evangelistic centre of work, according to their peculiar method. Mr L. J. HOUGHTON, 30, Lawrence-street, Northampton, appeals to our readers for help in raising the £800 needed to complete the purchase and fit up the premises.

THE OTLEY AND WHARFEDALE MISSION has formed quite a large organisation of Gospel meetings, Bible classes, mothers' meetings, and other branches of evangelistic work. Arrangements are being made for tent services during the coming summer in the country districts. Help may be sent to Mr. JONATHAN SINCLAIR, Westgate, Otley.

THE LOWER PARK-ROAD MISSION, PECKHAM, finds ample labour amongst the poor and outcast. Many cases of conversion have occurred, and there is special need for such work, a large area being without church or chapel. Gifts, comprising boots and left-off clothing of all kinds, will be gladly acknowledged by Mr. LEWIS WOOD, 104, Lower Park-road.

THE LONDON CITY MISSION Committee propose to open a hall in the midst of "Horrible London," lately so graphically described by Mr. G. R. Sims. It is a neighbourhood utterly forsaken by respectable people, but it is hoped that those who reside in the suburbs will be willing to support those who still remain to labour in the courts and alleys of "Outcast London." Contributions will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, Mr. J. W. CHISHOLM, 8, Kennington-park-road, S.E.

STRATFORD, E.—Sir,—The legacy of seeking the anxious souls left in my parish of Stratford by the recent visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey makes me doubly anxious to lose no time in re-building my Mission Hall. I had a year ago, in a very poor and populous part of my district, a Mission building, which was doing a good and blessed work. Many were there brought to the saving knowledge of Christ; but, alas! it was wholly destroyed by fire. I have been ever since seeking to re-build it, but with other building operations going on in the parish, I have only succeeded in raising £1500 out of £1000 required. May I appeal to your readers to help me? It is of great importance not to lose the summer weather for building.—Yours obediently, RAYMOND P. PELLY, Vicar of Stratford, London, E.

THE NEEDS OF PORT SAID.—Writing on March 22, Mrs. Prinsep says: "I regret much that owing to the non-arrival at Port Said of Mr. Eoll, who has, I understand, been prevented leaving England by illness, and owing also to my not having funds to pay the rent of the hall lately secured, I was obliged, reluctantly, to give it up. More than ever is it to be desired that there should be a room open for the poor sailors to go to. One said to me the other day, "Oh I wish we had a place to go to!" Do make this matter a subject of prayer. I trust that Mr. Eoll may soon be able to be at Port Said, for someone is sorely needed." Her permanent address is Mrs. Edward Prinsep, care of H. S. King & Co., 65, Cornhill, E.C.

BOURNVILLE,
THE "COCOA" TOWN.

[From a Roving Correspondent.]

The very next day I made my tour of Messrs. Cadbury's premises. Proceeding by the Midland Railway, I found myself, on alighting from the train, at a little wayside station, situated in a charming valley, which might have served for Rip Van Winkle's "Sleepy Hollow" but for the hive of industry it contained, and the strong, permeating, ever-present, and pleasant odour, as of freshly poured-out chocolate, such as strikes the olfactory senses on entering a Spanish or Italian café abroad. On either side were gently undulating hills, watered by a tiny streamlet that meandered in and out between the ridges and trim meadows, on which horses and cattle were grazing; farm-houses peeping out here and there amidst the hedgerows and copses in the most rustic fashion, as if "far from the din of cities and the busy haunts of men." Arriving at Messrs. Cadbury's works, I could not help but notice the evident desire displayed by the firm to contribute in ways many and various, which can scarcely be recorded here, to the comfort, happiness, health, and well-being of the workpeople who have the fortune to be employed by them; the entire little community, numbering over six hundred souls, being bound together by the kindly influences of temperance, religion, and thoughtful watchfulness, by ties dearer and closer than the mere common bond between employés and capitalists, of a stipulated service being given for a stipulated wage, as is the case in more mercenary establishments of the present day. A cricket and football ground is provided for the men, and for the young women and girls a spacious playground, fitted with swings and other contrivances contributory to outdoor enjoyment. These privileges are thoroughly appreciated; and the joyous indications of innocent pleasure that emanate from "haunts of leisure," in periphrastic phrase, "between times," were refreshing to the ears of a sojourner in cities like myself, for it was delightful to hear the cheery shouts of the men at play, and the merry laughter of the girls.

Spacious dining-rooms have been provided separately on the premises for both men and women. Stoves and cooking apparatus have been erected here, and hot dinners can be procured in a very few minutes. So complete are the cuisine arrangements that there is really no delay. In the females' cooking department a gas-oven has been fitted, on which about 220 dinners are cooked daily. In addition to this, an apparatus for frying, together with the necessary pans, has been provided by the firm, for cooking chops and steaks, and such-like.

But I must go on to describe the manufacture of crude cocoa into the luxurious beverage which we relish so much at breakfast. The cocoa plant, I may say, is no stranger to me, for I went out to the West Indies when quite a child, and almost the most vivid impression I have of tropical vegetation is of seeing the bright green leaves of the cocoa tree, with its elliptical, oval-pointed, yellowish-purple fruit—something like a vegetable marrow of a somewhat peculiar shape. Each of the cocoa fruit pods contains some twenty to forty seeds or "beans," which are imbedded in a sort of creamy, thick, acid pulp. Common enough in the West Indian islands of the Leeward group that stud the heel of the Caribbean Sea—such as Grenada, Trinidad, St. Vincent, and Cariacua—where the mountainous nature of the ground gives it that shelter which it requires as much as the heat for ripening, it is also to be found in Nicaragua, Honduras, Central America, Brazil, and Demerara; and also, too, in the Mauritius and the unfortunate island of Madagascar, which the French are now trying to find some pretext for annexing.

When the fruit is quite ripe it is gathered, generally, by being sliced from the boughs by a cutlass wielded by the arm of some stalwart negro; the pod being slit open and the nuts, with their creamy adjunct which holds them all together, placed in casks, where they are pressed down by weights and left to ferment, so as to get rid of the pulp, and, as it is said, improve the flavour of the cocoa. After some little time has elapsed the nuts are then placed in wide open trays in the Boucan or drying-house, where they are exposed for some days to the sun, after which they are placed in bags and exported to England.

The first process the cocoa undergoes is to cleanse it from all impurities of dust, dirt, and such-like that accompanied it from the land of its birth. This is done by sifting it in a long cylinder fitted with variously graduated sieves. From these the nuts drop, automatically assorted to several sizes, into boxes below, cleansed from all superfluous substances, and ready for "cooking"—their second experience being to be roasted in revolving cylinders over bright coke fires. It is requisite for those who have charge of the cuisine to determine the precise period at which the nuts are sufficiently roasted, for very much depends upon this point. A miscalculation in time, of course, would tend to spoil the flavour of the nibs, not to speak of burning them, and so ruin them altogether. In connection with this process, methods of treatment peculiar to the establishment are successively adopted. After being roasted, the nuts are placed in trays to cool, the fresh air speedily reduces the temperature of the cocoa beans, and they are then ready to be what is technically termed "broken down." The now crisp, roasted nuts are placed in a hopper, and afterwards raised by an elevator and passed through a machine, which gently cracks them, disengaging the hard thin skin, which by this means can be separated from the nutritive portion of the nut—that is, the rich glossy kernel, known in the market as "cocoa nibs." The separation is effected by a winnowing machine. From the outlet of the cracking machine the husk and nut are carried to a point over the "winnower," and as the cracked nut falls into its allotted receptacle below, a powerful blast of cold air blows away the shelly parts into an upper division of the same receptacle. They are next taken to the grinding room, where a series of revolving mill-stones speedily resolve them into a thick, brown fluid. From this liquid paste the oil is extracted, of which there is some 50 per cent. in the nuts; and then the substance, without the admixture of a single foreign element, but pure as it came originally from the tree, with the exception of being deprived of its fat, having "done Banting," so to speak, is known as "Cadbury's Cocoa Essence," celebrated for its purity and nourishing properties all the world over—an Essence which, indeed, has gained the little town on the banks of the Bourn its local habitation and name. The cocoa essence having been reduced to a very fine powder is then weighed and packed automatically in the well-known packages familiar to all cocoa consumers by an ingenious American machine which contrives to measure and put up some twenty thousand parcels of this theobromine—or "food of the gods," as Linnæus christened it—per diem.

The next article of Messrs. Cadbury's manufacture, and one almost as important as that of their cocoa essence, is the Mexican and other sweet chocolate for bonbonnières and other dainty uses to numerous to be specified. The pure cocoa is in the first place incorporated with the best white sugar in a machine called a mélangeur or mixer, where heavy granite rollers like mill-stones set on end, and a double-bladed knife acting as a screw propeller, thoroughly incorporate the substances into each other, after which it is flavoured with vanilla. The "Chocolate," as the material is now called, is then run into moulds, and cooled on stone slabs in a cellar, the temperature of which approaches more to the freezing point than any other part of the establishment I visited.

After seeing chocolate thus "put through its faces," in slang phrase, I was ushered into the cream-moulding room, where bonbons are manufactured apparently in quantities enough to fill all the bonbonnières of the juvenile world. The place seemed, really, more like a mill—that is, a flour-mill—than a chocolate turn-out, for everything here—the floor, the ceiling, and all surroundings—was covered with a white efflorescent deposit, while pulverised particles of similar substance permeated the very air and every nook and cranny in the place. As for the girls working here, they were like so many pretty little milleresses, and seemed to perform their task of manufacturing those delicious chocolate creams, which some of us with a sweet tooth wot of, with a skilful expertness which constant practice in filling the tiny moulds could only teach. They manage to fill each mould with just sufficient of the cream and no more, thereby preventing waste of time if not of materials. Hardly is this done than the "creams" solidify, and when cooled they are taken to another department and coated with chocolate, whereupon all that has to be done is to eat them!

To turn to another industry in full work in this manufactory, and one almost rivalling the production of the cocoa essence, chocolate, and bonbons, one must imagine a change of avocation, and go in for carpentering, paperhanging, and tin smithery.

Of course thousands upon thousands—nay, millions, of millboard boxes to contain cocoa essence, in addition to fancy cardboard boxes and other dainty devices for holding the various chocolate confections, have to be made in the year, and much ingenuity is displayed in their manufacture; the demand being so enormous for their cocoa essence that the firm had to employ elaborately constructed machinery to suit their requirements, one handy aid to labour cutting the card into the required shapes while a carefully devised appliance, not unlike an envelope-folding machine, glues the part, together and perfects the packet shell; the "output" of these two silent mechanical workers being some 12,000 each daily. Other machines are also employed to make the tin boxes for the outer casing of the essence, one especially cutting out the box-shape from the sheet-tin, forming the top and bottom, bending the sides together, and stamping the whole into a completed form, without any solder or other annealing substance, in the most wonderful way. Of all the departments of the factory, the girls' "general room," where the various arts of box-making, fitting, and packing were principally carried on, seemed to be the busiest; but perhaps this was from the fact of so many being grouped together in it, the apartment being at least two hundred and fifty feet long by sixty in breadth. Some hundreds of girls were here engaged folding, gumming, labelling, and otherwise constructing the fancy boxes to contain the chocolate and chocolate creams, whose manipulation and mode of manufacture have been thoroughly described; and it appeared really that the firm think it necessary that not only must the sense of taste be gratified by the manufacture of toothsome compounds, but the eye must be pleased as well, for many, indeed most, of the varieties of fancy boxes made in this room were admirable examples of art workmanship, the designs and pictures on some of the best being beyond praise; while in the vast assortment of decorative embellishment the most exigéant taste could not fail to be gratified. Cutting out paper and cardboard, filling, folding, glueing, packing, and stamping together, the busy girls get through their work à merveille, and when they had perfected and turned out some little chef-d'œuvre it was beautiful to notice its finish and completeness.

I may state, in now concluding this brief account of my peregrinations round this interesting factory, that most certainly Bournville is one of the wonders of England.

PEOPLE'S LIFE OF WESLEY.

Tinted Covers, 6d.; Limp Cloth, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.

John Wesley:

HIS LIFE AND TIMES.

By JOHN W. KIRTON, LL.D.,

Author of "Happy Homes, and How to make Them."

"This 'LIFE OF WESLEY' is precisely what it is intended to be—an interesting, condensed account of one of England's most popular men, adapted to popular use."
Christian Commonwealth, January 24.

"There are many lives of Mr. Wesley, and he who writes another must necessarily borrow from Mr. Tyerman's massive work. Dr. Kirton, whom we always associate with 'Buying your own Cherries,' has compiled a shilling book, which is published at the office of THE CHRISTIAN, and contains in a handy form all that the bulk of our people need to know of the great Methodist. The work is very well done; the book is eminently readable, and will be sure to command attention. To stimulate our own friends to get the biography, we give the following anecdotes, which will be new to many."—Sword and Trowel, March, 1884.

"Whitefield was not a framer of discipline, not a leader of a sect, not a founder of societies, not a ruler of men, but pre-eminently a winner of souls. Would that such preachers were multiplied in the present day! We thank Mr. Andrews for this seasonable addition to our religious biography. No young preacher or student should be without it. CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS—FOUR YEARS.

In January of last year the patient, MR. JAS. CASWELL, of Heathy Close, Wootton Rivers, Marlborough, visited me at Coombe Lodge, having been recommended so to do by several in his neighbourhood who had found benefit from my treatment. For four years he had been the subject of cough, and expectoration of frothy or green appearance, with pains at the chest and oppressed breathing. I fully advised him.

Letters in February, April, May, July, October, all report gradual improvement, and increase of strength. A return of hemorrhage for a short time retarded progress. [To this every patient is liable, when once it has occurred, until thoroughly well.] December 19, Mr. Caswell writes me: "Your medicine is valuable indeed. I feel it so, for it has twice been the means, in God's hands, of sparing my life."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

THE INVIGORATING POWER OF MAGNETISM.

Perfect Magnetic conditions preserve the vigour of the healthy man, producing a flow of animal spirits, the opposite of which is exhibited by the nervous patient, whose innumerable afflicting, and, not unfrequently, imaginary symptoms, would fill, and have filled, volumes—liable as he is to sick-headache, sleeplessness, melancholy, chorea, paralysis, or epilepsy. He requires generally an equalisation of his disordered nerve-forces: that which soothes the nervous system, equalises the functional action of each organ, and invigorates the nerve-centres. The unfortunate sufferer from rheumatism and its kindred ailments is never assured that, although comparatively free from pain to-day, to-morrow may not, by a constitutional deflection, find him prostrated with a return of the affection.

The remedy is simply to supply what we understand to be a positive influence to the negative condition of the system. This positive stimulus, operating on the blood, strengthens and vitalises the inner man, urging the system to demand its proper nutriment during digestion, and to efficiently bestow those constituents which are necessary to the general welfare of the body. The dyspeptic, being imperfectly nourished, finds every function of body and mind fail him, because the mal-digestion of his food prevents the formation of health constituents for the blood. It is certain that the marked and speedy effect of this Odo-Magnetic influence arises from its natural affinity to the nervous force; ensuring a better secretion of gastric juice, and a more healthy nervous and circulatory condition. And so, throughout a long catalogue of general and specific affections, Magnetism allies itself with the recuperative powers of the system, heightening its vitality, increasing its resistance to all unfavourable external influences, and inducing so radical a change in the whole organism, that, if the weakness is not entirely overcome, it is kept in abeyance to a degree fully credited by those only who have proved its efficacy.

From MR. WM. SOLOMON, Church-street, Elsecar, Barnsley.

"April 8, 1884.

"You will think I have been very tardy in acknowledging the result of my trial of your treatment. With heartfelt gratitude I write now to tell you that I have derived very great benefit indeed from it. You may remember the debilitated condition I was in when I applied to you for advice; my state, originally induced by lumbago, rendering me unable to carry on my work as a preacher of the Gospel, having been for two years confined to the house and unable to walk more than a few steps daily. Your appliances reached me on a Saturday, and on the next morning I put them on, and I was that same day able to take two services, a thing I had been unable to do for two years. I regard it as a perfect marvel, and the more so because the benefit has been continuous, my experience dating back now eighteen months. I have the greatest faith in your treatment, and make it known wherever I go. I wish you every success in your work."

The above instance, together with our list of 850 patients who have recovered from various chronic maladies, by Magnetic treatment, and to whom reference is permitted, will show that the best energies of many years devoted to the perfecting of such a remedy have not been spent in vain. The aim has been to place our treatment by Magnetism in its proper place as a therapeutic agent.

Full particulars of the treatment may be obtained free on application to B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-sq., London.

THOUGHTS ON RESURRECTION LIFE.

"I COUNT all things loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, my Lord . . . that I may know Him and the power of his resurrection . . . being made conformable unto his death" (Phil. iii. 8—10).

Jesus said, "I am the resurrection and the life." Note the order: As regards the Lord Himself, resurrection was beyond the corn of wheat falling into the ground and dying; but as regards our spiritual life as Christians—union with Him—"the Resurrection" is the starting point (see 1 Peter i. 3).

However small the measure of life in the Christian may be, it is life the other side of death (see John v. 24).

Christ entered on this human life of ours as the accredited and only Son of God, and in the power of Sonship. He went down into death for us. We, as Chris ians, are reckoned dead, and, in one sense, have died, for "one died for all, therefore all died" (2 Cor. v. 14, R.V.).

We must guard against the plausible theory that purified human nature is heir to the Kingdom—that only in proportion as we die to the world can we attain to justification. Were it thus it would be our cross, not his, by which peace with God is made (see Col. i. 20).

To the new-born child of God, not to the mere child of Adam, is the Spirit of God given (see John vii. 39; Acts ii. 38; Eph. i. 13), by, and through, whom he becomes a younger brother of the risen Lord.

Every child of God, however young or feeble, has, of necessity, everlasting life; but on the dying to self depends all fruitfulness, all power for service. Even Christ said, "I came not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent me;" how much more need therefore for us, in the power of that life in which we are one with Him, to die to all which is of self. The Christian's individuality is, however, no more merged than his very identity, but is made to minister to the new-born life; even as the budded rose derives from the stock—so worthless as regards its natural blossoms—the means of developing its own superior nature (see Gal. ii. 20).

It is not therefore human nature purified, but new life utilising human energies and powers; nor is it the offering of a dead and mortified self, but a "living sacrifice" which is "holy, acceptable unto God." Thus, the self-asserting man becomes, when regenerated, a fervent witness for Christ, jealous for his honour and glory; the politician becomes an instructor skilled in the counsels of God; the warrior, a much-enduring soldier of the Cross—all alike counting as loss those things which were gain to them, losing their lives to keep them unto life eternal.

Refine and elevate the natural man as you will, he yet has self for his centre. Consider the new life of the merest babe in Christ, and Christ will be found to be his centre. Nevertheless, is it not selfishness in some form or other that causes at once the necessity of and the hindrance to our "dying daily"? Are there not many Christians who are still loving their lives in this world, cherishing instead of repressing the offshoots from the stock, so that the new graft is not vigorous and fruitful, but remains poor and stunted?

Why should we not, in the power of the risen life, ignore self with its vain resolves and its struggles against self, and, as those who are alive from the dead, unreservedly yield ourselves to God, who will then work in us, "both to will and to do of his good pleasure"? Thus, and only thus, will it be realised that "the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us," when our share in his throne shall be granted who has promised no less than this "to him that overcometh?" even as He also overcame and is set down with his Father in his throne.

HEALING AND HOLINESS.

WHILE it is for learned and scientific men to deal with the subject of "Healing by Prayer" on the lines indicated in Joseph Cook's Boston lecture, as given in THE CHRISTIAN of April 3—and most desirable in the interests of the cause of truth and righteousness, that they should do so from the Christian standpoint—is it not time that some voice of weight and influence should be raised on behalf of the multitude of the sick and afflicted among believers? Many of them are being sadly "worried" by the injudicious and unauthorised pressing upon them of what is called "Faith Healing." Would that some "elder of the Church," in the Apostolic sense, with the gifts of discernment and true wisdom and discretion, might be led to address such as these, and the Church at large, in the spirit of love, and of the meekness and gentleness of Christ; setting before them in the light which He gives the true causes of disagreement between their own experience and that of many of the "cases" of healing which they have read or heard.

If the Christian men and women in the forefront of this movement would candidly admit in their publications many cases of failure—which it is believed from their own acknowledgment are more numerous than the apparently successful ones; and if they would accept as worthy of consideration words of remonstrance or of suggestion from time to time addressed to them, the want that is now felt would probably not exist. But the statements of doctrine dogmatically given and the reports of "cases" allowed to pass unchallenged place a yoke upon weak and tender consciences that acts very prejudicially in many cases.

It is not enough that we have the highest esteem for these earnest servants of the Lord Jesus; the church and the world require evidence that they are teaching and acting only through the leadings and in the power of his Spirit, in full harmony with the true scope and purport of his written Word. From the earliest days of church history there have been evidences of the tendency to exaggeration in one direction or another. Statements of truth have not been evenly balanced, and heresies have sprung up, causing sore trial or leading to many schisms and divisions or common troubles among the professed followers of one Lord and Master. The same tendency still exists and is developed in harmony with the spirit of the age, needing all the wisdom of the most enlightened and most deeply-taught Christians to restrain it from running rampant and laying waste some portion of the Lord's heritage, while there is room for the exercise of the largest charity, "forbearing one another in love, endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

Very closely allied with "Faith Healing" in the programme of its advocates is "Holiness by Faith" setting forth a high standard as attainable by all the Lord's people. We would not lower the standard our God has set before us, nor depreciate the means for its attainment which He has put within our reach—"Be ye holy, for I the Lord your God am holy;" and that of the Lord Jesus, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." But from examples which have come under our own knowledge of a very high profession under both these heads, it has been painfully manifest that the individual standard, whether of bodily health or of spiritual purity, was far below, in the one case, that of "the perfect soundness in the presence of all," which was the witness in Apostolic times to the verity of a miracle of healing, and in the other to that true spirit of humility, and of a sound estimate of the requirements of the law of holiness which led Paul to exclaim, "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect, but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which I am apprehended of Christ Jesus."

THE CASE OF VALENTINE BAKER.

WE have read with regret in a contemporary, of which in general we heartily approve, an article headed "The Ex-Convict Valentine Baker." There should be no such word as "ex-convict" in the Christian vocabulary. Of the exceeding great and precious promises which the elders saluted from afar, and which are yea and amen in Christ Jesus the Son of God, the foundation promise is, "Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." For those who rejoice in having been forgiven their ten thousand talent debt against God, to keep their grip upon the throat of a fellow-sinner who has expiated his offence against the law, and therefore owes it nothing, is to contradict the teaching of their Lord and Master, and to act more unrighteously than the unmerciful servant, to whom a hundred pence were due, but whom the Lord condemned for exacting his debt because he himself had been forgiven. We confess that Punch, which our vigilant friend censures, seems to us in this matter to be the better exponent of the spirit of Christianity and of righteousness.

When a man has suffered the penalty of the law he has expiated his crime so far as man is concerned, and he ought to be treated according to his conduct in the present and not in the past. To ostracise him because he has so suffered is to cast contempt upon the law, before which he stands justified, and he ought to be so regarded by law-abiding citizens.

The offence of Valentine Baker in the eyes of Society, like that of many another wrong-doer, consisted mainly in his being found out. Thousands of men are received and welcomed in society who are guilty of accomplished frauds which are even more base and cowardly than the unaccomplished outrage for which Baker suffered. "Mothers present them their stainless daughters, Men of high honour salute them Friend." But let not Christians participate in their whitewashing of the sepulchre and in their turning of things upside down.

THE MONTHLY TRACT SOCIETY has during the last twelve months distributed 1,123,112 tracts and publications, being an increase of 654,873 over its issue for the preced ng year. We also learn that one of its travelling agents has done a large amount of evangelistic work throughout the country. This increased activity in the special work aimed at by the Society—viz., reaching the educated classes—is a cause for great thankfulness. Arrangements are being made for special effort at the Italian Exhibition shortly to be opened in Turin.

For the Young.

LITTLE WORKERS.

"MARY, I want to talk to you about something that troubles me very much," said little Amy, linking her arm into her friend's, and drawing her down a shady country lane, sweet with the scent of wild violets. It was a lovely spring morning, and the birds were singing joyfully in the hedges, but little Amy's face was not just then a cheerful one.

"Dear Mary, I am very disappointed that I can do so very little for the Lord Jesus. If only I could preach like papa, or take a Bible-class, or even a Sunday-school class as you do, I might be of some use; but I am afraid nothing I try will do real good. The other day I was reading a chapter of the Bible to blind Susan, and before I got to the end I saw she was fast asleep. It showed how little she cared about it, for she was wide awake and interested while I told her about Mrs. Brown's accident. Oh, I felt so discouraged! I should like to do a great deal for the dear Saviour who has done so much for me, but I fear the only things I can do are two small for Him to accept or even notice. Sometimes I feel inclined to give up trying altogether till I get older and know more," and little Amy's words ended with a deep sigh.

"Poor little Amy," said Mary sympathisingly. "Do you not think I have often felt the same? But we must pray for the true courage that, while deeply feeling how very little we can do, will enable us to do that little as well as possible."

"Oh Mary, all I can do seems like trying to empty that pond with my thimble."

"Well, dear Amy, sit down by me on this bank and I will tell you about a wonderful band of little workers in that very pond."

"In that dirty pond, Mary? Do you mean the frogs, for I don't think anything else could live there, as it is far too stagnant for fish?"

"You see that covering of green weed?"

"Yes; it is duckweed, and it prevents us seeing how very dirty the water is below."

"Ah, it does far more than that, Amy. Each tiny plant, so perfect with its beautiful rounded leaves and tiny rootlet, is helping, as it floats on the surface, to purify that water. It is giving out oxygen to the air, and by covering the water prevents the escape of the poisonous vapours that would otherwise rise from it. And the microscope shows us that down below there are a whole host of fairy workers. I must show you a few of them, some day, through the microscope, for they are so very tiny that even your sharp little eyes would not see them. They are almost too wonderful and beautiful for me to attempt to describe them to you. Many are like most exquisite crystal goblets, hanging to the weed by long transparent stems; others are like merry little 'Jack-in-the-boxes,' that pop up and down in little glassy tubes, with long hairs on their heads that shine with all the colours of the rainbow, like the Shah of Persia's aigrette of diamonds. Others are like little crystal balls, full of bright green spots, and these roll about through the water, very quickly, when the sun is shining brightly. Some of the most curious ones have bright red eyes that shine like rubies, and most of them have little hairs, called cilia, that whirl round and round, bringing all the little floating particles to the creatures' hungry mouths. Everywhere in that pond this active life is ever working on the dead decaying matter. Those little crystal goblets are slowly changing poison into food for themselves. Every dead leaf that falls into that pond is taken by those silent little workers; nothing is lost. Everywhere life, beautiful life, springs from death."

"Why, Mary, that sounds quite like one of the fairy tales I used to be so fond of. I shall never call that 'a horrid dirty pond' again."

"Do you know what would happen if these good fairies refused to go on, and struck?"

"I don't suppose it would make much difference, Mary—at least, not to us."

"Amy, if they left off their appointed work, the result would be truly terrible. These stagnant ponds would become centres of death; the germs of disease would be bred there, and fevers would carry off hundreds of lives from our happy villages. Thank God, these little creatures of his have no choice but to obey. Their life is bound up in their work. But, Amy, is it not far better to have the choice, and to be able to choose his blessed service willingly and gladly? I sometimes think our large cities, with the crime and misery that lies below the wealth and outward prosperity, are like these ponds; and I shudder to think what would become of them if the noble army of Christian workers stopped their Master's work, even for one day. You remember his own words, 'Ye are the salt of the earth.' You know salt has a wonderful preserving influence. It is made up of little grains; and so Christ's Church is made up of individual members, from whom He expects the work He has given them to do.

"When you are tempted to get discouraged, dear Amy, remember the silent little workers hidden in the ponds, and remember that He who gave them their work has also given you yours. He would rather have you do the little duties He has placed before you imperfectly, than do successfully what He has not given you. You may be sure that if you are faithful in little things, He will give you greater things to do for Him in his own good time. After all, darling, we are not always right in our estimate of great and little things. The little things may be every bit as important as the so-called great ones. I know that you will be happy if you remember that you are just where He has placed you, doing the very work his allwise love has chosen for you."

"So I ask Thee for the daily strength,
To none that ask denied;
And a mind to blend with outward life,
While keeping at thy side:
Content to fill a little space,
If Thou be glorified."

Little Amy did not forget the lessons thus learnt, and often repeated them to herself as she saw in God's works the wonderful results obtained through the united efforts of little workers. A. M. C.

GOSPEL TRAINING IN MADRID.—In reference to his work in Madrid, Pastor Fliedner writes:—"We daily feel more the want of qualified men to preach and teach; the people are very willing to hear, but frightfully neglected by their priests. The want was again brought very painfully home to me on a recent journey. In one village I heard of the priest having fought a duel with the tax gatherer. The priest proved the more adroit of the two, and the story was told in his praise as though he had done a great and admirable action. I found in another town a little congregation of forty, gathered round a poor man of no education, who could scarcely read fluently, and is half blind. He tried to explain what he read as well as he could, but whilst cheered to see the eagerness of the people to hear the Word, I was saddened to see the want of a capable pastor. This is the want we so desire to meet by training young men for the work of the ministry."

The Birthday of Eternal Life.

"He hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God."

MY heart is joyous as a bird,
The air around is full of spring,
The cowslips dance as if they heard
The glad, glad songs I sing!
Only the Master's touch can make
Such "music from life's chords awake."

My heart is like the morn, when gems
On dewy webs bespangled, gleam;
The flowers fresh crowned with diadems
This Easter sunrise seem.
A glad, glad song my mouth shall sing,
And all the Easter bells shall ring.

The apple-blossom time is near,
The trees and hedgerows all are green;
"The lilies of his love appear,"
Where bare brown earth has been;
And so I cannot choose but sing
The birth of life's eternal spring.

The Home of Industry.

THE first party for Canada this year, consisting of sixty boys, sailed from Liverpool by the Circassian, April 3. They are a fine band of lads, intelligent and well trained. Many of them have given their hearts to the Lord, and are showing forth in their daily life the great change which has taken place.

Mr. George Soltau, who is going to Canada for evangelistic work, has accompanied our schoolmaster, Mr. F. Auvache, and the party. He wrote, on the 4th instant:—

"SS. Circassian, off Moville.

"Through the goodness of our loving Father, all things are prospering with us. The boys shook down very comfortably, and slept well. We have had a smooth passage across the Channel, and so all are perfectly well and are thoroughly enjoying themselves. To-day we have had our morning worship below-stairs, as it is cold. I wish we had some Swedish and German tracts, for a large number of steerage passengers are foreigners."

Miss Macpherson expects to sail May 15, with a second party of from sixty to seventy children. She asks the prayers of the Lord's people that the good seed which is being daily sown in their young hearts at the Training Home may bring forth abundant fruit.

A Converted Dancing Hall.

DEAR SIR,—Having returned home, I am pleased to find the work in all its branches prospering. Numbers of new faces testify that those who have laboured in my absence have been abundantly blessed. The Bible-classes on the Sunday afternoon have been so large as to inconveniently crowd the building, whilst some have been obliged to go away.

For ten years we have used Hyde-park Hall, and waited upon God to open up to us a larger place, using the large music-hall on the Sunday in the meantime. If friends would help we think we know of premises which could be had and altered to accommodate about 3000 people. A dancing academy in the same street has been offered me, and the first year's rent guaranteed. We intend opening it as a Temperance restaurant and reading-rooms, and the largest room for overflow meetings. We should be thankful for help to seat and furnish the place, which we desire to open in a week or two.

We have nearly 1000 men in our Sunday evening congregation, and this place would be of incalculable benefit to many of these, who would come and bring others. Will those who know of our work have fellowship with me in this matter? About £100 would fit up and furnish the place. C. Cook.

THE REVIVAL IN LONDON.

[From "The Daily Telegraph."]

THE continued success of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and the systematic campaigns of the Salvation Army, seem to indicate that Revivalists are resolved to take possession and fortify after they have attacked and conquered. The two American evangelists have lost the charm of novelty that originally attached to their proceedings. At first the direct, simple, and stirring eloquence of the one and the excellent singing of well-selected hymns by the other, drew towards them thousands tired of the flatness of the ordinary preaching and the very bad music of many chapels and churches. But that they touched deeper chords is proved by their renewed success in the suburbs of London just now. Their moveable building has a great advantage over the brick and mortar of wealthier organisations. The amount expended in mere architecture by the Church of England for centuries has been something enormous; and it would be curious to calculate for how many hours in the week the majority of the buildings are used. Some are never darkened by any shadows but those of the pew-opener from Sunday to Sunday; others lie stranded like the City churches, the people having ebbed away from them. Even the most frequented churches are deserted half the Sunday, and nine-tenths of the week; yet still the mania for spending money on the mere fabric goes on, because every young curate aspires to have a church of his own, and begs all round until he secures it. In contrast to this we have the Moody and Sankey big hall crammed one week with many audiences each day at Kensington, then found at King's-cross, collecting the St. Pancras populace, and now at Hampstead, appealing to the inner life of another suburb. When the people do not come to the services the services must become missionary, and seek them out.

They descend upon a town to preach, and they leave behind thousands taught to think earnestly of what they thought of tamely, or to think for the first time of what never crossed their minds before—to pray fervently instead of feebly, or to exercise in prayer souls that never knew what was meant by supplication. They reap the corn and leave it to be bound and gathered in by the local and resident ministers of all denominations. They thus fulfil the purpose and functions of the preaching friars long and still utilised by the shrewd rulers of the Roman Church.

Men and women who hear the same preacher from one end of the year to the other, dilating in the familiar way on the old story of God's dealings with men, get so used to the physical monotony of the style, tone, and even accent, that the meaning of the momentous issue presented becomes obscured to their ears. A stranger startles them when, with unaccustomed eloquence, he thunders forth the same ideas.

Thus the success of Messrs. Moody and Sankey is easily accounted for on the surface alone. But there are other and deeper reasons. To many middle-class Englishmen theology is their only literature, and religious aspiration the poetry of their lives. They live in the past pictured by the Bible, or in the future which it promises, and the old English of its history and prophecy brings the flavour of antiquity into the modern prose of their daily life. It is curious enough that while the ordinary "Evangelicals" find formidable rivals in the preaching, prayer, and song of the new missionaries, they should see another section assailing them from the opposite quarter. The Ritualists will not leave them alone. The eloquence of Mr. Moody, the melody of Mr. Sankey, shine by contrast with their too often dry preaching and dull services, while the advanced Anglicans bring all the resources of art to bear against them on the other side. Images, symbols, emblems, pictures, colour, incense, music, intonation, and song, varied vestments, and elaborate ceremonies, make a church where the service is very 'High' as attractive as a theatre and picture-gallery in one. Between the two extremes, the old 'Evangelicals,' content to dwell in decencies for ever," are certainly losing ground. The droning duet between parson and clerk, and the dull ugliness of the old-fashioned chapel of Dissent, alike tend to disappear. Now life is poured in at both ends to stir up the whole length and breadth of the national organisation of religion.

Secularists may fancy that the influences of such a society are purely theological; but, as all who have watched the local results of these movements can testify, there are obvious worldly consequences of the Gospel successfully preached that the statesman, the magistrate, and the social historian must recognise and record. Less drink, less riot, less crime testify to the local and 'clearing' effect of a well-served chapel; its frequenters are sober, steady-working, honest citizens, who by their conduct and care secure the best basis of a great State—happy, well-ordered homes. The most resolute Agnostics must read these results as they run. Mr. Spurgeon's congregation, Moody and Sankey followers, Salvation Army recruits, may be wrong in their theology or not æsthetic in their tastes, but they exhibit in daily life solid virtues which if spread amongst the whole population would give the magistrate a holiday and the policeman a sinecure. Of the one hundred millions a year and more wasted by Englishmen on unnecessary alcohol we may be sure that little comes from those who have heard the Gospel preached by men as ignorant of culture as the Apostles, but like them ready to go out into the lanes and hedges to seek those who are lost.

By LADY HOPE.

The hall is entered, and the two friends take their places side by side. In front of them is stretched a platform capable of holding about 500 people, with a desk and harmonium at its centre. The choir are taking their places, and though the hall is as yet only partially full, the people are coming in rapidly. In a few moments the singing begins, its sweet melodies stealing in cadences soft and loud over the great building, hushing into silence the listening crowds.

Our stranger friend is bewildered with the novelty of the scene. One thing she acknowledges, in a whispered confidence to her companion—

"It is not at all dull or melancholy, is it? I think the singing is quite lovely. Don't you?"

"Yes, it is very sweet," her friend answers. "I have brought a hymn-book for you. Here it is!"

"Oh! how thoughtful of you! You know I cannot sing the tunes, for I do not know them."

"No, perhaps not. But you can follow the words; they are really beautiful, and so true."

Presently Mr. Moody comes in and stands in front of the rail, followed by Mr. Sankey, who takes his place beside the American organ, which soon begins to sound out its chords as a preface to the well-known hymn,

"Sing them over again to me, Wonderful words of life."

"All rise and sing!" Mr. Moody says, in his own quick, earnest way—a manner quite peculiar to himself.

"Is that Mr. Moody?" one stranger whispers. "He is not like what I expected."

However the singing has begun, and thousands of voices are joining. The hall is crammed to excess, hundreds standing. As soon as the hymn is finished, prayer is offered by one of the clergy present, and then an intense silence reigns, for a solo is about to be sung. Mr. Sankey touches the organ again, bringing out once more its thrilling melodies, and he sings alone No. 295—

"Soul of mine, in earthly temple," with its wonderful refrain, so tender and pathetically sweet—

"I shall be satisfied when I awake in his likeness."

The distinct utterance of the words, and clear, full notes, so feelingly given by the singer, create a distinct influence on the meeting, and many hearts are touched. Our two friends sit in rapt attention till the unbidden tears flow down their cheeks. Other hymns are sung, and then the speaking begins.

"I am going to speak to you on the subject of 'Trust' to-day," Mr. Moody begins; "to-morrow we shall consider 'Assurance.'" And then follows the address, pointed, striking, and distinct, to a degree quite unique. The attention of all present is thoroughly arrested. Our visitor never moves her eyes. When the words, "Let us pray!" causes a movement in the meeting she cannot believe that the address is finished, so marvellously short has it seemed.

"Is this all?" she whispers.

"No!" her friend replies; and they kneel together.

After a very earnest, pleading prayer (quite extempore) from a clergyman near him, Mr. Moody requests all present to rise and join in a hymn, during the singing of which those who cannot remain may have an opportunity of leaving the hall, while all who may desire to stay for the prayer-meeting are requested to do so.

"We can then pray for ourselves, and for our friends or relatives," Mr. Moody says.

"I should like to stay!" the visitor whispers. "Poor James! You know, my brother. Oh! it is so sad."

Her friend knows that there is some hidden sorrow connected with that brother. They remain. When all is quiet, Mr. Moody begs that every head may be bowed in silent prayer, while those present offer audibly their requests for those they love, and desire to see saved and blessed. After a few moments, a voice from amidst the crowd asks prayer for "My mother!" another, for a "friend!" another for a "husband!" when from our stranger comes the entreaty, distinct and plain, "Oh, do pray for my dear brother!" and she bursts into tears. Hers, and many other petitions are gathered into one intense though short prayer from Mr. Moody, that "the Lord will bless, and save every one of those whose names have now been mentioned at his footstool; that He will hear and answer the cries that have been offered."

And then the meeting is over, the people filing out through the open doors, quietly and solemnly, though many with radiantly happy faces and comforted hearts.

What is the surprise of our friend to hear her companion say:

"I am not going home. I am going to remain to the evening meeting. What are you going to do?"

"Really! But where will you get your tea?"

"Oh! I don't care about that. I can get tea any day; but nothing will induce me to leave this spot until I have been to some more of these meetings. I must and will hear more. To you, I suppose, it seems quite commonplace, because you have been here so often; but to me it is the strangest thing I ever saw. I certainly cannot go away; but do not let me detain you."

Her friend smiles.

"Oh! certainly I shall remain with you," she says. "But come with me, and we will try and get some tea somewhere. You know you are my guest, and I must take care of you."

During the hour or two that intervenes before their return to the hall, our visitor asks whether "that intercession meeting is held every day?"

"Nothing is done every day," her friend answers. "The programme is continually varied. There is generally a prayer-meeting, and often an inquiry-meeting, besides the address and singing in the afternoon."

"What will the evening meeting be like? But, never mind! you need not describe it to me. I should prefer seeing and hearing for myself, now."

Again they take their seats early, and again are absorbed by the sweet singing, during the interval that is occupied by the people coming in and taking their seats. This time the address is upon the question "Where art thou?" A searching description of the human heart follows upon the reading of verse after verse from the Divine Word. Man's guilt is held up to view under the light of the Holy Spirit; and in homely, simple phrase, with strong characteristic expression, and an enthusiasm of earnestness that cannot be mistaken, home truths are spoken and listened to attentively by thousands of people. Yes, attention is arrested; and from the stillness of attitude during the meeting, and at the close the rapid filling of the inquiry-room, it is evident that a very real impression has been made. The minds of many present are being awakened to the importance of the question, "What shall I do to be saved?" The home-thrusts and plain honest dealing of the speaker, used by a power mightier than his own, have done their work, and consciences are deeply wounded. Slumbering ones have been aroused, and their anxiety is taken instant advantage of before they have left the meeting, by the opportunities that are offered them to enter the inquiry-room for individual conversation with Mr. Moody himself and his helpers.

Our friends wait till the people begin to leave the hall, and then wend their way home. Their journey is a silent one, but by the time their paths separate, they have agreed to come again the next day. Five days pass thus, with scarcely a break in their attendance, and then difficulties begin to arise.

"I almost fear it will be impossible for me to come to-morrow," says the one who has become most recently interested in the meetings. "So many things that I formerly imagined to be duties have been left undone lately, while I have yielded to the strange fascination that has chained me to this spot. But oh! the disclosures that have been made to me in these hours! How little I have known of my real state in all these past years, while joining in the Litany and Penitential Psalms. 'A miserable sinner!' I have said. But I literally did not know anything about what I was saying. I wonder whether there are many others as ignorant and deluded as I now find myself to have been. Night after night lately I have been kept awake by the discoveries that have been made to me at these meetings. And then the melting story of our Saviour's love and his most tender compassion which we have heard day after day, his wisdom and grace, his power to save, his death and atonement, with his present, living, resurrection presence, have all opened to me new worlds of thought. My Bible has become a study to me, and now I have but one overwhelming, burning desire, and that is that I MIGHT POSSESS FOR MYSELF THESE CERTAINTIES which are being held out to us, and which others are apparently appropriating and finding so real a delight—a treasure not to be taken away. I am haunted, distracted, by the thought that my former goodnesses, besides my natural sinfulness and faults of commission and omission, are the whole of them fruits of DEATH and signs of it, literally at their very best reckoned by God as 'dead works.' He is just and true, and if He gives this as his reckoning the thought is terrible. It alarms me. And yet I believe it to be the true one. My mind is in a state of chaos. What should you advise me to do?"

"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved."

"Ah! that sounds sweet and clear. One blessed, pure, consoling note, amidst all the discordant ones around me. If I could only do it! If I could only have the blessing offered in those words."

"I have told you by my own experience, I have tried to show you that the only way of salvation is through CHRIST JESUS, that He is the only forgiver of sins. But, if you still cannot see plainly your own title to these blessings by the one means He has provided, I do really advise that you should converse with someone this evening more experienced than myself. Perhaps some lady or gentleman at the meeting may be able to point you to the way of salvation more clearly than I can. Or the Lord Himself may bless their words and make it plain."

"Very well! I will take your advice, if my courage do not fail me, and will try to speak to some one after the meeting."

Young Women in Kensington.

To meet the convenience of a large class of persons who were prevented by the early hour from attending the Addison-road Hall evening services, a special meeting for young ladies in houses of business was held in Kensington Town Hall on Wednesday night, April 9. The spacious hall was filled with about a thousand young women, more than five hundred of them coming from Mr. Whiteley's, and the rest from other establishments in Bayswater and Kensington. Mr. Sankey arrived at nine o'clock from Addison-road, accompanied by some members of his choir and other workers, and the half-hour preceding Mr. Moody's appearance was profitably spent in singing and prayer. The now familiar quartettes, "Sinners Jesus will Receive" and "Let the Saviour in," lost none of their touching power, and the audience joined heartily in other hymns.

These preliminaries over, Mr. Moody announced his subject without delay when he stepped on to the platform. Starting with Luke xix. 10, he traced through the Bible God as the first seeker: seeking Adam when he was hiding away from Him in Eden; seeking the wandering sheep far off in the wilderness; seeking the lost piece of silver, more precious than the nine which were safe already.

Then the sinner is to seek the seeking Saviour—not with the head, but with all the heart—for "with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." When we are willing to do this the work of grace has begun.

Mr. Moody gave four words which make the way of life very plain to seeking souls:

(1) Receive Him. (John i. 12.) A personal Saviour, God's gift, which must be either rejected or accepted. "He that hath the Son hath life."

(2) Believe Him. (John v. 24.) Some people talk of unbelief as a great misfortune, but really it is the damning sin of the whole world. Satan's first triumph over mankind was when he instilled doubt into Eve's mind, teaching her to give God the lie. But "he that hath received his testimony hath set to his seal that God is true." God gives you something to believe—his Son; the only Man who ever trod this earth whom it is safe to follow.

(3) Take Him. (Rev. xxii. 17.) How can we take a gift? Not by earning it or working for it, but simply by taking it. The plan of salvation can be summed up in two words: God giving and we receiving. Who will say, "I will take the gift;" or rather "take Him"?

(4) Trust Him. (Is. xii. 2.) God my salvation at the beginning and the end; and I have only to trust Him. Stop doing, and believe what He has done. Let your feelings take care of themselves and simply trust. Is He able to save and keep you? Then trust Him to do it: this is all He wants you to do.

When the clock struck ten, the first meeting closed, as some of the audience were obliged to leave; the greater number, however, stayed for the short prayer-meeting which followed. While all heads were bowed in silent prayer, Mr. Moody requested that those who desired prayer for their own conversion should quietly rise. Seventy-eight did so, and these, with many others, remained behind for personal conversation with the workers, after Mr. Sankey's solemn singing of "Almost Persuaded." To use Mr. Moody's expression, truly the Lord was in the place, and many will date their decision to take Christ as their own Saviour from that memorable evening.

The Farewell Meeting at Kensington.

The last meeting held in the Station-road Hall, Blythe-lane, West Kensington, will be long remembered by all who were privileged to be present or to take part in it. This meeting on Easter Monday was the second meeting of converts which Mr. Moody has held during the present London Mission. It is now so usual to have the great hall filled to overflowing that one ceases to wonder at what, to a stranger, is one of the marvellous sights of the great City. If the people who were unfortunately kept outside could only have heard, as we did, the sympathetic remarks of Mr. Moody concerning them, or could have seen how hard he tried to make a little more room for them, it should have gone far to ease their disappointment. From six o'clock until 7.30 the gathering multitude sang heartily, quite forgetful of the passing minutes. Then Mr. S. A. Blackwood prayed. "There has never been an Easter," he said, "of such spiritual joy throughout this city as this Easter;" murmured "Amens" endorsed the statement.

Presently a few voices on the platform sang Mr. McGranahan's beautiful anthem in The Christian Choir, "I am the Resurrection," which closes with the triumphant question, "O Grave, where is thy Victory?" One of Mr. Moody's brief, characteristic prayers to the Throne of Grace followed, and in this prayer the whole of the workers, even to the doorkeepers, were commended to the care of Him who never slumbers or sleeps.

An address was then given to the converts by Dr. Oswald Dykes; we regret not to be able to furnish a report, but it appears at length, we understand, in the current issue of our contemporary, Word and Work.

"The Crowning Day is Coming By and Bye," was sung. "That's so grand," said Mr. Moody, "I'll have you sing it over again, and when you come to the last verses let everyone sing twice as loud." The people sang with all their hearts. "Glorious," cried the preacher, "let us have it once more."

Rev. C. A. Fox having offered prayer, Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe next spoke to the young disciples, from 1 Cor. x. 13: "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able." Glad tidings are these, said the speaker, for the new-born of the Lord when they look out on that dark prospect that lies before them. At this moment every young child of the Lord is saying: "The things I have are exceeding beautiful, and the things I long for are more beautiful still, but can they be had? Will this last? When the Moody meetings are over, will these things stand when I am left to fight with the wickedness of the world?" Having spoken of the distinction that must be drawn between faith and feeling, Mr. Peploe said, addressing the converts:—

"Life lies before you with its many struggles, temptations, and dangers. Are you prepared to come right out to-night with the conviction that God speaks truth when He says that in Christ Jesus He is able to save and keep them that come unto Him?" He went on to speak of a lady who tried to believe, but her trials were so great and her circumstances were "very, very peculiar." "Why," said Mr. Peploe, remonstrating with her, "you have been saying to God that He is not strong enough to keep you in your very, very peculiar circumstances. God has exactly met your case by providing a very, very peculiar Saviour to keep you in very, very peculiar trial." The poor lady now could see her mistake, and fervently thanked the preacher for putting her right.

"In God's name," continued the speaker, "we stand here to beseech you to render up to God yourselves as those who are rendered up from the dead. Now where shall be the difficulty? The only thing is this, not that God cannot keep, but that we do not trust. Just as temptation comes, put up the Lord Jesus between you and temptation, 'Now, Lord!' 'Now, Lord!' There is just one look from the enemy; the next moment Christ comes in, and, by the grace of God, the thing is gone, and we see but Christ. Keep short accounts with God. Get back directly you make a false step. Go in a moment to the Fountain, and instantly you shall find that the precious blood has washed the stain away."

Mr. Moody soon afterwards rose and said, "I should like to speak for an hour." A quick response came from the people, "So do, Sir, so do." "No," said the preacher, "if you can carry away the two speeches you have heard they will last you right on. I think we will have another of these meetings three weeks hence at Hampstead Hall. I cannot tell you how much I have enjoyed these two hours. Some of you I have not seen for three or four months, and God knows how my heart has been stirred at the sight of you again. It has been quite a pleasure to sit here and have no burden upon me." Then Mr. Moody read the ninety-first Psalm, and Rev. Charles Graham prayed, and the great congregation sang, "Glory be to the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Ghost, as it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be." "Let us sing it again," cried Mr. Moody, and they sang it again. Then in the midst of solemn stillness the last prayer was prayed by Mr. Moody in Blythe-lane Hall.

The Hammersmith Y.M.C.A., with the help of friends, have arranged to continue the Sunday evening services at Cadby Hall, lately used for overflow-meetings. Much interest was manifested at the first meeting held last Sunday evening. The hall was quite full. Mr. Marsack Day preached. At the close he asked those to rise who had received blessing at the late Mission; the response was satisfactory evidence of the success of the Mission.

Mr. Russell Hurditch will preach next Sunday. Friends wishing to share in the expenses of these services should communicate with the Treasurer, Mr. W. B. Croft, Stanley Villa, Shepherd's Bush-road, W.

Dr. Pentecost and Mr. Stebbins.

UPPER NORWOOD.

We have been highly favoured by a visit from Dr. Pentecost and his accomplished friend Mr. Stebbins, a happy combination of diverse gifts, by which the Word of God has been powerfully and persuasively commended to the understandings and hearts of men. I need not say that Dr. Pentecost's Bible-readings have been a source of refreshing to the people of God, and we believe of strengthening and quickening to many. We trust they will be the means of preparing a band of useful workers for the coming meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in Croydon, to which we are hopefully looking forward.

One delightful feature of Dr. Pentecost's teaching is the union of singular clearness and originality, with great depth and accuracy of thought and expression, the simplest truths being based on a careful exegesis of the text of Scripture.

It is impossible to give any idea of the rich and full teaching of these addresses. While they have been like the wells and palm trees of Elim to many a thirsty soul, they also come like a trumpet call to life's work and warfare, and they will fail of their aim and disappoint their author if they do not lead to a higher and more earnest Christian life.

The attendance has been from the first larger than might have been expected from the short notice given. On Good Friday the church was crammed in every part. The singing of Mr. Stebbins, so cultured, powerful, and impressive, added much to the profit and enjoyment of these meetings.

CONFERENCE HALL, MILDMAY.

For many years past the Mildmay Conference Hall has not presented so crowded an aspect (the Midsummer Conference days always excepted) as during last week. Dr. Pentecost commenced his services there, ably seconded by Mr. Sankey, on Easter Sunday. On that afternoon and evening, and again on Easter Monday night, the large hall was filled in every part long before the hour of service, and overflow meetings of 600 to 700 people were held at each of these services, in the commodious rooms below the hall.

On the following evenings of the week we had again the gratification of gathering with large and most attentive audiences, when Dr. Pentecost and Mr. Stebbins conducted the services. The North London Choir, under Mr. Godfrey's and Mr. Farie's direction, has all through the meetings rendered willing and efficient help.

It is no wonder that the people came again and again to hear Dr. Pentecost. Seldom have we listened to such lucid, forcible, and convincing statements of truth. We had a grand resurrection sermon on Sunday afternoon; a beautiful exhibition of "Christ, our Hope," on Sunday evening, preceded by a demolition of false hopes. Our good brother has a striking method of clearing away rubbish before he begins to lay the foundations; he sweeps away, as it were, the "refuges of lies" and then leads souls to the Rock of refuge and of defence. The stillness of the audiences has been remarkable, accounted for probably by the fact that the preacher quickly gets his hearers into sympathy with himself and his message; he is tender as well as strong, he has searched the well of truth to its depths and is master of his grand theme, and he has the gift of laying before the people the deep things of God in simple language.

On Monday night the subject was "Christ, the Light of the World," a masterly exposition of very glorious truth under four great aspects: Christ revealing God to man, revealing man to himself, exhibiting the true nature of sin, with God's remedy for sin, and throwing light upon death. On Tuesday "The Prayer of the Publican" was the preacher's text; we can only name the topics dealt with on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday evenings,—namely, Regeneration, Repentance, and Faith,—to enable your readers to judge what a valuable exposition of the leading doctrines of Scripture has been furnished in one brief week.

At every service there has been a very tender and solemn time of decision among anxious souls, followed by patient work in the inquiry-room; many at each meeting, have stood up publicly professing their acceptance of the Saviour. Grey-headed men, young men and maidens, mothers with children in their arms, have found rest, and are now, we trust, rejoicing in God their Saviour.

The Lord's children are finding these meetings a spring-time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord; quite a large number of these stood up on Wednesday evening to confess their lukewarmness and to give themselves afresh unto Christ in whole-hearted consecration.

Will your readers pray that the Lord may continue to stand by and strengthen his servants who are thus helping forward his cause and kingdom in London? We owe much to these beloved American brethren, both the evangelists and the sweet singers who have crossed the ocean and are spending their strength in this needy London. May the Lord reward them an hundredfold and make the weeks that yet remain for their Mission in different parts of the metropolis richer and fuller in blessing than the preceding months have been. "Open thy mouth wide and I will fill it," saith Jehovah; let his people cry, "My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God."

J. E. MATHIESON.

Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan.

There were many who thought, as they saw the beautiful fresh spring morning that ushered in Good Friday, that Major Whittle and his friends were extremely sanguine, if they expected to find an audience to meet them at eleven o'clock of that day in the Bermondsey Town Hall. The opportunity to spend such a lovely day in the green fields is one which is highly prized by the closely confined toilers of the city. But in and around this district were many who during the last few weeks had discovered a new object in life, their inward eyes had seen One so altogether lovely, that it seemed to them the best use to make of the day was to meet to praise and glorify his name. As we came to the platform entrance, we became aware of an unusual thronging, and found that all gaining admittance here were those who had found blessing during the Mission, and for whom the body of the hall was reserved. Each as they came in delivered a slip with their name and address, which will enable friends to follow them up and promote attendance at means of grace.

As might be expected there was plenty of singing, and Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan sang their newest production—an Easter hymn which, from its beauty, we expect they will sing all the year round. "Why are we here?" asked Major Whittle. "Because we believe Jesus died for us, and we are going to spend this day in learning how to live for Him." A most useful address was given by Mr. H. Thorne, based upon St. Peter's injunction, "Grow in grace." The next to speak was Dr. Moxey, of Edinburgh, whose fresh, graphic teaching, drawn largely from his own experience, must have won its way into the hearts of the young converts. The Doctor brought sunshine into all the faces before him as he showed the value of confessing Christ personally, and through the means of friendly correspondence.

But the meeting did not close without a further pleasure. How beloved is Mr. McGranahan by all those know who have come within the influence of the ministry of his attractive gift, and the charm of his kindly spirit. In his work of song and in the perhaps more arduous labour of training singers, everybody knows his ardour and spirit are unfailing. He told how for the last ten years he had been rejoicing in the Lord, and singing the good news of everlasting life. Mr. Bliss, a master of song, who had been a great friend of his, wrote urging him to give his heart to Jesus, but before a reply could be sent to his letter that dreadful railway accident happened in which Mr. and Mrs. Bliss lost their lives. That brought him to a decision. He said, "A reply to Mr. Bliss I could not send, but I thought of the letters Jesus had sent to me in the Gospel, as yet unanswered. I read, 'Him that cometh I will in no wise cast out,' and I said, 'Lord Jesus, I come.' I found that this gift of song, which had been to me a pleasure all my life, would be accepted and blessed by the Master. Before, I sung for time; now I sing for eternity. Sing for the Master if you can; at least do something for Him, and so you will be blessed yourselves."

After a little further singing, Major Whittle brought the meeting to a close by giving a few more words of counsel. We could not help thinking that those who had thus waited upon the Lord, and been in harmony with his Spirit, were now the better able to enjoy the beautiful creations of his hand, and had discovered the best way of spending Good Friday.

W. M.

As these brethren had a week to spare after closing at Bermondsey ere they could commence operations at Woolwich, they arranged with some of the local pastors to hold meetings in the Rewel-street Congregational Church, on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday evenings. These services was largely attended, as also a farewell meeting in the Town Hall on the afternoon of Sabbath, April 13, and many precious souls were personally dealt with, and, we believe, added to the one fold on each occasion.

The impression produced in the populous district of Bermondsey may be gauged by the fact that, in spite of the meetings of Messrs. Fullerton and Smith, to which all those residing in the neighbourhood of Haddon Hall were advised by Major Whittle to go, and although there were no advertisements, yet the large chapel was nightly almost filled to hear the word. Our beloved brethren preached and sang the Gospel with much power, and the presence of the Master was witnessed by the signs following. Numbers stood up to testify that they then and there decided for Christ, and others rose in token that they desired to do so. When the after-meetings were announced but few left the church, and it must have been very gratifying to the earnest ministers, so many of whom assisted at the meetings, to see God's hand so manifestly at work. We believe that a great quickening of the Lord's people, and a large addition to the evangelical churches around, will be the result of these five weeks' labours. We are deeply grateful to the Lord of the harvest that we have been privileged to assist in "bringing home the sheaves."

On Friday evening, after the second meeting the evangelists went to Haddon Hall, to see our dear brethren, Messrs. Fullerton and Smith, and to wish them God-speed in their meetings. It was the first time the Major and Mr. Fullerton had met, and it seemed a great joy to each to grasp the other's hand. Many of the large audience which had left the hall returned, and we had a most enjoyable praise-meeting. Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan sang "For God so loved the world," and "I will;" loving words were spoken, and earnest prayer offered by the fellow workers in behalf of each other. It was a memorable meeting, and we believe will help on the work of our dear brethren who remain to tell out the good news.

On Saturday Major Whittle and his fellow labourers went to Woolwich to commence a short campaign on the following morning. Will your readers remember these meetings in their prayers? D. A. M.

A Fourth Mizpah Band in London.

On Saturday evening, April 12, a meeting was held in the inquiry-room of the Addison-road Hall of those interested in the deliverance of their fellow-men from the power of strong drink, to hear testimony from any who had by the power of divine grace obtained deliverance from the craving appetite. The large inquiry-room was well filled.

Mr. N. B. Stoney kindly took the chair, and Mr. R. Simpson, of Glasgow, gave a short statement of the nature and origin of the Mizpah Band in that city. He stated that the great end in view in forming such organisations was to help those who had conquered their appetite by surrounding them with new associates, and that they might use their united influence not only to rescue others from the power of drink but also to bring them to Christ. An opportunity was then given for testimony.

One brother said that up to eight weeks ago he had for five years been a helpless slave to drink, and had become a professed atheist, labouring assiduously to spread his obnoxious and destructive opinions. His actions agreed with his words, and he adopted a downward course, giving way to drink and all other iniquity, but often while boldly defending his atheism, deep down in his soul there was a feeling of uncertainty and a want of satisfaction.

He went one evening merely to hear Mr. Sankey sing, but while listening to the word the Spirit of God met him and gave him such a view of himself as a guilty sinner that he was constrained to cry, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." In a day or two he found rest and peace. Since then the Lord had given him deliverance from his old appetite, and now he was glad to bear his testimony to the happiness he enjoyed in the service of Christ.

A tall, gentlemanly-looking man followed. Under the power of this great curse he had drunk himself out of two good businesses and out of every situation he had ever had. Whilst pursuing this downward course the question occurred to him whether there was any possibility of regaining his former respectability. The enemy was ready with his suggestion, saying, "You know that you have driven away every good friend from you, and are abandoned by both God and men." But a slight ray of hope came up before his mind. The devil whispered that it was too late—his day of grace was passed—and suggested suicide as the quickest means to get rid of his trouble. One night, as he wandered through the streets, without friend or shelter, he prepared to carry out the diabolical suggestion. Reaching the edge of the pond where he was about to take a leap into a dark eternity, the thought occurred to him that when his lifeless body was found no one would know it. He searched his pockets for a piece of paper to write his name upon, and in the bright moonlight he found an old tract which had been given to him. He read the title, "Where shall I Spend Eternity?" The question took hold of him, and turned him from his determination. Wandering alone next day, he sat down in a public park, not knowing what to do or where to go, when a member of the Stratford Mizpah Band came up to him, and in a few kind words asked him to come to their meeting. He did so, and the saving truth there preached took hold of him. At the close, a Christian worker came up to him, and laying his hand upon his shoulder, said, "Brother, how is it with your soul?" That word "brother," spoken so kindly, softened his heart; it was many years since it had been applied to him, and it thrilled his soul. The Holy Spirit enabled him to accept Jesus as his Saviour, and committing himself to his guidance, he had not only realised the pardon of his sins, but had been completely delivered from his craving for strong drink.

After these remarkable testimonies, it was decided to form a Mizpah Band for the Kensington district, of which Mr. J. H. Fordham was elected President.

May the Lord bless the new branch of this noble work.

The Hampstead Meetings.

As we have devoted so much space to various reports and notices of the work, we can only in this issue state in the briefest form the commencement of the Hampstead Mission, on Tuesday week. It has been continued with every token of encouragement. The hall stands midway between Hampstead Heath (N.L.R.) and Haverstock-hill (M.R.) Stations. Last week, owing doubtless to the intensely inclement weather, the attendances were not so large as we have been accustomed to see at these meetings. The word, spoken and sung, has been with much power, and many each day have enquired the way to Zion with their faces thitherward.

At the afternoon gatherings last week Mr. Moody spoke mainly to Christians. These addresses have been reported, and, with others on the same subject—"Working for God"—are being prepared for publication.

Mr. Moody was present on Saturday evening at the Gospel Temperance meeting, and on Sunday morning expressed himself as much pleased with the interest shown. Many were inquiring how they could get freedom from the slavery of drink, and there was work enough, he said, to keep the friends engaged till past midnight. All the four meetings of Sunday were of the usual impressive character. At the early meeting for workers thousands stood up, pledging themselves to definite personal effort during the Mission, and, as something almost unique, there was a considerable after-meeting in the inquiry-room for the anxious. Forenoon, afternoon, and evening, numbers were stricken under the power of the preaching and the song. In the evening, when the subject was "Sowing and Reaping," "the slain of the Lord" were very many.

Notes and Incidents of the Work.

The following interesting circumstance occurred in the Addison-road Hall inquiry-room, on the 10th inst.:—

A man in a semi-inebriated condition, after resolutely ignoring exhortation, when asked why he came into that room, sullenly replied, "Just to see." Immediately afterwards he burst into tears, and remained on his knees long after the worker had risen, leaving the hall in great peace of mind. On the Saturday following he signed the pledge at the same place, and a week later, when seen again, though in great poverty, was cheerful, nay, very happy, and declared his astonishment that all liking for drink had entirely left him.

Some extracts from letters recently sent to Mr. Moody will be read with interest:—

Some twelve years ago, when you were in Glasgow, I was induced (rather from curiosity than otherwise) to go to one of your meetings in the City Hall. Having been brought up a devout worshipper in the Roman Catholic Church, I did not imagine that anything you might say would have any beneficial effect on me. But, praise the Lord, your words did have an effect, not only beneficial but lasting, so that from that time until you and your fellow-worker came to Stratford (in January) there was a continual hankering in my mind after something, I knew not what. Although I have been to sea for upwards of seven years out of the twelve, yet living in South America for two years, and knocking about the world, having many ups and downs, I never could get rid of that hankering feeling, that I wanted something. Even when very near death's door with yellow fever, the words of that beautiful hymn, "Once for all, oh sinner receive it," kept ringing in my ears. In storms and tempests at sea, and even in the loneliness of the "look-out," those strains haunted my soul, and often I asked myself, "What must I believe? what must I receive?"

But the way had not yet been made plain to me, and my weary, longing soul had to wait; but when your Mission came to Stratford, I felt I must go, not out of curiosity, but as a duty. So I made a point of being at your first Sunday evening service. Your text was, "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap," and every word seemed to go home to my sinful heart. I rose for prayer, and in the inquiry-room one of the Christian workers took me aside and enabled me to find consolation in God's holy Word, of which I had hitherto been totally ignorant. . . . So full of happiness was I when I went home that my wife was astonished, and I tried to make her understand, but could not. The next night I took her to the hall, and there, thank the Lord, she also found the Saviour. . . . We are now both candidates for baptism at West Ham Baptist Chapel, and we feel that were it fire instead of water, we could undergo the ordinance for the sake of Jesus. We greatly enjoyed your converts' meeting at St. Pancras, and in conclusion I would say that your Way to God and Daniel the Prophet have been a source of much profit to us. We pray that the blessing of God may ever attend your work.

From an engine-driver:—

The first night I came to your hall at Clapham, in January, I thought it was good to see so many people going in, and I followed. When I got inside, my eyes were fixed on a Scripture text, "Come," and I took the word to heart. The next night you dwelt on the same word, and I gave my heart to the Lord. Oh! the glorious sight I saw that night. I now know what it is to be born again, and have a new life.

Another convert writes:—

It was through your Mission at Islington, last November, that I was converted. One Sunday evening you preached on the Ten Commandments, and your words went right home to me, as I had committed terrible sin. When I got home that night I gave myself to God. I pray God to send me away as a missionary. Of course I want to study the Bible now as much as possible. Could you tell me how I ought to carry on such study?

A domestic servant says:—

I attended the meetings at St. Pancras, and heard Mr. Sankey sing "The Ninety and Nine," and I felt I was the wandering one. On March 8 I found the Saviour, not in a hall or a church, but while cleaning the floor. There I heard his voice saying, "Thy sins be forgiven thee."

THE CANADIAN JUBILEE SINGERS gave a short service of sacred song on Sunday afternoon last at Rev. Newman Hall's church. Bishop Disney, of the British Methodist Episcopal Church, Canada, who is accompanying the singers, gave a short address, referring to the object of their visit to this country—viz., the raising of funds to build a theological institution in Chatham, Ontario, for the education of young black men for African Mission work. Mr. Hall expressed himself pleased with the service, and announced that the singers would again take part in the people's service on Sunday afternoon, 27th inst.

Farewell Meeting to Rev. T. Baron Hart, on his Departure from Paris.

AFTER twenty years spent as minister of the English Congregational Church, Paris, the Rev. T. Baron Hart has been reluctantly obliged to resign his position and return to England, owing to the very delicate state of Mrs. Hart's health.

On Wednesday evening, April 9, a valedictory meeting was held in Mr. McAll's Mission Hall, Avenue des Ternes, which was of a singularly touching character.

The Rev. T. Howard Gill, M.A., of the British Embassy Chapel, was called to the chair. He spoke in the warmest terms of his love and esteem for Mr. Hart, though he had only known him for a few months. He felt that Paris was losing much in losing Mr. Hart, and that he was parting from a dear and valued friend. He had specially remarked his unwearied efforts and his great wisdom and tenderness in dealing with the administration of the British Charitable Fund. He most heartily joined in wishing their dear friend God-speed.

Rev. R. W. McAll feelingly referred to the many years of close friendship that had existed between himself and Mr. Hart. He had been always ready to help in the work to which he (Mr. McAll) had been called. Mr. Hart's services as a pastor and preacher had been of the most faithful and devoted character, and during his long ministry in Paris he had influenced a vast number of passing strangers, the results of which could only be known in the future. Mr. Hart had always had the happiest relations with the French pastors, who loved him and esteemed him highly, and who all regretted his leaving their city.

Mr. Edward Long, as senior deacon of the church, then presented Mr. Hart with an address and a purse containing more than £90. In doing so he specially referred to the value of the Tuesday evening meetings, which had been held in Mr. Hart's house for so many years.

Rev. T. Baron Hart, with much emotion, thanked his many friends for their great kindness. He deeply felt leaving them, but believed he was taking the right step. He narrated several interesting incidents connected with his residence and ministry in Paris.

Rev. W. Gibson, B.A., Wesleyan minister, said he was losing one of his oldest friends in parting from Mr. Hart. They had come to settle in Paris within a few months of each other, and in times of deep sorrow he had proved the true value of Mr. Hart's friendship. He was an able expositor of the Scriptures, a thorough Bible student, and was also well up in scientific studies, which he had gladly used in lecturing to the young men at the chapel. Mr. Hart had been one of the most earnest workers at the Exhibition of 1867.

Mr. Lockie referred to Mr. Hart's connection with the Paris City Mission and the Young Men's Christian Association, which had always had his warm support.

Rev. Mr. Lucas, of America, and Dr. Macrae, of the Belleville Medical Mission, expressed their warm appreciation of Mr. Hart's friendship and usefulness. Messages were sent by Rev. Dr. Mackay, of the Marbeuf Church, Rev. Dr. Beard, of the American Union Chapel, Rev. D. A. Mouilpied, Wesleyan pastor, Professor Yeatman and others, expressing their great regret at being unable to be present.

Mr. Hart's address in London will be 3, Lordship-terrace, Stoke Newington, N.

WORK IN FOREIGN PORTS.—Mr. James Hitchens, who has for eleven years laboured among seamen in the port of Hamburg, has accepted the chaplaincy of the Mariners' Church and Institute at Antwerp. He will be thankful to receive old or new magazines and books for ship libraries, or any other assistance friends of seamen may kindly send. Parcels, marked "Books for Sailors," may be addressed to Messrs. Stahlschmidt, agents for the General Steam Navigation Co., Lower Thames-street, London, and conveyed free. Letters, &c., to be sent to Mr. Hitchens, at the Institute, Avenue du Commerce, Antwerp.

The Gospel at Bow.

THE Earl of Shaftesbury lately said: "Bow is one of the very worst districts in London. More evils of various kinds exist there than will be found in any other locality of the same density of population." It will be interesting to our readers to know that this part of the metropolis is not being neglected, but is the field of a vigorous evangelistic effort inspired by Harley College, the missionary training seminary, conducted by Mr. Grattan Guinness and his wife. By a variety of agencies suited to every age, from the infant to the grandfather, the Mission seeks to influence whole families, surrounding them with a net-work of Christian influences which never fails to reach some portion of the family, and sometimes is blessed to every member of it.

The first annual meeting of this, the Harley Hall Mission, Bow, was held on April 17 in the great Gospel tent which has been erected in the gardens of the Old Palace, St. Leonard-street. The chair was occupied by Mr. Harry Guinness, who presides over this branch of the East London Institute's evangelism, and preaches every Sunday night to the poor with marked tokens of blessing.

The closing words of the superintendent's report were as follows:—"Besides nightly evangelistic services, open-air preaching, tract distribution, and door-to-door visitation, we have a Bible-class for men, a Young Men's Christian Association, senior classes for lads, mothers' meetings, Young Women's Christian Association, factory girls' classes, a junior and senior Blue Ribbon Association, a vigorous Sunday-school, a Band of Hope, and several meetings for believers; we have also given gratuitous accommodation to a Phœnix Benefit Society for men, and also a Phœnix Benefit Society for women, as we wish to encourage habits of providence and hail every effort of the working classes to assist themselves.

"It is exceedingly difficult for us to tabulate the results of our first year's work, for we have had a good deal of cutting, levelling, and rail laying to do; but I have the testimony of a considerable number of persons who reside in the district, that the work of the Mission has made an unmistakable impression upon them, and has helped considerably to elevate their social, moral, and spiritual tone. The drink fiend has been driven from many homes, about 1000 persons having mounted the blue ribbon, and there appears to have been between three and four hundred most hopeful conversions."

About 600 persons were present in the tent. The interesting proceedings were brought to a close by an earnest spiritual address by the chairman. We understand that Gospel services will be conducted in the Gospel tent every night for the next six months.

INQUIRY.—Business engagements compel me to spend two Sundays in Bruges every year, and I shall be very thankful if any of your readers can favour me with the address of any Christians, English or foreign, who are resident there.—Yours truly, T. R. Tufnell.

BRITISH SCHOOLS IN SYRIA.—Passing through Beyrout en route for Palestine, we spent a few days with Mr. and Mrs. Mentor Mott, and visited and saw the working of all the schools in connection with the work in that town. We were astonished at the extent of the work being done there and in Damascus, and are certain that few in England have any idea of it, or what great spiritual blessing is attending it. What struck us most was the thorough knowledge the girls at the training Home and the schools have of the Bible, the willingness of the children to learn, and their quickness in speaking and learning English. But workers are sorely needed. With such a wide open door, which may be closed ere long, and with a healthy climate, surely there are many in England who might come forward to strengthen the hands of those who for years have borne the burden and heat of the day. We would urge any who may be passing through Palestine to see for themselves the work in Beyrout and Damascus. Miss Poulton, 18, Homerfield-road, Wimbledon, will gladly give information, and receive help for this important work.

Gospel Temperance Mission at Settle.

AS long ago as February of last year, a week's Mission was held at Settle, in the West Riding, Yorkshire, during which 1155 persons put on the blue ribbon, and of these 447 were new pledges.

This may be considered a remarkable result out of a population of about 3000, but the interest has been so well sustained that a Saturday night meeting has been held ever since, except during the middle of summer. From 200 to 600 persons have been present on these occasions. The district has been thoroughly aroused, and many country meetings have been held in farm-houses, school-rooms, &c.

That the results are most gratifying may be seen from the fact that during the past six months a public-house and a wine and spirit store have been closed, and a second public-house has been sold to be converted into a private dwelling. The first-named hotel has been purchased and furnished by a joint stock company, and is open as "The Commercial Temperance Hotel." In addition to most comfortable rooms for tourists and others, a considerable restaurant business is being done already, whilst the extensive stabling is most useful to farmers and others who desire to avoid the public-houses.

The High Sheriff of Yorkshire took an active part in the promotion of the company, and he was supported by two lawyers, a doctor, and two local manufacturers, and other gentlemen. Considering that Settle is the centre of a most beautiful district, abounding in natural curiosities for the geologist and naturalist, and with walks and drives in all directions, it is confidently expected that this rather bold venture for the Temperance party will form a financial success.

Village Work in Somerset.

DEAR SIR,—Our hearts rejoice when we read from time to time in the columns of your paper of the wondrous things which the Lord has been, and still is, doing through Mr. Moody's, and other Missions in the large towns, but He has not forgotten the poor, small, out-lying villages.

A three-weeks' Mission (the first ever held here) under the conduct of Mr. W. F. Holt, one of the Christ Church band of evangelists, of Burton-on-Trent, has not long been concluded in this village. Services have been held every night in the school-room during the last two weeks; all standing ground was occupied on the Sundays, many being unable to get in. There was a mighty power in the meetings; the people drank in the word, and many who came every night walked four miles each time to do so; and night after night souls went away rejoicing in Christ Jesus.

The after-meetings were also very full, there being many nights when everyone in the room stayed, so that, as we had no inquiry-room, we were always obliged to have a second "after-meeting" to deal personally with the anxious ones.

On the last night of the Mission we had a tea-meeting, when the brethren, poor though they are, as a thankoffering to God, presented to Mr. Holt a handsome Bagster's Bible and an inkstand.

God has worked wonderfully in families; in one case He has saved six in one family (since the Mission three more in the same family have been saved); in five cases He has saved both husbands and wives; in three more he has saved the husbands where their wives were already Christians.

You will understand what a song of praise goes up to God from our little village, when we say that, in less than two years, nearly half the adult population has been saved.

We ask the brethren who read this account to thank, with us, the great God and Saviour, both theirs and ours, for the tender compassion and unutterable love He has manifested in setting the feet of so many of us upon the rock, and to pray, since He has done so, He will so order our goings, that we may walk worthy of Him who has called us unto his Kingdom and Glory.—I am, dear sir, yours faithfully, D. M. B. Chapman.

The Rectory, Wambrook, Chard.

Notes and Comments.

THE Conference on Holiness and Faith-healing at Hackney, which we mentioned in our last, has continued through the Easter holidays, owing to the increased interest felt by those attending it.

Mrs. Butler has opened at Winchester a little hospital for the poor fallen women. This is a practical answer to those who reproach us for the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts, and say we neglect these outcasts. God has signally blessed its beginning. We hope the same thing will be done in other of the lately-subjected towns.

Our friend Richard Weaver has been holding evangelistic services during the past week at the West London Tabernacle. There has been a remarkable interest attached to the meetings, and a large number have yielded to the power of the truth spoken by the evangelist. The services are continued every evening during the present week at 8 p.m., and next Lord's day the series of services will come to a close. Mr. Weaver's home address is now Milton Cottage, Sale, near Manchester.

One of the saddest records of crime we have ever read comes from Croydon, where last week eleven boys, varying from thirteen to nine years of age, were brought up on a charge of highway robbery and housebreaking. Gangs of boys, it appears, have been for some time disturbing the neighbourhood with their lawless deeds. One of the magistrates spoke of the parents as being privy to it. Children of nine years old in a police-court, hardened and bold in crime, is a fact which society cannot afford to disregard. There is reason to fear that juvenile crime is increasing among us, a spirit of early aspiration after deeds of violence and dishonesty having frequently shown itself of late. Lack of parental discipline, and pernicious reading, are foremost among the causes to which the evil may be traced.

Strong drink is a fell destroyer both of body and soul, and has slain myriads of its votaries and their victims. Seldom has so terrible an illustration of its raging power come before public notice as that recently reported from Naples. A young Calabrian soldier under its maddening influence took up a gun, and rushing through the quarters of his comrades killed five of them and others. Such events unmistakably reveal the demoniacal influence of alcohol, and serve to warn men of the danger of yielding to its baneful power. Deeds of darkness are rarely committed apart from a spirit of recklessness aggravated, if not induced, by its effects.

In view of such facts as the above, one hears with indignation and alarm that large importations of intoxicating liquors are being made into the country around the Congo. These are stored in great quantities at the stations of the International Association until they can be forwarded into the interior. The London auxiliary of the United Kingdom Alliance has done well to memorialise the King of the Belgians on the subject, and His Majesty we may hope will not fail to use his influence in putting a stop to so iniquitous a course. Nothing can more tend to demoralise and injure the races of Africa, whose welfare all Europe is concerned to promote.

Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. announce that they will shortly publish a memoir of the late T. B. Smithies, Editor of the British Workman, &c. &c.

Dr. Pentecost and Mr. Stebbins are conducting a Bible-reading and Prayer-meeting at the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, every morning this week (except Saturday) at eleven o'clock. We are asked to insert the following note:—

"May I ask your permission to express my deep regret at the disappointment experienced by those who came to the hall last week, expecting afternoon Bible-readings with Dr. Pentecost? There was no time nor any adequate means of announcing the change of plan.—Believe me, yours sincerely,

"James E. Mathieson."

At the tercentenary celebrations of the Edinburgh University, held last week, Professor Calderwood, in addressing the graduates, spoke strongly on the danger which besets modern education owing to the fact that our own is an age of specialists. The growing tendency is to separate and classify workers, to concentrate attention on some one special study, and so to abate broad and generous interest in whatever affects the general good of the community. His closing words are eminently timely and wise. He said:—

"We must seek to deliver ourselves and our nation from the dangers of specialism. We must not content ourselves with formal acceptance of the commonplace that all advance of knowledge must carry with it the good of the race. We must make this end a living purpose, shaping our whole career. Carry throughout your life some earnest regard to the claims of the commonwealth on the fruits of her children's training. Remember what the cause of education in Scotland still needs at our hands, and the claim it has on the educated men of the country, both in the field of administration and in the efforts to secure legislative advance. And, rising still higher, I would ask you not only to be strongly and earnestly patriotic, but devoting yourselves to the God of truth, purity, and salvation, exercise all your life through the faith and world-wide sympathy which Jesus Christ has brought into our world."

Rev. Jos. Cook says, what most people will allow to be true, that Sunday is worth more than Sunday journalism. What Sunday journals displace is worth more than they supply. They displace rest. They displace the mood of religious thoughtfulness and worship, without which no civilisation can be maintained at a high level. He propounds a question of logical fairness when he asks, "Why should one trade be allowed to manufacture and distribute its wares on Sunday, and other trades kept from work on that day?" At the same time it is well to remember that more Sunday work is caused in the production of Monday journals than of those published on the day of rest.

At the session of the National Union of Elementary Teachers just held at Leicester, a resolution was passed by a large majority to the effect that the system of classifying schools as "fair," "good," and "excellent," and awarding them a corresponding money payment—viz., the merit grant—is based upon no sound principle, is unfair in its application, is calculated to provoke jealousies and ill-feeling among both management and teachers, and to become a most powerful incentive to over-pressure, and therefore ought to be discontinued. It is a good sign that this feeling is thus strong among the teachers, and such an expression of their opinion ought to have much weight with the Department, leading them to re-construct the Code in favour of a wiser and fairer rule of procedure.

Interesting Easter Conferences were held as usual at Kilburn Hall, Union Hall (Edgware-road), and other places. Pressure on our space compels us to omit any detailed account.

Another vacancy has occurred in the bench of bishops. The death of Dr. Bickersteth, the Bishop of Ripon, removes one who has long been known as an evangelical leader in the Church to which he belonged. Though only sixty-seven years of age, he had for some time been in failing health, and had only retained his bishopric of late through the earnest persuasion of his ecclesiastical friends and co-workers. His loss will be keenly felt by the evangelical party to which he was devotedly attached, and the interests of which he faithfully served.

Such has been the progress of the Hawaiian Islands in civilisation and refinement that a directory and hand-book of general information as to the exports, imports, revenue, &c., of the whole group is actually published in Honolulu, the capital city. Modern improvements are being introduced, the telephone is in operation in the city, commerce and business enterprise are developing on all sides, and traces of the barbarism which prevailed in Captain Cook's day are relics of the past, instead of features of the present. Prominent in the hand-book referred to is a goodly list of benevolent and philanthropic institutions established in the islands. Well may we exclaim, in the spirit of thankful joy, "What hath God wrought!" for all is due to the Gospel of his grace, and to its renewing power.

In an article on the popularity of firmness called forth by reference to the Merchants Shipping Bill, and the demand that its just provisions should be moderated, The Spectator says:—"There are many questions on which it is essential to be beaten first in order to succeed afterwards," and urges the promoters of the Bill on no account to modify the measure for the sake of passing it forthwith. The principle thus pleaded for is of wide application. There is a subtle influence about success which sometimes leads men to forego firm adherence to principle in order to achieve speedy results. But success gained by vacillation and temporising is at best short-lived, and great minds will always prefer slow progress on sure and safe bases to temporary gains made at the cost of fidelity to what is right. Firmness in the maintenance of a just and righteous cause commands confidence, and in the end is sure to win the day.

The same journal administers a severe rebuke to Mr. Matthew Arnold for his use in his lecture on "Numbers," reported in the Nineteenth Century for this month, of Isaiah's teaching concerning "The Remnant" of Israel, and its influence on the salvation of the race. Mr. Arnold ignores the Divine authority on which the prophet's teaching is based, and the vision from connection with which the prophecy derives its grandeur and impressiveness. We heartily agree with our contemporary in protesting against this unhallowed use of inspired language by writers whose convictions are wholly alien from the sentiments of the sacred penmen. "Eviscerated prophecy of this kind" is justly said to be "a mockery," and the employment of sacred truth for a purpose opposed to its original design is unfair. The practice is, however, very common with modern neologians.

We are informed that the Sunday postal service in any country district may be discontinued at the request of the receivers of two-thirds of the correspondence, and not of two-thirds of the population, as stated in our last issue.

Seldom has our beloved Queen displayed her noble character more forcibly than in the letter she has addressed to the nation, in acknowledgment of public sympathy with her and the young widow on the death of the Duke of Albany. The second paragraph is worthy of a place in the memory of all her subjects:—

"The affectionate sympathy of my loyal people, which has never failed me in weal or woe, is very soothing to my heart. Though much shaken and sorely afflicted by the many sorrows and trials which have fallen upon me during these past years, I will not lose courage, and with the help of Him who has never forsaken me, will strive to labour on for the sake of my children, and for the good of the country I love so well, as long as I can."

If anything were wanted to make Her Majesty more beloved, nothing could better have done so than this expression of grateful love to the country she has so long ruled with wisdom and grace. May the Comforter from on high be ever near to solace and direct her remaining years.

While politicians differ widely as to the critical condition of Khartoum, and its noble-hearted occupant, General Gordon, there can be but one feeling among Christian people as to the duty of bearing him up in earnest prayer to God. The purity of his motives, the unselfishness of his spirit, the simplicity of his faith, and the loftiness of his whole character, combine to commend him to the warmest sympathy and deepest concern of all who have studied his career. Let us not be slow to plead with God that he may be preserved from the imminent perils which surround him, and yet live to see his heroic endeavours for the good of Africa crowned with complete success.

A pleasing instance of what may be done in promoting Christian union and co-operation among different denominations has just occurred in one of our South London suburbs. Revs. E. Rae, Vicar of Emmanuel Church, West Dulwich; A. C. Tarbolton, of the Congregational Church; and W. Fuller Gooch, of the Open Baptist Church, have been holding a series of united evangelistic meetings, each one officiating in the other's Mission or lecture room. The result is that some have heard the Gospel who would not otherwise have come under its influence, Christians have been brought closer together, and a proof given of the possibility of dividing lines being made far less separating than they are supposed to be. Such an example might be widely followed with advantage.

Writing to us on board the ss. Peruvian from Moville en route for Canada, Mr. J. W. C. Fegan says he is accompanied by ten lads who have been rescued from London temptations and London misery, and for whom he hopes to find new homes and brighter prospects on the other side of the Atlantic. They are the first instalment of many hundreds whom he trusts to emigrate in coming years. During his stay in America Mr. Fegan will endeavour, by personal observation, to gather such information as will prove useful to him in prosecuting his rescue and training work among the poor boys of London. We commend our earnest brother and his companions to the keeping of our heavenly Father, and pray that he may come back in due season with his health fully restored. During his absence letters addressed as usual to The Boys' Home, 95, Southwark-street, S.E., will be immediately attended to.

The Rev. A. A. Rees, pastor of Bethesda Chapel, Sunderland, a personal friend of our own for thirty years, has just passed away. His death occurred on the 16th inst., to the deep regret of a large circle of friends, not only those connected with his own church, but also of other communities. He was a faithful servant of Christ, bold and fearless in his denunciation of whatever he regarded as contrary to truth and godliness, and unswerving in his attachment to the great articles of the Christian faith. He had a strongly marked individuality, which made his position in some respects isolated and unique, but he had a large heart, and was deservedly esteemed by all sections of the church in the town where he lived. He was a staunch supporter of Temperance principles, and one of its ablest advocates.

The House of Lords has in hand one of the most serious matters our home legislation is concerned with. The Criminal Law Amendment Bill, which passed its second reading in the Upper House a few days ago, has for its main object the suppression of immoral houses, and the cure of that social evil which pestilentially affects all classes and conditions of the community. The difficulties in the way of dealing with these questions are great, and are not likely to lessen while the Press and large portions of the public plead for State regulation and sanction of vice. Only by uncompromising opposition to the whole system of prostitution, as abominable in the sight of God and men, can we hope to mitigate the terrible state of things which exists. The country must beware, however, of the dangerous power given to the police under this measure.

The Times, commenting on the case of Euston v. Euston, recently tried in the Divorce Court, remarks on the frequency with which of late illustrious names have been referred to in that tribunal, and utters words of grave as well as truthful import when it says: "Nothing certainly would sap more swiftly the authority and influence of the English aristocracy and all connected with it than the notion that its tone of morality had lowered. It is peculiarly incumbent upon those who boast nobility of birth to bear steadily in mind and act in accordance with the maxim, noblesse oblige." . . . "No true friend to our institutions will think lightly of these considerations. Cynicism as to them must be fatal in the long run to any order, however powerful." Aristocratic vice is one of the most potent factors in the production of democratic revolutions. Bad enough in the rank and file of the nation, vice and immorality are simply intolerable in those who claim to be at its head.

The "May Meetings" are once more upon us. Our Baptist friends, as usual, lead the way, their programme having already commenced. The Missionary Prayer-meeting, which happily inaugurates these gatherings, is this year held in Bloomsbury Chapel, the Rev. Dr. Maclaren presiding. The call to devoted consecration to the Lord's work in the world was never louder than it is now. Never was there greater need to pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth more labourers, or to entreat the Lord's stewards to be more faithful to their trust. The time for working in the Master's vineyard is growing short, and He Himself will soon be here. Let us earnestly pray that the return of the season when the various sections of the one great host of God's elect meet to review the past, and gird themselves for further service, may be productive of vastly increased devotion to the Saviour's claims.

The summary of work done by the Victoria Institute, or Philosophical Society of Great Britain, during the past year, furnishes proof of the utility of its efforts to combat the influence of secularism at home and abroad. Few, perhaps, are aware of the immense exportations by the English Secularist Societies of avowedly atheistic literature. Under the garb of philosophical treatises, rank secularism is being issued in a wholesale manner, and by its means the secularisation of education in India and the Colonies is being extensively influenced. Hence the importance of institutes which aim at checking and counteracting such endeavours being adequately sustained. It is a special work, and calls for special consideration and support.

Much is being said just now about enlivening the public services of the sanctuary. Most will admit that there is need for this, the dulness and formality which prevail in many churches and chapels being patent and even proverbial. But care must be exercised lest in seeking to remedy this evil, spirituality and devotion are sacrificed to a false idea of what the life required really is. Good music and popular preaching may be made to harmonise with spiritual worship and work, but too often they are aimed at apart from due regard to the presence and power of the Holy Ghost. By all means let our songs be melodious and winsome, but let them be those of the heart; and let the preacher "seek to find out acceptable words," but always taking care to let them savour only of the mind of Christ.

The doctrine of the death of Christ as a vicarious offering for sin is of cardinal and vital importance. The declaration of the Dean of Westminster at the Abbey on Good Friday cannot therefore be read without regret. After speaking of the doctrine as marked by "moral repulsiveness" and "intellectual contradictions," Dr. Bradley said: "I have yet to learn that any amount of penal pain is in itself any satisfaction or atonement for sin, of which it is often the inevitable consequence, or that any amount of suffering or torment is worth in a Father's eye one tear of genuine repentance, one hour of amended life." That is to say, that one tear of genuine repentance, one hour of amended life, avails more for our redemption than the precious blood of Christ, as of a Lamb without blemish and without spot. A divine who has not learned the lesson of Calvary better than these words indicate, can scarcely be said to understand even the first principles of the doctrine of Christ.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.—On April 18 a meeting of a portion of the Metropolitan Police was held in the drawing-room of 4, Inverness-terrace, Hyde-park, W., in connection with the very successful Mission carried on by Miss Gurney. At both afternoon and evening meetings a number of testimonies were given by the constables, of the power of the Lord Jesus to save and keep them. Addresses were given by Rev. W. Haslam, Messrs. Spencer and Stoney.

GREECE AND ITS PRISONS.

By CHAS. COOK.

BEFORE leaving Egypt we petitioned the Khedive for the life of a poor man whose execution we had been the means of postponing while visiting the prison at Assiout. We also prayed him to consider a number of prisoners who had been awaiting trial for about two years. Dr. Cruickshanks told us that, apart from the fact that many of them were falsely accused, they had served in suspense the maximum period of imprisonment which they would have received if they had been duly tried and sentenced.

Leaving Alexandria, we sailed for Athens, and here our first real troubles began. Our beloved brother, Mr. Cole, was stricken with ophthalmia, by which he lost the sight of both his eyes. We were all affected by the dreadful atmosphere of the prisons and the bad air and smells we had to encounter. Thousands of persons in Egypt are blind in one eye with ophthalmia, and the eyes of the children are covered with flies, which carry the disease to others.

At Athens we obtained our permission to visit the prisons of Greece. The prisons here greatly surprised us, for we thought none could have been worse than in Egypt, but we found ten men sleeping in a low room nine feet square with no ventilation, the door and window at night both being shut. The principal prison of Athens is a small building in which are crowded over 200 men. In one room, seventeen feet by fourteen feet, twenty-three had to sleep; in another, ten feet square, there were twelve men, including one who was ill, there being no hospital in the place. Added to this, rooms, stairs, and corridors were covered with dirt, and while there seemed to be little or no discipline exercised, one man playing with a pet dog, a second with a musical instrument, and each doing as he liked, yet it was dreadful to see them herded together in such unhealthy places, and having no work given them to do. As many of them had been for years languishing in ill-health through dirt and idleness, we suggested that they should be made to keep the prison clean.

On the Sunday previous we had noticed a great tumult outside the gaol, and now we learned that three men had made an attempt to escape. Two of them succeeded, one having a life sentence, and another who had received seven years. We distributed the Word of God to all the prisoners, no books of any kind being supplied by the Government. The prisoners are allowed to buy their own food; if they have no money then they are allowed a small amount of food by the country.

An English clergyman being with us, we left enough money with the Governor of the prison to give them all a good supply of coffee. The other two prisons were not quite so bad; here also we gave away our Gospels to the prisoners, and also a few temporal comforts to those who were sick.

Space prevents our speaking of the many wondrous scenes in this city, so interesting to the Christian. Again and again we visited Mars Hill, which overlooks the whole of the city, and were charmed with the grand ruins of the Acropolis.

We were sad to find no testimony for Christ and his Gospel during the Sunday we spent here, though we searched the place; but, alas! no such clear ring as Acts xvii. is heard in modern Athens.

P.S.—Since my return to London I have received the following autograph letter from Mr. Clifford Lloyd, in reply to one that I wrote to him on the subject of the Egyptian prisons:—

"Dear Sir,—I thank you for your note. Prisoners are being released as quickly as possible, though it has been with great difficulty that any lists of them have been procured, showing the charges. I found some prisoners in jail, charged with theft, pending trial for six years and nine months! There were also many for over five years. Believe me that all my sympathies are with this down-trodden and oppressed people. We have already done a great deal for them. They are not liable now to be imprisoned at the will of the Mudir, and are not subject as before to the extortion of olden days. There is much yet to be done, I need not say, and our difficulties are many and great; but with patience I have no doubt all these will be overcome.

"Yours very truly,

"Cairo, April 2." "Clifford Lloyd.

A Bible Carriage for Australia.

OUR brethren, John Hambleton and his young companion Brewster, sail (God willing) in the Garonne, Orient Line, on the 30th inst., for Australia. Mr. Hambleton thinks it probable that they will first be led to form a depôt for Bibles and Christian literature at Geelong, the place of the Lord's visitation to his soul, about thirty-six years ago. He had built a small theatre there, and it is his heart's desire to go and end his days in the Lord's service, in that land where he wasted his youth in the service of Satan. They have had a Bible carriage built, which is described as "a perfect picture—with Scripture texts all over it."

Mr Hambleton says: "There are thousands of Chinese coming to Australia for gold. They soon learn to speak English. I have conversed with many of them in San Francisco. They will return to China converted, and under God I believe this work will be the means of bringing numbers of Chinese as well as Australians to Christ after I have done my work here."

Messrs. Fullerton & Smith in Edinburgh.

THE Mission conducted by these brethren in Edinburgh has been attended with much blessing, and there are very many of God's children who will remember their visit with thankfulness and joy. The Lord has given manifest blessing at every meeting, but I now wish specially to mention the closing gatherings, which were exceedingly precious. The work steadily deepened, and it went on, and the numbers who received blessing nightly increased. The last evening service, like the preceding ones, was crowded, about 3000 being present, and there were large numbers who could not get even standing room. Before commencing the service, Dr. Carment, the President of the Y.M.C.A., briefly expressed the deep thankfulness of the Committee and Christian friends for the visit and labours of Messrs. Fullerton and Smith, and also expressed what he knew to be a widespread desire, that they would again visit Edinburgh, and assured them of a most hearty welcome when they did so.

The meeting for Christians on Sabbath mornings was largely attended, and was a season of great refreshing. There was great expectation for the other meetings, and the Lord gave abundantly. The address to women was accompanied with much power, and at the close about a hundred stood up professing their desire to be saved. But it was only in the after-meeting that the thoroughness of the impression was realised.

The men's meeting was not less interesting, the Lord being present there also. Numbers began to crowd into the hall fully an hour before the time. It was a grand sight when those who wished to be saved were asked to stand up. All over the hall men were seen to rise, and a large number remained to be conversed with. We praise the Lord for all He has done in our midst through the labours of these two brethren.

On Tuesday night following a meeting for converts and inquirers was held in the hall of the Association. This was beyond all doubt a most cheering and convincing testimony to the amount of good which had been done. The President of the Association, Mr. Stoughton of London, and others, briefly addressed helpful and encouraging words to the young Christians. This meeting having been such a blessed one, it was resolved that other meetings similar should follow.

MR. AITKEN AT WREXHAM.

THE Mission announced as "Special Easter Services" commenced on Easter Sunday with the Lord's Supper, at the Parish Church, at 8 a.m., with an address by Rev. W. H. M. Hay Aitken, and at St. Mark's Church with an address by the Rev. J. Stephens. At 11 a.m. and 6.30 p.m. Mr. Aitken preached at the Parish Church to crowded congregations, and at a quarter to four a sermon of remarkable power was preached by him to a body of more than a thousand men, who were evidently greatly impressed.

At this place Mrs. Crouch addressed a large gathering of women at the hall attached to the Savings Bank, and at the same time Mr. Stephens held a children's service at St. Mark's Church, with evident tokens of the Divine presence and blessing. During the week Mrs. Crouch has addressed a meeting of women daily at the Savings Bank, and Mr. Stephens has held services at the Parish Church on two afternoons for young women, and daily for children, largely attended, and with most encouraging results. Many of the young women have been brought to decision, and a large number of the children have been deeply impressed. The power of the Holy Spirit has been unmistakably present in these services, and a considerable number of the children have been brought to God.

At 11.30 a.m. daily, a service has been held at St. Mark's Church, when Mr. Aitken has delivered a series of addresses on the Christian Life, largely attended by ministers of all denominations, and much appreciated by Nonconformists as well as Church people. The Mission service proper has been held every evening at 7.30 at the Parish Church, where Mr. Aitken has preached with great power to immense congregations. Night after night large numbers have remained for the after-meetings, and not a few souls have been brought into light, liberty, and peace. So encouraging have been the results that the services, which originally were only intended to cover Easter week, are to be continued up to Friday, the 25th inst., when they are to be brought to a close with farewell addresses by the Mission preachers at the churches, and a Temperance mass meeting at the public hall.

A special feature in this Mission is the gathering of clergy which is to take place on Monday, April 21, when addresses will be delivered by Mr. Aitken on the "Keeper of the Vineyard," "The Shepherd before his Flock," and "Concerning Definiteness." Mr. Aitken is no stranger to Wrexham, having been here with Mr. D. L. Moody in 1875, and in 1879 conducted a Mission here, which was greatly blessed to the neighbourhood for miles round. Wrexham is the most populous parish in the six counties of North Wales, containing a population of more than 14,000 souls, and well known for its grand old parish church, which is one of the architectural treasures of the kingdom. A sight never to be forgotten is that of the venerable edifice filled from end to end, and with God's message of truth and love delivered with the demonstration of the Spirit and of power.

Much prayer has been offered for weeks past for a large measure of blessing on the services; and both the local clergy and the Mission preachers appeal earnestly to all whom this account may reach, to continue in prayer and supplication for a still greater manifestation of the power of God in the preached word. It is not the town and parish of Wrexham only that is interested in these Mission services, but the surrounding parishes for miles round, populated mainly by colliers and miners. The present is a rare opportunity of reaching a large and important district, and "praying breath" could hardly be better used by your readers than in pleading for "showers of blessing" on the services now going on at Wrexham. Christian Work in Paris.

DEAR SIR,—I gratefully call to mind the articles published in your paper in 1881, in the hope of assisting me with aid for the preservation of the chapel in the Rue Royale. Notwithstanding our efforts in this direction we have been dispossessed, and we have not succeeded in meeting with any other suitable place. The interest you were good enough to manifest three years ago by the gift of £35 2s. 3d. from the readers of The Christian, makes it encumbent on me to give you the first intimation of good news.

What every one considered to be impossible—our return to the Rue Royale—has for some time been in a fair way for realisation. The pickaxe and the hammer of the demolisher are now at work for us in re-opening the way. A portion of the site of our ancient chapel, augmented by the entire space formerly occupied by an old building, which has just been pulled down, will be let. It only remains for us to avail ourselves of the site, and to raise thereon another chapel more spacious and more commodious than our former structure.

I know not for certain if my endeavour to regain possession of the locale will be successful. In any case, and however it may turn out, I am content and my heart is at rest. I discern the ways of God, and I bless him that the manifestation of his will is but the spreading forth of his love and his faithfulness.

I. Armand Delille, Pasteur.

Rev. Dr. Somerville in Londonderry.

A VERY successful Mission has just been concluded by Rev. Dr. Somerville in Derry. He undertook it at the urgent request of personal friends, and in response to a largely signed requisition from ministers and influential members of the various evangelical churches in our city. A select choir under the leadership of his son, Mr. W. F. Somerville, rendered in an admirable manner the service of praise.

On Sabbath evening, March 30, Dr. Somerville preached in First Derry Presbyterian Church, the largest available building in the city, to over 1200 people. On Monday, 31, and all through that week, mid-day services were held from twelve to one o'clock for prayer and a brief address. The attendance was large at each service, and especially on Saturday, when the service was for children, the Union Hall was nearly filled. Each evening, except Saturday, services were held at half-past seven in the Union Hall, which accommodates eight or nine hundred people, and almost every night the hall was filled.

The meetings for women only and for men only, possessed a very peculiar interest. On Sabbath, the 6th inst., at eight a.m., a service was held for young men in the Union Hall, and at that early hour over 250 came to hear the Word. In the evening Dr. Somerville again preached in the First Presbyterian Church, which was filled to overflowing, many being unable to obtain admission. Mid-day services were continued on Monday and Tuesday.

On Monday evening Dr. Somerville gave an address to Christians, and on Tuesday to anxious inquirers. It is believed there were as many at the Union Hall on Tuesday evening who could not gain admission, owing to the crowded state of the house, as would have filled it another time. It was pleasant to see the deep interest taken in the work by ministers of various evangelical churches, and it is believed that permanent and spiritual good has resulted. Ministers of all Protestant churches in town took part in the meetings, and so helped the veteran evangelist, who has been visiting the Church of God in nearly every part of the habitable globe. It is not too much to say the services just concluded will be long remembered by all who attended them, and the Rev. Dr. Somerville and his son will have a large place in the prayers of the Lord's people in this city for many years to come.—Londonderry Standard.

Our Young Women's Christian Association in Paris.

MANY of our friends at home are acquainted with the modest rooms of our Young Women's Christian Association in Paris at 88 Faubourg St. Honoré, where, since February 1873, the first and then only Sunday Bible reading for young English women in Paris has been held, and our Young Women's Christian Association was instituted; the card of membership, which has been translated for kindred associations in France, being as follows:—

"By the help of God's Holy Spirit I will seek, for Christ's sake—

"To read my Bible with prayer daily."

"Never to lie down at night with unforgiven sin upon my soul.

"To live for Christ, knowing that I am not my own, but bought with a price.

"To keep the Sabbath day holy.

"To remind those around me that there is a God, a Saviour, a Sabbath, and a judgment-day.

"To pray that God in mercy will quicken the living dead in this great city."

Our great aim has been to get reality between each soul and her Saviour, to cut away the props upon which human nature is so apt to lean, and to lead each one into communion, not with an earthly Association so much as with a risen living Saviour.

And our little card has been kept by some for months and years—one recently signed hers after eight years, and another after three of indecision, finding no rest save in complete surrender.

Scores of our associates are now scattered in almost every corner of the civilised world, whose names will be found with numbers of others written in a worn Bible on earth; in heaven, in the Lamb's Book of Life, which is the real membership.

On Thursday the last meeting and yesterday the last Sunday Bible reading were held at these rooms, larger and more commodious apartments having been secured at 26 Faubourg St. Honoré, where we shall have a small home for English girls employed in shops and apprenticed in houses of business. This means greatly increased expenditure with an empty exchequer—the rent alone being £220 a year—but it is a great necessity, as these young people form a class of themselves for whom we have not sufficient accommodation at our Home in the Avenue Wagram.

During their first apprenticeship their remuneration consists chiefly in two meals a day, no lodging, little or no pay, and long hours of hard work, and this where one sees on every side the costliness of sin.

But we cannot leave our old Young Women's Christian Association rooms, where every step has become hallowed ground from answered prayer, and where many a girl has sought and found a friend in Jesus, without bearing our testimony to the power of God's presence, and asking for much prayer that this branch of our work may be so consecrated afresh, that we may yet "see greater things than these," in our new Home and Young Women's Christian Association in Paris. Ada M. Leigh.

Y.W.C.A., Tryon House.—One hundred and thirty young women have found a safe shelter in this Home during the past year; some very young, who have been given us to care for by loving parents, who naturally shrank from letting them come to London. It has always been our wish to make it feel like home, and to take a motherly interest in all who are entrusted to our care. Before moving to our new Tryon House (for we shall still keep the name) we want some very substantial help, and we venture to appeal for £300, that we may begin out of debt, and with no money burden upon us. We have had the privilege of working without remuneration for several years, and although we are affiliated with the Young Women's Christian Association, we do not receive one penny from its funds.—Catherine Ellis, Annie C. Bamber, Hon. Superintendents.

Counsels to Emigrants.

A PARTY of emigrants, going to Canada under the auspices of the London Samaritan Society, left St. Pancras yesterday (Wednesday). In reply to invitations sent by Mr. J. J. Jones, to be present at a meeting at St. Pancras before starting, the following very interesting letters were written by the Archbishop of Canterbury and Archdeacon Farrar:—

"My Dear Sir,—I am sorry that I cannot meet the Lord Mayor at St. Pancras Station at the departure of the emigrants; I shall not be within reach. But I am thankful that the Lord Mayor will address them. He will speak from his heart helpful and true words. May God be with them on the waters and in their new homes. May He prosper the work of their hands; may He keep them pure from the dreadful sins which they have seen to be the ruin of so many in their own land; may He keep them from ruining others by bringing in fresh sins among them. Many tribes have had to curse the day when Englishmen came among them. But may these Englishmen be true Christians, and not forget their faith, their hope, and their Master in heaven. Then they will spend the first fruits of their prosperity in providing themselves with churches and schools, and so the foundation of future greatness and happiness and real 'wealth,' in its old sense, will be laid.—I remain, my dear Sir, yours very truly, "Edw. Cantuar.

"Lambeth Palace."

"Dear Sir,—It would have been a great pleasure to me to support the Lord Mayor on April 23, and to say a few words to the emigrants, as you kindly propose. I shall be prevented from doing so by other duties and engagements. Tell them that though they will be exiles from home, they need never be exiles from the best memories of home, and the truest and purest lessons which they learnt as little children in their schools. They will not change themselves by changing the scenes and the climate in which they live, and if they remain true to themselves, to the immortal soul which God has given them, they will have that inward peace and hope which alone can give real happiness. Even the severest trials and hardships of life, which happen to all of us in turn, become bearable when we can face them with the courage of an innocent and quiet mind.

"When W. Lloyd Garrison, who helped to overthrow slavery in America, was shut up in a prison cell as the only way to save his life from a mob, he tells us that he spent a perfectly peaceful night because he had with him two of the best companions, namely, a good cause and a clear conscience.

"When Sir Humphrey Gilbert was sailing home from Newfoundland in a terrible storm, he sat at the stern of his vessel, and the last words he spoke before she foundered were: 'Never fear, my men, God is as near us by sea as by land, and either way may lead to heaven.' Perhaps some of the emigrants may remember something of these two anecdotes, and may find a little comfort from them hereafter. May God be with them and give them his blessing.—Yours very truly, "F. W. Farrar.

Mimicking a Welsh Sermon.—In our issue of April 3 we referred in a note to a paragraph on this subject in The Christian World. In its issue of April 10 our contemporary had the following: "In reply to an inquiry by Mr. E. F. Mitchell, of Bradford, respecting our Note of March 27, Mr. Herbert Gladstone states that he in no sense 'presided' at the Press Club Dinner; that he was not aware that Mr. Maccabe's performance was for his benefit especially; or that it was a 'burlesque on sacred things,' and that neither he nor Mr. Maccabe knows the Welsh language. We much regret that we should have helped to give circulation to such an unfounded report. It, of course, did not originate with us. That the story was noted was only because it was so strangely at variance with the spirit for which the family of Mr. Herbert Gladstone is universally esteemed."

THE EVANGELISTIC VILLAGE MISSION, BREACHWOOD GREEN.

THIS Evangelistic Mission was instituted in 1874 at Kingston, in Hampshire, for the purpose of carrying the Gospel to the villages, hamlets, and solitary dwellings of the New Forest, Salisbury Plain, and other scattered districts where evangelists and missionaries seldom penetrate.

Frequent calls to labour in other parts of the Kingdom led us four years back to fix our abode at Breachwood Green, Herts, it being for a time more central and convenient.

Hitherto our desire has always been to do our work in a quiet way, and to leave the record with Him who best knows how to estimate it, and for this reason we have carefully shunned publicity, and we do not now adopt a fresh course without much exercise of mind.

But amongst other reasons for issuing this notice are the following, viz.: When speaking of our work to others we are continually asked, "What is your Evangelistic Village Mission?" "How is it supported?" "Why have we never heard of it?" &c. &c.

Again, our friends are now very numerous, and reside in various parts of the Kingdom, many of whom feel a deep and continued interest in our movements, and complain that they search The Christian and other papers in vain to find any trace of our whereabouts or of what we are doing. To satisfy such inquirers we now think it desirable from time to time to give some short account of our labours.

The nature of our work, necessitating a continual change of sphere, these notices will be intended to supply the place of a correspondence, somewhat burdensome and difficult to maintain, and not to give notoriety to a Mission which prefers rather to shun than to court publicity.

Furthermore, we wish to state that our Mission, with its staff of some six or seven and sometimes more workers, has hitherto been made self-supporting mainly by business transactions, but as this after all furnishes only a limited and uncertain income, our places of usefulness are on this account necessarily circumscribed, notwithstanding the fact that the work of the Mission so recommends itself that fresh doors of usefulness open to us in many directions.

Our present methods of supply also often cause much trial to faith and the loss of time that we should be glad to use in more direct work, and although we are very reluctant to ask anyone for money, we should indeed be glad to be relieved of some of the pressure upon our time and strength which such methods entail, and therefore seek the sympathy and co-operation of such Christian friends as may feel interested in the special character of our work, the principal features of which are to assist pastors and others who have the care of small or weak churches, Mission halls, or similar places, and who are unable to invite an evangelist because of the expense attending his Mission.

There are a great many such places sadly neglected on this account. We find it therefore very needful to avoid being any burden to those we seek to serve, and so prefer always to go at our own charges. Such small places can do but very little to help us, and as a rule we make no collection until the last service of the Mission, when the converts and others who have received benefit have the opportunity of giving a thank-offering to help on the work elsewhere.

But being often requested by some who drop in promiscuously and enjoy the meetings, and who wish to give a trifle, we have of late placed a box at the door for this purpose, but none are asked or expected to give unless they desire to do so.

Our Mission is quite unsectarian in its sympathies, its one object being love of souls and of the Gospel.

In the summer months we give more attention to open-air work, and usually long missionary journeys are made with Bible-van, &c., across the country. Several well-known Christians have accompanied us in some of our excursions, and have all expressed themselves as greatly pleased with the journey, and gratified with the part they have taken in the work, and this has led us to conclude that others might like to take advantage of an opportunity which will afford a pleasant change, and at the same time present many facilities for doing good. We, therefore, purpose making several journeys this summer from Breachwood Green (which is near to Luton, Beds., thirty miles from St. Pancras) to Bournemouth, distance about 140 miles, which will take a week, exclusive of Sunday.

We can provide covered and open vehicles, and we carry an harmonium and cornet, which, with good singing, never fail to draw a large congregation on the village green and other wayside places.

We shall be glad to have the company of any Christian (lady or gentleman), or a party of friends who may wish to take a little holiday in this way, and who are able at the same time to feel some interest in mission work.

The cost of the journey will be regulated according to requirements, and particulars may be had on application.

The first journey is expected to be about May 19, and those who cannot afford to spend a week may join the party at any of the following towns: Hemel-Hempstead, Amersham, Windsor, Ascot, Sandhurst, Odiham, Basingstoke, Winchester, Southampton, Lyndhurst, Ringwood, Christ Church, or Bournemouth: to return by Fordingbridge, Salisbury, Amesbury, Andover, Newbury, Reading, Maidenhead, Beaconsfield, Rickmansworth, Watford, and St. Albans.

There are many places of historic interest which we turn aside to visit, such as Rufus Stone in the centre of the New Forest, Stonehenge on Salisbury Plain, &c. We shall do our best to make the excursion both pleasing and profitable, and we confidently believe that those who accompany us in our first journey will anticipate a second before the season closes.

We shall be glad to correspond with any one wishing to take part in this work, and shall gladly welcome anyone wishing to gain experience and training, for which this Mission affords one of the best fields possible, either for ladies or gentlemen. This may be done with us at a trifling cost.

Space forbids our adding much as to the importance of this kind of rural work, but it can scarcely be overrated, for if the young people are allowed to grow up without proper religious instruction (as is the case in very many places), the great cities and centres of commerce will suffer in proportion, and as many are compelled to leave their homes at an early age it is of the greatest importance that they should be influenced for good before leaving their native place for life in the city, and we are glad to be able to state that we have the names of a very large number of young men, who are now to be found in almost all parts of the kingdom as well as abroad, who instead of doing their best to promote vice and crime, are doing what they can to extend the Redeemer's kingdom and to make his name a praise in the earth.

To those who may require our services, we shall be glad to forward numerous testimonials, and to give other particulars on application to Mr. George D. Shipley, Superintendent Evangelistic Village Mission, The Manse, Breachwood-green, Welwyn, Herts.

NORTH-EAST LONDON GOSPEL MISSION.—Park Hall, seating about 300 souls, was opened on Easter Monday. It forms the fifth centre of active Mission labour embraced by the North-east London Gospel Mission. After holding meetings among the holiday crowds in Victoria-park, the friends took tea in the new hall, to which over 200 sat down, followed later by the opening meeting. During the earlier part of the evening many hearty testimonies were given by various workers and others amongst the congregation. These were followed by deeply earnest and powerful addresses by several brethren present. The interest seemed to reach its height during a powerful appeal by Mr. Griffith, an evangelist from Millwall, when several raised their hands as testifying to their acceptance of Christ at that service. There are rooms adjoining, though as yet unfinished, for class-rooms and caretaker.

The Street Arab.—A Plea.

ONLY a poor street Arab,
Tattered his clothes, and worn;
But you need not, as you pass him,
Throw him a glance of scorn.

You need not shrink and shudder
As though he were only a clod;
Not a little outcast brother
Made by the self-same God.

The child of our Father in heaven,
With talents perchance as great
As yours, which you deem so brilliant,
Were his but a better fate.

How can he help his surroundings?
Do you think that he cares to be thus?
Nor ever casts envious glances,
Nor gazes with longing at us?

You make a wide sweep on the pathway
Wherever he chances to be;
Do you dream that the Lord you call Master
Approves of such doings in thee?

If now the Lord Jesus were dwelling
In the midst of the great city's throb,
Do you think He would pass by, unheeding
The little lad's pitiful sob?

Do you think the good Father who willeth,
In pity, that not even one
Of these little children should perish,
Would say to his servant, "Well done"?

His servant? for such you are counted
By all your good neighbours and friends
Then is it your part to make mock of
The poor little waif that He sends?

For each ragged lad you encountered,
And that craves you to help him along,
Is sent to you by the all-Father
That the weak may be helped by the strong.

Then give to the Homes which receive them,
And train them for years to be;
You shall hear "Inasmuch as ye did it
Ye verily did it to me."

A Sailors' Rest for Cherbourg.

MR. AND MRS. BRUCE MOORHOUSE having for some time had Cherbourg laid on their hearts as a good sphere for Mission work, have for the last few weeks been residing there with this object in view. They have been asked by eight captains and about 100 men to establish a "Sailors' Rest," and are assured that this would be an excellent place, as the French could then be freely invited. Similar "Rests" are succeeding at Honfleur, St. Malo, and Granville. It is proposed, therefore, to purchase and fit up a hulk, for which about £250 is needed, and a similar amount to carry on the work at Guernsey, where Mr. and Mrs. Moorhouse have a very successful Mission. There are about 40,000 men in Cherbourg, and 900 vessels with 12,000 English sailors visit the port annually, for whom there is no place where they can spend their time when on shore. Mr. and Mrs. Moorhouse purpose returning to England to plead for the work both in Cherbourg and in Guernsey, and will be glad to hear of openings where they can address meetings for this purpose. Meanwhile communications may be sent to Mr. Gawin Kirkham, 15, Beresford-road, Highbury New-park, London, N.

LEIGH, TONBRIDGE.—The usual meetings for Christian fellowship were held in Leigh Chapel on Bank Holiday. Nearly 400 were assembled in the morning for the Lord's Supper, and more than that number in the afternoon and evening meetings. A number of young converts bore testimony of their conversion, and a spirit of praise and thanksgiving pervaded the day's meetings, the pleasure of which was enhanced by Mr. S. Morley kindly opening his grounds for the people.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

HOTEL WAITERS IN BERLIN.

THE Berlin Y.M.C.A. recently held a meeting, to which the waiters of the principal hotels were invited. A head waiter, who had not long since returned from England, related how he had been ill in a London hospital, and through the visits of a missionary he had yielded himself to the Lord. Then followed a very tender and persuasive Gospel address from a minister, upon the Saviour's words "Come unto Me." At the close of the meeting several waiters joined the Association, and several bought a copy of the New Testament.—Y.M.C.A. Anzeiger.

LIBERIA, WEST AFRICA.

Mrs. Amanda Smith while labouring here was stricken with a severe attack of African fever, which laid her low for a very considerable time. She has now, however, been able to resume her active service. She heartily thanks those friends who have kindly sent her tracts and books.

CONVERSIONS IN RUSSIA.

A desire for the Word of Life is very manifest in Warsaw. Through the preaching of the Gospel some ten or twelve have lately believed and joined themselves to the Lord's people. As the hall in which the meetings are held is too small to contain the numbers pressing in to hear the Gospel, a larger one is being sought. In Lodz, too, the Word is preached with power, and forty-four believers were baptized, in February, on a confession of their faith, in the presence of a large number of witnesses.

SOUTHLAND, N.Z.

The Salvation Army is rapidly extending its work in this part of New Zealand, and by sending out parties into the small country towns and villages is stirring up the people as they have never been stirred before. Although it fails to command the universal sympathy and co-operation of the religious public, yet I believe it is doing a good work amongst the class which it especially seeks to influence, besides bringing the subject of religion into such every-day prominence as cannot fail to result in good in many ways. BIGOTRY IN MILAN.

A colporteur named Columbus was standing not long since before the door of the church, Porta Vittoria, with a number of New Testaments, which he offered for sale to the passers-by, at the same time speaking to them of Jesus. Many gathered around him and listened reverently to his earnest words, while not a few, including two soldiers, also possessed themselves of the Book of books. At this moment two priests drew near, who each bought a New Testament. As once the Scribes and Pharisees gnashed their teeth upon Stephen, so did these priests in fanatical rage, and tore into a thousand pieces the leaves of the Holy Scriptures, scattering them to the winds, while they trampled the binding under foot. This exhibition of hatred had the effect of bringing the majority to the side of the colporteur, while the two soldiers said, "The Gospel, in the mouth of the priests, is as badly taken care of as the holy tomb of our Redeemer in the hands of the Turks."—Wahrheitszeuge.

PERSECUTION IN SPAIN.

The same periodical states that "the Government of Spain will pay attention to every appeal against any act of religious intolerance, such as has recently taken place against evangelical congregations and pastors. The Government is determined to respect freedom of religious worship. Le Christianisme, however, of the same date, contains a long article of quite an opposite character: "Alphonse XIII., after having appeared for a moment desirous of holding out a hand to religious liberty, has openly turned with an incontestable decision towards a policy of resistance and reaction, since which there has been quite an avalanche of trials, arrests, and condemnations. All have their turn, Republicans, Freethinkers, and Protestants, but these last have most to fear from the Ultramontanes in the Cabinet. The clergy will redouble their hatred and violence against our co-religionists, unless rigorous measures are taken by higher authorities. At any rate, they will permit the greatest intolerance to have its course. Recent events prove that more than ever in Spain the authority of the bishops and priests is above that of King, Ministers, or Parliament, and it is primarily to this that the judges yield."

SOCIAL PURITY IN BERLIN.

A large gathering of women of varied social position lately met in Berlin, at the invitation of the City Mission Committee, to hear addresses upon "The Moral Misery of the Fallen," by the Court preacher, Pastor Stöcken; "The Necessity of Fighting against Unchastity," by Pastor Wieszner; and "The Founding of a Women's Help Society," by Pastor Merensky, the Superintendent of the Mission.

Pastor Stöcker thanked God that so many women (about 500) had met, whose hearts had been touched by the sore need of their sisters, and who were willing to seek to snatch them from the power of Satan. In the Revelation of John it is twice said, "she is fallen," and it is remarkable how there the combined world-power, setting itself against the holy God, is represented by the picture of a fallen woman. . . . Not only in the lower classes, but even in the highest positions, fallen ones are to be found. They have not strength enough to lift themselves out of the slime, and so need a helping hand, even though all shame and sense of honour should have departed. In the world of men, too, there is a sad lack of purity. A new breath of life must go forth upon our young men. Therefore we call upon pure women to help in rescuing the twenty-five to thirty thousand fallen women of Berlin.

Pastor Wieszner referred to the old Greek myth of the minotaur, to whom were sacrificed every year the choicest young men and maidens of Athens. In his position as prison chaplain he had opportunity of learning how often the first departure from purity ended in the House of Correction. As in the fable, we want heroes and heroines to destroy this monster and deliver the victims.

Herr Merensky exhorted his hearers not to shrink from it as dirty work; a heart consecrated to God can never be soiled by kindly love to the miserable and lost.

A union was then formed of those who would seek to rescue the fallen, or, even better, to look after young girls in circumstances of peril; progress to be reported at a meeting to be held the first Wednesday in every month.—Evan. Kirch. Anzeiger.

Germans in the East-end.

REV. J. J. SOMMER, who for many years laboured in the Methodist Church at Stuttgart, has now for some time had the charge of the Peter Böhler Chapel, Commercial road. His work is exclusively amongst the German poor, who abound in that neighbourhood and Ratcliffe Highway, and is carried on, in addition to the chapel services, by means of open-air preaching, tract distributing, and personal dealing with those impressed or needing help.

This is a difficult sphere of labour, and rendered the more so from the fact that numbers of the sailors who are thus reached are only on shore for a short time, and are often lost sight of when their time comes to sail in their vessels. But from many of these encouraging letters are often received, showing that the Word spoken by the wayside has found a resting-place in the heart, and is bringing forth fruit to the glory of God.

But the great difficulty experienced in such a work as this is that they have no suitable home or lodging-place. Being Germans, and often quite ignorant of the English language, they shrink from visiting even such excellent resorts as the Strangers' Rest, and of course they could not all be accommodated there; consequently the workers are often confronted with the question: "Where can we go to avoid all the temptations and snares which we meet?"

It is therefore proposed to purchase a house exclusively for the use of German sailors, that they may thus be the more readily reached with the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and guarded from the manifold snares which beset them while in this city.

It is hoped that many friends will respond to this appeal, and send subscriptions to Rev. J. J. Sommer, 66, Lauriston-road, South Hackney; or to the office of this paper.

HELP FOR POOR NEEDLEWOMEN.

WHILE Mrs. Sarah Heckford is making arrangements on a large scale to ensure better payment for women's work, may I call attention to a simple matter by which many ladies might help to improve the condition of poor needlewomen?

In many families of the upper middle-class it is usual to purchase the under linen ready made. There is a great difference in such articles both as to quality and price. The best are very expensive, tolerably good, and the sewing well paid for. To provide underclothing for a large family, from first-class establishments, would involve a yearly expenditure which comparatively few could meet. Second-class clothing has little to recommend it, either in the way of material or work. The wear of a few months, or even weeks, aided by a careless laundress, will suffice to make extensive repairs necessary. My object now is to suggest to those who are in the habit of dealing with these second-rate shops, a plan, by adopting which they will in the long run considerably diminish their expenditure, get good material, durable work, and help to lessen the complaint that women are inadequately paid for their work.

Exceedingly good cotton or, as it is often called, "long cloth," can now be purchased for 9d. or 10d. per yard. To buy a whole piece at a time somewhat lessens the cost. This good material, cut out at home and sent to respectable women to make up, will produce garments quite equal to the first-class sold at shops, often better, and at a cost rather under than over what is paid for inferior goods.

Take, for example, the six-shilling shirt. Good calico and Irish linen for fronts, collars, and wristbands, can be purchased for three-and-sixpence per shirt, leaving two shillings and sixpence for the making. The result will be a strong, well-made shirt, which can be reckoned on as wearing three or four times as long as the flimsy articles sold costing the same money, with the added advantage that the needlewoman has been paid first hand.

It often happens in a family that one daughter will be more clever at needlework than the rest. By cultivating this talent she might soon qualify herself to cut out all the various articles required for family use, and by so doing would be the means of effecting a great reduction in the family expenditure for clothing. Good cutting out requires much skill and contrivance, and is a very different thing from sitting down to monotonous sewing.

If this plan were to become at all general, it might be worth while for a few women, needing remunerative employment, to qualify themselves to go out by the day as professional cutters out. In this case they should be paid not less than five shillings a day, as the occupation, besides requiring much skill, is exceedingly fatiguing. So many articles could, however, be cut out in the course of the day by a skilled hand, that the added expense would be trifling, when reckoned in the whole amount. Great pains should be taken not to puzzle the "sewing woman" more than can be helped. A soft pencil should be almost as necessary to the cutter-out as her scissors. The various pieces should be so marked that no mistake could be made as to their relationship to other pieces. The judicious use of a little tacking thread will save much time and temper and often prevent after-trouble and disappointment. The material used should be washed and mangled before cutting out.—I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

Streatham Common, April 19. M. Bayly.

DUMFRIES.—A short series of evangelistic meetings has been held in George-street Free Church, Dumfries, by the pastor, Rev. C. M'Neil, Rev. Mr. Hallers-Closeburn, Rev. Mr. M'Culloch, Kilmarnock, and Dr. Moxey, Edinburgh. The attendance increased nightly, and on the last Sabbath evening the large church was quite filled. Dr. Moxey spoke with great effect, and at the after-meeting a number rose in their places as having that evening decided for Christ. Dr. Moxey had addressed a meeting of young men in the same church that morning and also a gathering of children in the afternoon.

Letters to the Editor.

"THE CHRISTIAN" IN THE WEST INDIES

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly convey my sincere thanks to the unknown friend who mail by mail sends me The Christian. They are always welcomed, and have often proved a means of inspiration and strength in my work.

But I would ask the kind friend who thus helps me in my work, to direct merely "—— St. Eustatius, West Indies," and not "St. Eustatius, Antigua, West Indies." Antigua is nearly ninety miles away from here, and consequently I receive The Christians two or three weeks later than I otherwise should do.

For the information of those who send The Christian to Wesleyan missionaries, I would say, they will find their "Postal Addresses" in "The Minutes of Conference" for each year, nearly at the end of the book. Praying that God's blessing may attend every issue of The Christian, I remain, yours truly, W. W. Thackeray.

HOLINESS AND FAITH HEALING.

Sir,—On behalf of the speakers at the Conference in Hackney on these subjects, I trust you will allow me to correct a grave error in your report of the same. The report says: "The root principle of sin in the believer was shown to be not annihilated, but held in subjection and kept under." I desire to say that no such form of doctrine was even once uttered by any of the speakers convened, nor do any of them holdsuch views, which you are aware are not to be found in the Scriptures. They teach that the blood of Christ is purificative and purgative, not repressive, as saith the Scriptures.—Yours faithfully. Wm. Woods Smyth.

Maidstone, April 17.

[We confess that we are not aware that the view above stated, viz., that the root principle of sin in the believer is not annihilated, but held in subjection and kept under "is not to be found in the Scriptures." On the contrary, the Scriptures testify that "if we say we have no sin we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us."

Do Dr. Woods Smyth and the others who spoke at Hackney, seriously mean to present themselves to us as men and women in whom the root principle of sin has been annihilated? This pretension reminds us of Coleridge's lines:—

"Weave, weave a circle round him thrice,
And close your eyes with holy dread;
For he on honeydew hath fed,
And drunk the milk of paradise."

Surely there must be some wonderful mistake, some strange misunderstanding of the use of terms. On the one hand we have George Müller, a man whose praise is in all the churches, as a good man, a wise and prudent man, a man of faith and prayer, to the reality of which God has borne witness by great stone edifices set on a hill, and by the daily need supplied of two thousand orphans, besides many other world-wide works of love and truth. Yet George Müller publicly speaks of himself in the following words:—

"When I look at myself, what have I to say? I am a poor miserable sinner, though, by the grace of God, I have sought to walk for fifty-six years and nine months in the ways of the Lord, and have, in some little measure, also been able to walk to the praise, and honour, and glory of God in some respects. Yet in myself I am nothing but a poor miserable sinner, and if God were to deal with me according to my sins, what would I say? That I am unclean, unclean; and yet because I am a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, I am on the side of God, reckoned just and righteous. I am his darling child, because I trust in Christ, because I am united to Him by faith, that fills my heart with peace and joy, and thus I am constrained to work for God. The Lord grant that all of us may increasingly, really, and truly enter into what God, in the riches of his grace, has provided for us in the great storehouse of his Son, the Lord Jesus Christ, so that, constrained by love and gratitude, we may live not to ourselves, but to Him who died and rose again for us."

Dr. Woods Smyth, on the other hand, and those whom he represents, repudiate any such confession, and declare that in them the root principle of sin is annihilated.

"He that is down need fear no fall,
He that is low no pride;
He that is humble ever shall
Have God to be his guide."—Ed.]

A QUERY.

Dear Sir,—At the late Conference on Foreign Missions Mrs. Grattan Guinness said: "The evangelisation of the world is utterly hopeless unless we can multiply the number of the workers a thousandfold. We know that a short time only will elapse before the Lord returns. His command is that the Gospel shall be proclaimed in all nations for a witness before the end can come. If this word is to be fulfilled the Church must wake from her slumber; nine-tenths of the world are yet unevangelised." It is also stated as a fact that over a thousand millions out of 1400 millions (the world's population) are non-Christians, and mostly heathen, the greater part of whom have never even heard of Christ. This being so, how, as some believe, can the Lord's coming be expected at any moment?—I am, Sir, yours obediently, S. B.

A CALL TO AGGRESSIVE WORK.

Dear Sir,—Would it not be grand if as one of the results of the Moody and Sankey Mission, Christian workers were banded together for united daily aggressive work among the seething millions of London? The "harvest is ready but the labourers are few."

Speaking generally, all Christians can claim the three hours from seven to ten p.m. as being free for the Lord's service. Many of us remember the days when every night was devoted to some scene of pleasure.

Why have we not some recognised counter attractions to the concert, the ball, the dinner party, the club, the opera, &c. &c., that once occupied all our spare evenings?

I should like to see a unity of "All for Jesus" disciples in every district, determined at all cost to meet daily for prayer, counsel, and active work among the heathen of our own country, resolved to gather in the masses to Gospel services, &c., in unsectarian halls.

To make such services attractive there must be solo and choir singing, and the ladies must show by practical sympathy and daily visitations how to alleviate the burdens which their poorer brethren find so difficult to surmount. Good management and an occasional helping hand will do far more to raise these people and secure their sympathy in the work than "charity doles," which are often given to the undeserving. Does not the Lord demand every moment of our time for his service?—I am, your obedient servant,

Frederick Churchill.

A FARMER'S QUESTION.

Sir,—I am distributing the enclosed in the following ways: (1) Posting them upon the walls of all the parishes of this union; (2) giving them away as handbills at the Corn Exchange of the nearest town on a market day; (3) putting one into each house of my agricultural parish. If you would have the goodness to publish this letter, with the bill, and where it may be obtained, perhaps others would try to interest agriculturists in similar ways. Farmers and farm labourers have been less affected by the Temperance movement than any other class. I have no interest in the sale of the bill. Country Parson.

IMPORTANT TO AGRICULTURISTS!!!

What is to Repay the Farmer for his Malting Barley?

The Teetotaler.

Suppose a man to consume the very moderate amount of one pint of beer a day. It amounts in the year, at 2½d. per pint, to £3 16s. 5d. This ought to be, though it scarcely ever is, entirely composed of malt, hops, and water; that is entirely of farmers' produce and water. To make 365 pints of beer, 4s. worth of hops and three bushels of barley, at a cost of 15s. (together 19s.) would be required, and that is all the farmer receives of the beer-money. The remainder, £2 17s., goes to pay beer-duty, labour, licences, brewers' and publicans' profits.

But suppose a man laid out this £3 16s. in farmers' produce in another way. He could then buy—

24 lbs. of meat, at 9d. per lb.		£0	18 0
10 st. of flour, at 2s. 2d. per st.		1	1 8
7 lbs. of butter, at 1s. 4d. per lb.		0	9 4
8 lbs. of cheese, at 8d. per lb.		0	5 4
2 sacks of potatoes, at 10s. each		1	0 0
10 lbs. of oatmeal, at 2d. per lb.		0	1 8
	£3	16	0
From this sum deduct—
Butcher's profit, say	£0 3 0
Greengrocer's and Baker's	0 8 0
Grocer's	0 3 2	0	14 2
Leaving for the Farmer		£3	1 10

Thus the Farmer gets £3 1s. 10d. from the Teetotaler, and only 19s. from the Beer-drinker.

In other words, the Tectotaler is more than three times as good a customer to the Farmer as the Beer-drinker.

Notices of Books, &c.

A small paper entitled The Welsh Evangelist, printed in the Welsh language, is published monthly by Mr. D. E. Jones, Tredegar, Mon., and may be had of him at two shillings per 100. It sets forth the Gospel in a simple yet direct way, and will be found very useful for general circulation.

The Bible, the Sunday-school Text-book, 2s., and A Primer of Christian Evidence, 1s. 6d. Sunday School Union. These are two of a series of "Normal Studies for Sunday-school Teachers," which are intended to aid them in attaining fitness for their work. The former deals with the authenticity and genuineness of the Bible, while the latter gives in a nutshell the most important of the many arguments which have been adduced in support of Christianity. Now that infidelity is spreading its dire influence to such an alarming extent around us, we hail with joy every testimony for the truth of the Gospel and its foundation, the Word of God. We warmly commend these books to all who have the training of the young, that they may thoroughly master for themselves what they have to teach to others.

Outline Lessons for Junior Classes. 3s. 6d. Sunday-school Union. This is another useful book for teachers, giving an introduction, exposition, and sketch of application of every incident in the life of our Lord. We do not advocate "props," but this book leaves ample scope for originality in the working out of the subjects. The addition of "blackboard plans" is an ingenious and striking feature of the book.

Ezekiel's Last Vision, relating to the Land, City, and Temple of Israel in the Millennium. By Frank H. White. S. W. Partridge & Co. 4d. This pamphlet treats of that glorious time when Christ shall take his great power and reign, and when the saints shall inherit the kingdom prepared for them before the foundation of the world, and when the government of the world will be as perfect as are all the works of the Perfect One. In the early part Mr. White exposes the fallacy of that interpretation of Scripture which would refer this vision to the Church instead of to Israel, thereby robbing Israel of their future earthly dominion, and robbing the Church of the glory which excelleth and which is heavenly. Mr. White makes copious extracts from the writings of Mr. B. W. Newton, corroborating his own teachings. The book winds up, as does the vision, with the words Jehovah Shammah, The Lord is there, which comforts the hearts of God's people, as they know that they too shall be there "for ever with the Lord."

 In our recent review of Mr. Newberry's Englishman's Bible (Hodder and Stoughton) the price was erroneously stated to be 10s., instead of 16s.

DUFFIELD, DERBY.—Mr. G. T. Gillingham has held some special services here with much blessing. A number of those who were converted through his instrumentality twelve months ago have formed themselves into a Mission band, holding open-air services, cottage meetings, united prayer-meetings, Bible-classes, &c. There is a flourishing branch of the Y.M.C.A., while one young man is studying for Foreign Mission work in Central Africa.

The Facts about Vivisection.

A SMALL, but very important work, entitled, "The Clergy and Vivisection," has lately been published by Messrs. Hatchard, of Piccadilly. It consists of a statement of facts, so calm, so moderate, and so lucid, that it seems likely to prove the most universally useful of all the publications issued against the practice. The author, Mr. Mark Thornhill, has learned in his high judicial capacity in India, to deal carefully with evidence.

The following are quotations from the book: "The tracts and pamphlets against vivisection are very numerous, and many are of the highest quality, full of earnest thought, of convincing reasoning, of eloquent appeals. But I have not found any pamphlets giving a full statement of what vivisection actually is, a summary of the grounds most usually relied on for its justification, and a consideration of their validity. Such a pamphlet I have, therefore, endeavoured to compose. On two points I have bestowed especial pains: first, to quote reliable authority for all my statements; secondly, to represent fairly the attitude of the other side.

"I have devoted a separate chapter to a consideration of the benefits of vivisection, and I have devoted another chapter to a consideration of the alleged use of anæsthetics, because I have found that it is on these two points that the greatest misconceptions prevail. I have also given a separate chapter to a consideration of the alleged humanity of vivisectors."

"The Vivisection Act is approved of by the general public, not so much for what it has really done, as for what it is erroneously supposed to have done. The general prohibitions with which the Act commences have attracted attention, while the exceptions which follow, and which nullify those prohibitions, have been overlooked. In consequence, there is an almost universal belief that vivisectional experiments are now only permitted under anæsthetics, and for the discovery of some remedy for injury or disease; whereas, in reality, the Act permits any kind of experiment, for any object, and either with or without anæsthetics."

"We find that a result arrived at by any one physiologist is almost invariably disputed by other physiologists, and that series on series of experiments are performed before the result is accepted or rejected; often, that it still remains undecided. We find that in each of these disputations, hundreds, occasionally thousands, of animals are sacrificed. (Appendix M.)"

"The benefit of vivisection is, I admit, a matter on which opposite opinions may honestly be held, but the amount and the painfulness of vivisectional experiments are not matters of discussion, but matters of fact. The facts are easily ascertainable, and it is assuredly the duty of those who uphold vivisection to ascertain them; and all discussion on the justifiableness of vivisection, which ignores these facts, is alike unprofitable and dishonest."

"Howard reformed our prisons less by reasonings as to what they should be, than by exhibiting what they were; similarly, Wilberforce abolished the slave trade more by exposure of its horrors than by arguments as to its iniquity. In like manner, I think, a representation of the facts of vivisection will, better than reasoning, cause a conviction of its sinfulness."

"Dr. Burdon-Sanderson described in detail an experiment on a dog, of which the following is a summary:—

"1. The animal was rendered motionless by a drug which, without lessening pain, paralyses motion.

"2. His throat was cut open, and a tube inserted in the wind-pipe, the other end of the tube communicating with the nozzle of the bellows. The bellows was worked by an engine, and artificial breathing thus maintained.

"3. The head was partially flayed, and an artery exposed.

"4. The spinal marrow was next cut through.

"5. Needles were dug in the exposed marrow.

"6. The needles were connected with a galvanic battery, and shocks given to the marrow.

"7. The nerves from the brain to the heart were burnt away by means of galvanism.

"8. The nerves from the spine further excited shocks from the battery. (Parliamentary Blue Book, Appendix iv.)

"Dr. Burdon-Sanderson is spoken of by Dr. Simon (Question 1476) as one of the humanest of men, but this is the manner in which he concludes his description of the experiments:—'This beautiful, simple experiment we owe to Dr. Strickler, with whom I had the pleasure of repeating it here very frequently last summer!'"

"The modern physiologists of England identify themselves entirely with the physiologists of France, Germany, and Italy. They justify the same class of experiments, the same amount of experiment. They profess the same indifference to animal suffering, as compared with the acquisition of scientific knowledge. They simply do not experiment to the same extent, because the law prevents them, but against this restraint they remonstrate. They are now agitating for its removal. The persons who denounce the continental physiologists must cease to extol the humanity of the physiologists of England. Either both are humane or neither."

"It is notorious that vivisection is in the main confined to the physiologists. The mass of the practising surgeons acquire their skill and their knowledge solely and entirely from the experience of their patients. It is from the influence of the physiologists, the men of abstract science, that the opinions in favour of vivisection have arisen, and in the medical, as in other professions, when certain opinions have been adopted, few have the courage or even the desire to dispute their correctness." Forms of Petitions to Parliament may be obtained from Mr. Francis Vincent, Cam House, Dursly, Gloucestershire.

Evangelistic Notes.

Eastbourne.—Mr. George Blaiklock has paid a third visit, and conducted a five days' Gospel Temperance Mission in the public hall.

Turriff.—A series of evangelistic meetings has been very successfully carried on here by Mr. Richard Hill, evangelist. The meetings were well attended on week nights, and on Sabbath evenings crowded to overflowing. The word spoken by Mr. Hill has been greatly blessed.

Hanley.—At Hanley Old Church on Sunday morning, April 13, at six o'clock, no fewer than 300 people, members of the Mission (several of them recently reclaimed from a downward career) partook of the Lord's Supper. In the evening there was an outdoor procession. The choir and clergy assembled in the Mission hall, and being joined by a large number of workers and sympathisers, started on a march through the principal streets of the town. Later on a meeting was held in the Mission Hall, when Rev. T. P. Ring, vicar, Mr. Colville, the missioner, and Mr. King, delivered addresses.

Greenock, N.B.—Messrs. Smith and Macnab have laboured with marked success in the Christian Mission premises, West Burn-quare. A large number have been converted since the opening of this Mission five weeks ago. The meetings are quiet, being devoid of all fleshly enthusiasm. The young converts also help in the open air. The Mission held a special service for Christian friends and the young converts, when a number of them gave testimony to their change of heart and life. Churches or Missions during the services of these evangelists can obtain information from Mr. Walter Fisher, Christian Mission, West Burn-square, Greenock, N.B.

Berwick-on-Tweed. — Special services have been held for a fortnight in Cuxon's-lane Mission Hall, by Mr. Davison, who was formerly connected with the Salvation Army, and who suffered severe injuries at Sheffield. From the first, Mr. Davison succeeded in drawing out a great number of careless people from the lowest districts of the town, and not a night has passed without some of these having, to all human appearance, decided for Christ. A number of soldiers have been attending nightly, and several have given pleasing proof of a change of heart. On the last Sabbath evening there could not be less than 600 people present, and the week evening audiences have ranged from 150 to 300. Christian workers here are thankful for the excavating work that has been done among the classes most difficult to reach in this town.

Glasgow.—Mr. Cowper, of the Evangelisation Society, is at present labouring with much acceptance in the Seamen's Chapel, Glasgow.

Hull.—Mr. Forbes began a series of addresses in this town on Good Friday, in a hall which accommodates upwards of 3000 people. Large numbers have put on the Blue Ribbon, and several confess to having been brought to Christ. Mr. Forbes is still carrying on the meetings.

Workington Salvation Mission.—On Friday, April 11, the foundation-stone of a new Mission hall was laid by Mr. James N. Carr, of Carlisle. Tea was provided, and in the evening a large meeting was held in the Good Templars' Hall, addressed by Mr. James N. Carr, Mr. Robert Wilson, Broughton Grange, and other gentlemen. The want of a substantial, commodious hall has long been felt, but the way has now been opened, and, all being well, the Salvation Mission Hall will be opened towards the latter end of the summer. There is a great work to be done in Workington, and our earnest prayer and desire is that the words engraved on the foundation-stone may indeed be blessed to many a weary, sin-sick soul: "In this place will I give peace, saith the Lord of hosts" (Haggai ii. 9).

Soldiers and Sailors' Home, Malta.

READERS of The Christian, who have helped us with the enlargement and refurnishing of the Soldiers and Sailors' Home, Floriana, will be happy to learn that God has accepted their prayers and their offerings, and has prospered the home beyond our expectations, both in attendance and finance. Over 3300 beds were occupied in 1883, and during the same period the takings for refreshments, meals, beds, &c., exceeded £1400, so that the house promises to be self-supporting.

Two years ago we opened a small branch Home, known as the Soldiers and Sailors' Rest, on the east or Cottenera side of the Grand Harbour. This house has prospered under the direction of Rev. T. D. Barnes. The takings for refreshment have averaged £12 or £13 per month. The religious and Temperance meetings have often been over-crowded, while the mothers' meetings and Band of Hope have been attended with most cheering success. Further increase has become impossible in the premises now occupied, and extension of these premises is not practicable.

The refusal of a noble site is offered up to the 12th of June for £3000. A substantial one-storey building, recently used as a Government day school, with a spacious yard, occupies the best part of it, and by adding another storey it would serve admirably all the purposes of Soldiers and Sailors' Home and caretakers' quarters. This site, with the buildings now upon it, is valued at £1500, and it is estimated that another £1000 would be required to supply the necessary additions to the building and furniture. It is for this £2500 that we ask and pray.

With 5000 British soldiers regularly in this garrison, and as many sailors of the Royal Navy making head-quarters here, without mentioning anybody else; with 1500 wine shops, and traps and snares of every sort to ruin our countrymen, there is plenty of work for the two institutions on the west (at Floriana and Valletta), and for the sister institution at Lorenzo Steps, and this one on the east of the Grand Harbour, where 2500 soldiers are quartered, where is also the extensive Royal Dockyard, with dry docks, occupied for the greater part of the year by men-of-war under repair. Acknowledging gratefully the good work which is being done by one and all, it is manifest that there is plenty of room for more.

If the Lord lead the way, it is proposed to place the property under trustees, and to secure that it shall be used, under the direction of the Wesleyan minister for the time being, for the benefit of all soldiers and sailors without distinction.

Communications may be addressed to Rev. R. W. Allen, 26, Edith-road, West Kensington, W.; or to Rev. John Laverack, Floriana, Malta.

Victoria Hall, Norwich.

THE seventh anniversary of this Mission was celebrated on Good Friday with tea and a large public meeting. Friends representing various ecclesiastical views were present.

We desire to record our thankfulness for continued blessing on the efforts to win souls for Christ, and to promote union and concord amongst the children of God. Our platform is broad enough to hold all who, having entered in at the strait gate, are walking in the narrow way. We cultivate the society and seek the co-operation of all who love the Lord Jesus in sincerity.

By the uplifting of Christ in the preaching of the simple Gospel, the services continue to attract crowded and sometimes overflowing congregations. The spirit of hearing is given, souls are saved, and believers are stimulated to earnestness in running the Christian race. Preachers are never lacking, and funds are forthcoming as required.

No wonder, then, that our hearts are filled with gratitude as we remember God's promise to his faithful servants to renew their strength.

Bracondale, Norwich. Robert Adcock.

Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago.

AS a bright light shining through the darkness this Mission continues its good work in extending the right hand of sympathy and help to the wandering and the lost.

Evangelistic meetings draw hundreds under the sound of the Gospel, and among them are found thieves, burglars, ex-convicts, drunkards, fallen women and sinners of the deepest dye. Many a young man just starting on a course of crime and dissipation has been rescued in time, in his turn to help on the good work. The Sunday-school shows an average attendance of 300 per week; the Kindergarten and Industrial School for Girls about fifty daily; the Temperance Coffee-house has given away something like 10,000 free meals since Christmas.

Colonel Clarke is the director of this work, and we recollect with much pleasure hours of profit spent with him at Northfield. He is a man whose one aim in life is to bring in the lost ones, and to a wonderful extent has the Lord owned his work.

Nor is Mrs. Clark any less active, and her visits twice a week to the Chicago jail have brought the good news of a Saviour's pardon to many a hardened and despondent soul.

The total cost of the work is about $6000 a year, the greater part of which is borne by Colonel Clarke himself, donations only amounting to about $800 annually.

Nottinghamshire, Gringley-on-the-Hill.—As last year, a series of meetings has been held in this village by Mr. Gibbens, of the Evangelisation Society, with very abundant tokens of blessing. The remembrance of those was quite sufficient to arouse interest again. From the first great earnestness was manifested, and numbers were drawn together to hear the Gospel told, as one said, "in such a common-sense way." At the end of a fortnight there were many requests to continue the work for another week, which was gladly done. The meetings have been a great blessing to the neighbourhood. People have come every night from distant villages, walking six or seven miles, and no one can estimate the good this society has done by working in this locality. Alfred Strachan.

THE FULL ASSURANCE OF FAITH.

By D. L. MOODY.

[Pocket Size.]

No man is fit for God's service who is filled with doubts. If a man is not sure of his own salvation, how can he help anyone else into the kingdom of God? If I seem in danger of drowning, and do not know whether I shall ever reach the shore, I cannot assist another. I must first get on the solid rock myself, and then I can lend my brother a helping hand. If being myself blind I were to tell another blind man how to get sight, he might reply, "First get healed yourself; and then you can tell me."

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

PHTHISIS.—CASE of MR. ROBERT BURNET, Agent of the National BIBLE SOCIETY of SCOTLAND, 5, St. Andrew's-square, EDINBURGH.

This case was referred to in the Christian Herald of March 5, as one "raised from the gates of death."

The patient visited Coombe Lodge on the 15th of last May. Consumption in the family, the mother having died of Phthisis. Had been five years in China. Had pneumonia first, four years ago; had pleurisy since, followed by signs of consumption, which became developed so far that on examination he was found to have the "upper lobes of the lungs diseased, and congestion at the base of each."

Through June, July, and August, there was gradual improvement. In September he writes that Dr. Alexander had given him a certificate that he might resume his duties. Advised not to leave off the medicine or use of prescribed niment until thoroughly well, especially as winter was approaching. Wisely he continued up to the commencement of the year, gradually diminishing the dose.

In February I saw him again in London, and found him perfectly well.

Being about to return to China, he wrote the following letter:—

"Dear Sir.—Considering the great change that has taken place since I began to use your 'Elixir,' I cannot leave this country without bearing testimony to its good effects. I feel as one who has been raised up from the gates of death, and have cause to bless God, who led me to you for advice and cure.

"What a difference between my prospects when I landed in London, in May, 1883, and my prospects now! Then, compelled to leave my field of labour, with the sentence of death in me; and now in good health, returning to my missionary work in China.

"My acquaintances, looking upon me, have learned to know that 'the incurable disease' has been conquered; for seeing me, they can no longer doubt that Consumption is Curable.

"After using three bottles of 'Elixir' I was conscious of a change. My strength increased, and flesh came again upon my bones. Moreover, I have been able to address many public meetings without feeling any strain or suffering from the exertion necessary. Now and again I caught cold from exposure, but a few doses of the medicine soon drove every trace of it away.

"Still more, I am glad to say that after being examined by medical men in Edinburgh, they stated that now there was no disease, and certified my fitness for resuming work in a foreign land.

"Earnestly hoping that the above testimony will lead many sufferers to you for relief,—I am,

"Ever yours gratefully, "Robert Burnet."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

THE FULL ASSURANCE OF FAITH.

By D. L. MOODY.

[Pocket Size.]

No man is fit for God's service who is filled with doubts. If a man is not sure of his own salvation, how can he help anyone else into the kingdom of God? If I seem in danger of drowning, and do not know whether I shall ever reach the shore, I cannot assist another. I must first get on the solid rock myself, and then I can lend my brother a helping hand. If being myself blind I were to tell another blind man how to get sight, he might reply, "First get healed yourself; and then you can tell me."

WHY MAGNETISM CURES.

Magnetism cures when other means have failed, because, instead of weakening and depressing the vitality of a constitution struggling with disease, it brings to its aid the fullest supply of recuperative power; a resisting force is imparted to the human system, rendering it impervious to ailments induced by unfavourable temperature, and often proof against epidemic disease. It does not tax and exhaust the energies; it sustains and renews them. Every organ of the body is better fitted to perform its proper function, and prepared for harmonious and united opposition to all unhealthy influences.

Of the accuracy of this view, hundreds of persons now living and healthy, who had been given over as incurable under established systems of treatment, afford undeniable evidence. Great will be the benefit to sufferers when deep-rooted prejudices are overcome, and Nature allowed to work the cure of disease, aided only by such natural and health-giving stimulus as Magneto-Electricity has proved itself to be.

From Mr. D. AMES, Rose Villa, Park-road, Teddington.

"I not only believe in Magnetic Treatment, but feel it my duty to recommend it for chronic, intricate, and nervous affections, for I have realised its efficacy personally, and if time permitted, I could name numerous instances in which it has proved of signal benefit. I will, however, say that in no single case have I known it to fail, and I think that no one can doubt its efficacy who will read the following statement from my son:—

MR. T. AMES, 3, Madryn-street, Toxteth-park, Liverpool.

"Permit me to add my grateful testimony to the many you continue to receive concerning your Magnetic Treatment. In January, 1878, my little boy was suffering so much from weakness and curvature of the spine that he could not stand or sit upright. At that date his grandfather, who had benefited by your Appliances, sent him a Combined Belt and Spinal Band. In a week from the time he put it on he was able to pull himself up and bear his own weight. He has gradually but surely progressed, and to-day he is able to run about as well as any child of his age, and his back is perfectly straight.

"I must not forget to say that the 'Nerve Invigorator,' which you sent after you had seen the boy in July following, has done wonders, and it is to that Appliance especially we must attribute the greatest success. It is warm, easy to carry, and gives no trouble to the wearer. It has done all the good you professed it to be capable of doing. Before wearing that he was subject to a continual wheezing at the chest, but now it is scarcely ever noticed. I may also say that the Nerve Invigorator you supplied to my wife has proved a great benefit to her. If there is anything I have said likely to be of public service I shall only be too happy for you to use it in that way. At any rate, no one will be able to say that I sent you a hurried opinion. There are plenty here who know us, and some have been astonished at the change in my little boy."

Let no one despair of checking the progress of organic disease until he has tested the electrician's medical skill. Although he may have tried Magnetic remedies in vain, he has yet to learn the value of the restorer properly applied. By putting himself in communication with us he may obtain fuller information on the method of treatment with which long practice and continued research have familiarised us.

Full particulars of the treatment may be obtained free on application to B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-sq., London.

THE PRAYER THAT BRINGS THE BLESSING.

A MISSIONARY PRAYER-MEETING ADDRESS, AT BLOOMSBURY CHAPEL, APRIL 24,

By Dr. ALEXANDER MACLAREN.

WE have been praying this morning for missionaries and Missions, and I thought it might not be out of harmony with the devotional character of our service if I asked you to consider briefly what is implied in such prayers if rightly offered, and if I tried to deepen the thoughts and feelings which they pre-suppose.

The first element in our prayer ought to be THANKFULNESS. This must underlie all Christian work if it is to be any blessing either to the doer or the object of it. Our lives ought to be a strong, sweet song of thanksgiving to God for his unspeakable gift. That gift ought to breathe across our hearts like the west wind in this spring-time, drawing up the bright and laughing flowers from the else bare ground. The root of all true service for God is thankfulness, built upon a faithful reception of the Cross, and its work for us. That will lift us up, as upon a strong wind, above all discouragements, difficulties, and disagreeables; it will turn our work from mechanism to glad, impulsive service; it will heighten all our energies, and make us twice the men that we should be if we were only impelled by some iron-pointed goad of duty.

Dr. Maclaren warmly referred to the special causes for thankfulness that were to be found in the prosperity that has attended the Baptist Missions lately planted in North China, and in the Congo district. As the result of the labours of the brethren in China during a few years, over a thousand converts have been gathered in. As to the Congo Mission, he said: Time has not been allowed us yet to see large spiritual results. Its history has been saddened and darkened by loss, and consecrated by graves. Yet we have cause for reverent thankfulness, when we think of the story of these scarcely more than lads who have gone out in their fresh young lives, with a heroism that did not know itself to be heroic at all, and with a self-sacrifice in which the sacrifice was swallowed up in the thought of Him for whom it was made. They have been content to labour, and, when the time came, to lie down and die in their solitude, but not without being sure of the presence of the one Friend. We have treasures in those memories, as well as pledges for fresh work, which we cannot too highly estimate.

Think of an Agnostic Missionary Society developing force enough to send out its missionaries into the heart of Africa, content to lay down their lives if they might "prepare in the wilderness a highway for"—— ah! I must not finish the quotation. And the impossibility of finishing it, points to the weakness under which all such things labour. No speculation, positive or negative, still less a creed which is simply a formularising of despair and ignorance, can ever gender heat enough to kindle men's hearts to such a flame as that. It wants a Person, and a Divine Person, who has died for me and for all the world, and who has taught me to tell the world so, to evoke enthusiasm of such a sort as this.

Another unmistakably indispensable element in true supplication is that of humble CONFESSION. If our prayer be genuine, there cannot but come with it sighing and contrition, when we think of the contrast between it and the promises it professes to grasp; and yet more when we think of the contrast between the prayer and the work. We get a closer glimpse of God's purposes and of Christ's heart—of his perfect sacrifice and ineffable love, when we think of our own shortcomings; as we can fancy the poor village painter looking at his sign-post daub by the side of some great miracle of ancient art. Depend upon it, an indispensable condition of doing any work for Jesus Christ in this world, is a penitent, all-pervasive, and perpetual sense of our own unworthiness and shortcomings. It is the man who feels himself lame and halting on his thigh, who will be a prince with God and will prevail. So amidst our gratitude and buoyant hope, let us never forget that tears must prepare the way, ere we can be invested with the sword for our Divine Master.

Surely if we look at ourselves at all we do not lack reason for very genuine, deep contrition. Think of the dreadfully mingled and imperfect motives with which we do our very best work and pray our most earnest prayers. I suppose there is no water that will not leave something behind it in the filter; and so I fear there is no work of ours that does not leave behind some earthly deposit, no prayer of ours about which we do not feel there is something to be ashamed. Think of the way in which worldly purposes creep in, as oxygen acts upon some polished surfaces. What was at first inspiration becomes routine. What at first poured out of a full heart like lava, cools and crusts over like the same lava stream, and creeps slowly down the hill merely by the force of gravitation when the fiery impulse is all gone. Have we not to say about our highest and noblest Christian work—"Having begun in the spirit, it is far too often finished in the flesh?"

I need hardly add more than a syllable about another count in the indictment to which our consciences must plead guilty, when we think of the terribly incomplete sympathy that we have with our Master's purposes in his great work, and how little we have been able to share in his wondrous identification of Himself with man's sins and sorrows. We may well shrink from the comparison. And yet do not let us forget that it is to this very thing that we are most often exhorted in the Scriptures—to have the mind that was in Christ Jesus. It is for us to acknowledge how little we have been like that heart that was stabbed with all the wounds of humanity, and thrilled to its very depth when He had looked upon the multitudes who were scattered as sheep having no shepherd. I am afraid it is not a mere defect arising from legitimate occupation in our own business, or sluggishness of imagination, or any other cause that may be pleaded in extenuation; but that the slowness and smallness of our sympathy with Jesus Christ in this characteristic of his work is a sin, that comes first of all from selfishness, and subordinately from our imperfect fellowship with our Lord and Master.

There is yet another element I may touch on for a moment—the element of CONFIDENT DESIRE. Prayer is nothing unless it is the outgoing of the soul to the thing prayed for, because we know it to be God's will. It should rise on the pinion of strong desire heavenward, and gaze with a clear eye upon the certainty of the things for which it asks. These two characteristics—earnest longing and confident assurance—are indispensable to anything worth calling prayer. Trying our prayers by this simple test, what poor, broken-winged things they are—like a wounded bird fluttering along the ground, or rising to the sky like an arrow shot out of a bow and then dropping down again. I am afraid that most of us have three degrees of temperature in regard to our prayers—or our desires, which are our real prayers. The highest of the three is for temporal good for ourselves; the medium is for spiritual good for ourselves; and the most tepid of them is for the spread of Christ's Kingdom in the world. Our imperfect communion with our Lord, our consequent defective sensitiveness to his honour, and also our slight appreciation for ourselves of the blessings and realities of his Kingdom, account for the feebleness of our desires. We have no better thermometer as to our temperature than the way in which our confident expectation and earnest longing that Christ's name may spread through the world, go up and down.

Let us get nearer our Master, and live more in daily fellowship with Him; let us grasp more firmly his hand, and open our hearts more to all the influence of his indwelling Spirit. Then, and only then, will our desires rise to a height not inadequate, not unworthy, of his great purposes. At all events let us be sincere in the matter, and no longer deceive ourselves by dressing up our shrinking, puny desires in verbal garments a world too wide for them, praying for things that we do not feel and do not want; that we may no longer mock Him and hurt ourselves with such prayers, trickling painfully from empty hearts instead of pouring in a flood from full ones.

All these things being in our prayers, they will yet fail if they be not hall-marked and stamped as genuine gold by an accompanying and following CONSECRATION. In every prayer a vow is wrapped up, and when we go to God, asking Him to do something, He may well turn round and say, "Will you help me to do it?" Unless we can answer, "Here am I, use me," we had better be still. Are our prayers accompanied by any sacrifice and service? If not, they are worth nothing more than the gilt paper representations of valuable things which the economical Chinaman burns at the shrine of his ancestors. "It is better that thou shouldest not vow than that thou shouldest vow and not pay." But if my prayer leads to self-sacrificing service, and my self-sacrificing service refreshes itself and conquers its disappointment in prayer, then we shall be strong and do exploits, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in our hand.

The waters that fertilise the valley of the Nile pour down from snowy summits far away, and the river swells in its mountain solitudes months before it floods the Delta. The waters that are to cause this wilderness world to rejoice and blossom as the rose, must be fed near their source in many an hour of holy communion with the living God. When the Church is quickened to pray as it ought, the hour will have struck for some great outburst of blessing for the world.

THE NEW CONGREGATIONAL CREED OF AMERICA.

THE Rev. Joseph Cook, in his closing "Boston Monday Lecture" for the present season, dealt with the subject of the "New Congregational Creed."

The Congregationalists of America seem within the last few years to have somewhat drifted with the theological currents of the time, and this new creed, drawn up by a committee appointed for the purpose at the invitation of the "National Council," expresses the general tendency of their departure from the older standards. The New York Independent defends the untheological character of the new creed, and says that "the thing aimed at is to get as far as possible off the ground and out of the region of theology. For the first time since the Apostles' creed the attempt is made to construct a confession on the basis of the Christian religion as distinct from Christian theology."

Mr. Cook, however, well shows that at a time when the most serious assaults are being made upon the essential truths of Christianity to bring out a creed that ignores these truths is virtually to surrender them. Thus, for example, the expiatory character of the sacrifice of Christ is fiercely assailed in the present day. Mr. Cook asserts, on the authority of a member of the Commission, that it was proposed to affirm that the sacrifice Christ made was expiatory—"it was suggested and voted down."

Other omissions of the same kind Mr. Cook points out—one to which he attaches considerable importance. It seems there is an increasing prevalence in America of the dangerous and groundless hope of probation after death, and those who embrace this unscriptural hypothesis deny that final judgment will be confined to "deeds done in the body." "I have authority to say that the addition of the words in relation to the issue of the final judgment determined by the things done in the body was suggested, candidly considered, and . . . respectfully declined."

It cannot, therefore, be wondered at that Mr. Cook is outspoken in his condemnation of such a creed. He points to the fact that in the last Bampton lectures this notion of probation after death is thus strongly condemned:—"The whole tenor of Holy Scripture is against so unfounded and dangerous a supposition." Yet the new Congregational creed refuses to disown the error, though it could be easily done by simply quoting the words of Scripture, which describe the judgment as being of "deeds done in the body."

After a vigorous onslaught upon the defects of the creed, Mr. Cook asserts his own impartiality as a critic:—

"I have no ecclesiastical motives. I have no ecclesiastical standing, and want none. Wendell Phillips used to say—God bless his memory!—that if one undertakes to discuss reform, he should have no party to support, no candidate to defend, no bread to earn. I am discussing religious reform without the slightest glance towards selfish considerations. I am likely to be very severely attacked for what I am saying this morning, and perhaps may lose much by my temerity; but I am attached to sound views. I am profoundly in love with evangelical truth, and do not like to see the veins of America filled with milk and water." (Loud cheers.)

These are the words of an honest man, and we trust the protest he has so faithfully made against the unfaithfulness of the Congregational standard-bearers of America may not be without fruit.

A LETTER FROM A LITTLE HINDU GIRL.

A little girl in India, nine years old, writes to a little girl in New England:—

"BESSIE,—I to you many salaams and kisses send. I am very happy about the playthings, the little fishes you sent to me, and send to you very many thanks. I have become a Christian. I have placed faith on Jesus, and He has come into my heart to live, and I am very happy. I have been baptized in his name, and have become Christ's disciple, and his love has filled my heart. My firstna me, Rhemie, was for an idol named, to whom there was no ears or mouth; but my Christian name, Preethee, is love, which I wish to become. For this, your prayer for me to do. I have come into God's family, and am his child. I feel much pleasure. Jesus on me great, great mercy has done, and on me great love does and in my mind such brings. I to sin dead am, but to God alive am; and if I trust, He all conquers for me. He much every day conquers for me. My prayer is, 'O God, in me a clean heart do!' and my faith is, He clean my heart makes. By his blood me He has bought, and I sin's servant should not be. I to my people God's story of love wish to tell, that all my people in such darkness sitting may see light in Jesus' faith. You for me pray do, and I for you will pray, and I you one day in God's beautiful house will see, and in your face will look. In much love, PREETHEE."

Medical Aid Society.

DEAR SIR,—"Pain and suffering bravely borne;" such is the testimony of one of the medical officers of this Society, which aims at supplying advice and medicine without charge to ladies in reduced circumstances.

The outer world knows but little of the touching destitution which exists amongst gentlewomen of this class, yet it does exist, and needs a helping hand to lift the weary load in times of sickness, to prevent the inevitable "breakdown." You will, therefore, I trust, grant me a corner of your paper to make known this valuable society. The fourth report may be had from the Secretary, Captain G. J. Hamilton, 2, East India-avenue, E.C., who will supply any information.

The best way to assist the society is by becoming annual subscribers of £1 1s., and upwards, thereby securing medical advice in time of sickness, and if not needed by the subscriber she is able to recommend a less fortunate sister.

THE BURMAH BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY has done good work amongst natives and Europeans during the past year; 110,000 tracts and portions of Scripture have been printed, and a large number translated and published in various Indian languages. Reports have been received from some eight or nine stations, showing the extent of the distribution, and the readiness with which the little gifts have been received. Special attention, too, has been directed to travellers and employés on the railways, and very encouraging results have been found to follow.

Mr. Mackeith and the Glasgow Children.

A SERIES of meetings for children has lately been held in Free Gorbal's Church, Glasgow (Rev. Robert Bremner). They have been conducted by Mr. Mackeith, the "Children's Friend," assisted by his zealous and devoted coadjutors, Messrs. Steel and Pratt. The subject was the "Pilgrim's Progress," illustrated by lime-light views. A young worker who was present sends a detailed account of the meetings. We have on previous occasions fully described the methods adopted by this most successful preacher to the young, and therefore curtail the report.

Before showing the views, says the writer, Mr. Mackeith gives a short account of Bunyan, or rather draws it from his audience, and of the circumstances in which the Pilgrim's Progress was written. Then all the lights are turned down. It is all many can do to keep the attention of a few children in the most favourable circumstances; but to "hold" a church-full of rough boys and girls in the dark is a feat few attempt. Mr. Mackeith imperatively demands perfect silence, and with the help of the ushers, whom Mr. Steel has posted throughout the church, he obtains it. In the course of his exposition of the pictures, some important truth is invariably rivetted on the children's minds. For example, in connection with the burden Pilgrim is carrying, its significance is plainly pressed upon them:—

"Sense of sin and fear of wrath,
Make the burden Pilgrim hath."

Again, while the view of Evangelist giving Pilgrim the scroll is on the screen, Mr. Mackeith asks, "But what was in the scroll?" The picture vanishes, and the words, "Flee from the wrath to come," appear in bold type. This the children repeat simultaneously. The last scene of the first evening, Christian losing his burden at the cross, was followed by the text, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world."

The most important part of all the services is the after-meetings. Mr. Mackeith does not come to entertain the children, his supreme object is to have real conversion work done. When the after-meeting is announced and the children are invited to remain, it is undeniable that many will pass round to the hall not under spiritual concern, but merely from motives of curiosity. But then a golden opportunity is given to the Christian worker to deal earnestly with a boy or girl, pointing to the Saviour and urging immediate acceptance of salvation. Large numbers waited, and after being briefly addressed they were separated into small groups and dealt with by the workers who had kindly remained to lend a helping hand, and very enjoyable work they found it.

FRENCH EVANGELICAL MISSION.—DEAR SIR,—I have, as you know, been engaged for twenty-two years in the work of the Lord amongst my poor countrymen in London. We have had a little chapel in Portland-street, Soho, in the centre of the French population, where we had Sunday and day schools, a reading-room, and Gospel services three times a week. But we have been obliged to close it for lack of funds, but we hope to be able to re-open it in October. We have also a Mission-room in Collier-street, Pentonville-road, and a Home and Registry-office, for foreign servants, at 10, Charlotte-street, Portland-place. But we do not reach a tenth part of the French people in London and none in the country I should therefore, like to send a Bible to every French family in London, and afterwards to all in Great Britain. I have hired as a depôt for Bibles and French religious periodicals where foreigners can get the Word of God at a low price, two rooms in front of my chapel. The rent is £30 a year, and if this is provided I can begin at once, because I think the Bible societies will provide the Bibles, and perhaps some friends will help in the postage. GEORGE BARBIER.

MR. SPURGEON'S PASTORS' CONFERENCE.

THE twentieth annual Conference of Ministers educated in the Metropolitan Tabernacle College was held during the past week. To the great joy of all assembled the beloved President appeared this year in his usual health, and was able to be present throughout the conference. The Monday evening preliminary meeting was held at the East London Tabernacle (Rev. A. G. Brown's), which was crowded in every part. Mr. Spurgeon delivered a most striking and characteristic address from the parable of the Prodigal Son. The work of the King's servants to bring forth the best robe, &c., and with it array the sorrowing penitent, was portrayed with a vividness and power that will not soon be forgotten.

Brief addresses were given by Pastors Dobson, of Deal, H. Stone, of Nottingham, and Mr. Shearer, a student in the college. In urging the ministers to bear a witness for Christ in the homes of the friends whose guests they would be during the conference, the President said that Mr. Burnham, one of the college evangelists, had been instrumental in the conversion of a considerable number of persons in whose homes he had been entertained while making his evangelistic tours.

Tuesday morning found the ministers assembled for the conference proper. The first hour was spent in prayer. The death roll showed that several had passed away during the year. Among them Mr. Hartley, who laid down his life on the banks of the Congo. Deep responses followed the petition of Rev. R. Glover, of Bristol, that the corn of wheat fallen into the ground in Africa might not abide alone, but bear much fruit. June 16 was appointed to be set apart as the college day of prayer. The remainder of the morning was mainly occupied by the delivery of the presidential address, brief extracts from which will be found on another page.

The ministers were invited to a soirée at Stockwell Orphanage for the evening. The Handbell Ringers, orphan boys and girls, and others who lead in song, furnished abundance of musical talent, while recitations by some of the dear children were of so touching a character as brought tears to many eyes. Referring to a quartette about to be sung, Mr. Spurgeon said he had already heard it in his own parlour as he never expected to hear it again, by Mr. Sankey, Mr. and Mrs. MacGranahan, and Major Whittle. A brief address was given by Mr. Manton Smith, who told of a lady converted by reading one of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons; though she afterwards lost a fortune, she declared herself infinitely more happy as a servant in an hotel than in the days of her former prosperity, without Christ. Mr. Smith also spoke of a blind man whom he met with in an inquiry-room, looking for awakened souls. Might they all be as busy as the blind man.

Next followed a lecture by Mr. Frank White, on "The Trees, Fruits, and Flowers of Canaan." Most instructive as well as attractive and beautiful it was. We believe Mr. White is prepared to give the lecture elsewhere. We can scarcely conceive of anything more interesting.

On Wednesday morning, after an exposition by the pastor, letters from brethren in Canada and India, &c., were read, telling of the general progress of their work and appealing for others to go forth to join them. Professor Marchant read an excellent paper on "The Headship of Christ," and contended that loyalty to Christ ought to secure our churches from the questionable amusements now so commonly introduced. Mr. Spurgeon said he had been grieved to see some ministers getting up entertainments that would not so much as benefit a frog. Pastor Townsend read a useful paper on "A Ministry of Power the Want of the Times." Rev. W. Y. Fullerton read a well-timed paper on "Spiritual Soudans," in which sensational preaching, transient experiences, exaggerated statistics, clerical assumption, selfish idleness, and ceaseless unrest, were dealt with as they deserve.

The grand event of the Conference takes place on the Wednesday evening, when the subscribers are invited to a tea and supper. On this occasion Mr. T. A. Denny presided at the intervening meeting. The proceedings throughout were most enthusiastic, and the Pastor was in his happiest mood. A select choir, comprising Messrs. Mayers, Burnham, Davis, Parker, and others, enlivened the meeting. The annual report was as good as ever. No less than 675 men have been received into the College during the twenty-six years of its existence, "of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some [forty-six] have fallen asleep." Making all deductions, there are now in the work of the Lord, in some department or other, about 560 brethren. Of these, 505 are in our own denomination (says the report) as pastors, missionaries, and evangelists. These are now to be found located in every part of England, Scotland, and Ireland. The brethren are occupying responsible posts of duty also in most parts of the missionary field, as well as New Zealand, Canada, the United States, and most of the Colonies.

The published report, which may be had on application at the College, contains a grand record of work that has been done by students who have gone forth from the institute, and is well worthy of being widely circulated. The men must have proved their preaching capacity before entering.

Several of the Brethren present were then called on. Pastor Robert Spurgeon, from India, said he had baptized more than 150 converts during the past year. Many of the converts are more firm in their adhesion to the Bible and to prayer than English Christians. He was looking for a large accession to the Christian Church in India ere long from the followers of the late Keshub Chunder Sen, who it seems are not likely to find another capable leader. Mr Fullerton said that while the work of the College was to provide pastors for the churches, the work of the evangelist was to provide churches for the pastors, by stirring the people up to attend a place of worship. He and his co-worker, Mr. Smith, had had a year of much blessing. He could bear testimony that all the students whom he had visited were preaching the Gospel in its clearness. Public-houses had been shut up, betting men had burnt their betting-books, and whole families had been saved. But God forbid that he should boast!

The CHAIRMAN, in a genial and facetious speech, thanked Mr. Spurgeon for inviting him. He thought it a grand thing that a body of such men as those from the Pastors' College should be going forth all over the country. He would follow his friend Mr. Cory in the matter of contribution.

Dr. PATERSON paid a graceful tribute to the influence exerted by Mr. Spurgeon, believing it would last hundreds of years. He had been on five occasions to address the students, and was prepared to affirm that he never met with a band of men more ready to learn, whether in theology or science.

Mr. R. CORY, of Cardiff, effectively concluded an address which touched on many subjects by promising £100.

Sir WILLIAM MCARTHUR said the most interesting part of the meeting to him had been the brief addresses of the ministers themselves, who were able to tell what God had done through their labours. He had great faith in the bearing of a simple personal testimony to the grace of God in our own souls.

Pastor JAMES SPURGEON having tenderly alluded to the late Mr. Houghton, of Liverpool, who presided last year, the company repaired to the lecture hall, where a sumptuous repast awaited them; at the close it was announced that the magnificent sum of £2018 had been contributed.

The remainder of the Conference sittings were equally fruitful of blessing. To the brethren who were sorely tried through limited success, or non-success, or temporary suspension from the work which they love, the gracious words of tender reminder that fell from the lips of the Vice-President on Thursday morning would be grateful and reviving. "The urgent needs of the churches in town and country" was spoken to by Pastor A. G. Brown, who urged every minister to lead the van in the churches' great work of going among the people. A man in a wretched hut in Shadwell, when he was convinced that the visitor sought only the good of those whom he had come to visit, said: "Then there's more in religion than I thought there was." Other speakers followed, showing the difficulties that the rural pastor has to contend with; and the only remedy, viz., more power in and with God, and a greater measure of divinely-inspired energy in our work.

Friday morning witnesses the final gathering. More prayer, more words of exhortation, the communion, and farewell; after which the brethren return to their work of faith and labour of love, to continue to work, and wait, and watch—"till the day break, and the shadows flee away." I. B.

The Blackheath Conference.

THIS, which has now become an annual Convention, was held at the Rink Hall on Wednesday and Thursday last, 23rd and 24th April. The subjects were very attractive, and the attendance, though not so great as on former occasions, was good. "The manifestation of the love of God" was divided into the following sections: (1) The love of God towards his saints; (2) The love of God towards his saints on earth in the spirit of unity; (3) The love of God in his saints as the power for testimony and service; (4) The love of God towards his saints in the coming of Christ.

Our readers will see how much might be got out of such subjects as these, and much was got. It is one of the most instructive signs of the times that the believers in the Lord Jesus Christ are directing their thoughts more and more to Him. It is his Person—following, indeed, the tenacious grasp of his work—which is occupying so much attention and engaging so many hearts now. This is one blessed result of the stir and turmoil which has been caused by the daring attacks of infidelity. Those who are on Christ's side are becoming more and more determined to place Him in the centre of all their thoughts.

It was so at Blackheath in a marked degree. From the opening meeting on Wednesday to the closing one on Thursday night it was the same theme all through—Christ, and Christ only. Those who presided were Mr. H. F. Bowker, Revs. W. Bucke and C. Wilson, and Mr. S. A. Blackwood. The speakers were Revs. A. D. Ryder, Dr. Sinclair Paterson, J. A. Aston, C. Graham, E. H. Hopkins, C. A. Fox, J. Bennett, and Mr. Henry Varley.

It would be impossible to give even an analysis of the addresses. Let it only be said that some of them were marked by commanding power, and of all it was manifest that the promise of the Great Master was fulfilled: "It is not I that speak, but the Spirit of my Father that speaketh in Me."

After one of the meetings a Christian, whose own work has been much blessed of the Lord, remarked: "I subscribe to every word; but oh, now to live it out!" Yes, that is it. The testimony the Lord is calling for is to "live it out."

CHRISTIAN BILL POSTING.—Rev. J. Paterson, M.P., Manse, Airdrie, is endeavouring to get some of the hoarding space in his neighbourhood covered with Gospel messages. He will be glad if any of our readers can co-operate with him.

THE TRUE ATTITUDE OF LAW TOWARDS VICE.—On Wednesday, at the close of a lecture to men on "Personal and Public Morality," given in the Friends' Meeting House, Holloway, by Mr. Alfred S. Dyer, the following resolution was adopted amidst warm expressions of approval and without a dissentient:—"That this meeting of men considers that the law should not regulate vice, but be directed in every possible way to its suppression, and this meeting therefore calls upon the Government to finish the work begun last Session, and bring in a Bill for the total and unconditional repeal of the obnoxious Acts."

GENERAL GORDON'S NEW BOOK.*

(From "The Times.")

[The fact that an article like the following finds a prominent place in The Times is a circumstance of unusual importance. As to the intrinsic interest and worth of the article we need say nothing. Our readers may not be able to coincide with all the views expressed either by the author or the reviewer; but they will nevertheless be amply repaid by the perusal both of the criticism and of the book.]

THE earnestness of General Gordon is stamped on every line, while his strong and original views are expressed with characteristic self-confidence. Yet the tone is humble, for, if we may say so, he seems to believe himself to be actually inspired by the careful and prayerful study of the Scriptures. These "Reflections in Palestine" are, indeed, a strange self-revelation of one of the most remarkable men who has ever lived. The combination of strong religious enthusiasm, or the profession of it, with the practical gifts that make conquerors, soldiers, or statesmen, has been no unusual phenomenon. But, generally speaking, that enthusiasm has been too obviously tainted by ambition or carnal self-seeking, by spiritual pride or half-conscious hypocrisy.

GORDON IN A NEW RÔLE.

In these reflections, which were thrown into the form of letters, written either to near relatives or to intimate friends, we can detect no trace of anything of the kind. With all their assurance of conviction, their spirit is almost childlike; the writer is no fanatic, and only so far an enthusiast as he has thought with passionate earnestness on matters he believes to be all important. Had the little work been published anonymously, even with all we have heard of Gordon's double-sided character no one could possibly have dreamed of attributing the authorship to him. Indeed, in knowledge of the fact, it is difficult to realise that this docile student of the prophecies, that this humble searcher out of spiritual mysteries, is the stern soldier who saved the Chinese Empire, and who was forced upon our vacillating Government as the only man who could save "society," and the garrisons in the Soudan when the case was already desperate. It is probable, however, that all which seems most contradictory in his character really goes far to explain the almost inexplicable success with which he has hitherto triumphed over difficulties without any off chances in his favour. No one has ever questioned his capacity, and the resolutions dictated by his genius have been confirmed in critical circumstances by the conviction that he was but the instrument of an omnipotent Power which would assuredly help him to carry through his work. Then his genius, with the irresistible strength of those convictions, animated his will, and imparted something of his own exalted energy to the semi-civilised races whose primitive beliefs had not yet come in contact with the enfeebling influences of agnosticism or scepticism.

A MAN OF ONE BOOK.

And once the authorship of the "Reflections" is acknowledged, we have the clue to their author's method of treatment. All the reflections are so far controversial that they dispose of the most hotly-contested questions of topography or doctrine. But, unlike most disputants with new theories to broach or with old doctrines to defend, Gordon makes no reference to authorities, or to the voluminous literature of such questions. He makes no show of erudition, though now and again he shows his knowledge of Hebrew by the use of a Hebrew word. He only knows one book, and that is the Bible; but of the Bible his knowledge is exhaustive and profound; in fact, the soldier who had served in China, in the Soudan, in South Africa, who had been perpetually making forced marches in the midst of watchful enemies, could carry no library of divinity about with him. But it is clear that he had made the Scriptures his constant companion, and that he meditated on what he read there in the watches of the night. When, after repeated disappointments of a long-cherished plan—for his services had been always in demand—he was at last enabled in 1883 to spend a twelvemonth's holiday in Palestine, the "Reflections" that are now reprinted were all ready to his mind. With the Bible in his hand, with the sacred historians and the prophets for his only guides, he went straight to the Holy Hill of Zion, to the Mount Moriah and the Mount of Olives, swept the encumbered slopes clear of debris in his mind's eye, and settled the sacred sites on certain postulates he had accepted.

TOPOGRAPHICAL RESEARCHES.

Yet we should mislead our readers did we lead them to suppose that those topographical conclusions of his are founded altogether on blind faith or mystical fancies. On the contrary, the experienced officer of Engineers brings all his professional sagacity to bear on the solution of the problems. He works his diagrams out by contours; he carefully extracts square and cube roots; and he supplements his interpretation of the Scriptures by exact calculations and measurements. And so plausible is the combination of one or the other, that did we not feel persuaded, as matter of fact, that, beyond three or four ineffaceable natural landmarks, nothing can ever be confidently determined as to the ancient sites in the sacred city, we should be inclined to say that Gordon had proved some of his points beyond possibility of contradiction. Although true to his character, he is too concise; he goes to those cardinal points of his too directly; and his reasoning would be more likely to recommend itself if he expanded and developed it at greater length.

We believe that the scenes of the grand events in the world's history have been effaced beyond possibility of definite recognition. Consequently we take General Gordon's conclusions as suggestive rather than satisfactory, and so we prefer to indicate his method in place of following him into details. For example, some of his strongest arguments for certain localities are drawn from the types of the Old Testament dispensation; and he marks certain central spots precisely by the shadows they threw of the events they typified. He describes with the exactitude of the surveying engineer the lie of the ground on which Jerusalem was built, with the sites immediately beyond the city walls, celebrated in the holy histories:—

"The 'skull hill'—Golgotha, or 'the place of a skull'—follows a line which is aslant or askew to the valley of the Kedron, until it reaches, at about two-thirds of its entire length, another bare rock, now covered by the Mosque of Omar. . . . I think that the cross stood on the top of the skull hill, in the centre of it, and not where the slaughter-house now stands. Leviticus i. 11 says that the victim was to be slain 'on the side of the altar northward before the Lord,' and literally they were to slay the victim slantwise to the altar northwards. The altar was on the second knoll within the Haram enclosure, and if the cross were placed in the centre of the skull hill, the whole city, and even the Mount of Olives, would be embraced by those outstretched arms. 'All the day long I have stretched out my hands to a disobedient and gain-saying people.'"

So that Gordon finds a strong presumption, to say the least, for the site of the crucifixion from the geographical conditions which would give the fullest mystical meaning to the great sacrifice of the Atonement. Then, again, he has drawn out the exact diagram of the INTERNAL ARRANGEMENT OF THE TEMPLE.

He places the ark of the covenant, the candlestick, the table of shewbread, &c., and he fixes their places from measurements given in the Book of Kings, &c., by two natural sites which he believes are to be absolutely identified. One of these is the altar of burnt offering, the other is the laver or brazen sea. As to the altar, he asserts from analogies in calculations that it was partly formed out of a living rock which may still be seen. While the brazen sea of Solomon, broken up and carried away, was replaced by the fountain of El Kas, "The Caliph who erected the fountain El Kas appears to have intended it to occupy the same place as the laver and to hold about the same quantity. El Kas means 'The Chalice.'"

We may note, also, the connection in Gordon's mind between the archæological and the purely religious portions of his book. One and the other are closely linked together by the strict sequence of his method of interpretation. We have seen that, according to him, there are still two existing relics of the old order of things and the Jewish ceremonial. These are the rock and the cup, the altar of sacrifice and the sea in which the priests purified themselves as the ministers of the sinful people. That rock is now represented by the sacramental table of the Lord, and the chalice of the Hebrew priests by the baptismal fonts in our churches. Accordingly, the chief part of these religious reflections is devoted to the consideration of the sacraments as the means of grace to man and of recovery from the consequences of the Fall.

SCRIPTURE ANALOGIES.

True to his governing principle "that all Scripture is given by inspiration of God," and consequently of finding pregnant analogies and lessons in the Old Testament narrative, he sets out from the fall, showing "a possible analogy between the three days of creation and our own lives." That "possible analogy," which he really takes for granted, lies at the root and heart of his subsequent matter. First came chaos, where good was mingled with evil, and the light was held captive to the darkness. Second, a state of light. Third, light separated from the darkness, and good separated from evil. Fourth, "A gathering—good gathered, evil destroyed; light gathered, darkness destroyed." He adds that, unless we understand that series of events, the remarks that follow will be incomprehensible; and he goes on to develop something like the Persian myth of the perpetual warfare between good and evil. He maintains that the scattering of light in the darkness—that is, the temporary or apparent triumph of evil—in reality tends to the final victory of the light, since it is winnowing the darkness of such light as may be in it. With good men, so far as we understand him, though they are necessarily committed to a struggle with evil, each successive and inevitable discomfiture, if retrieved, lands them on higher and ever higher ground. And "this is the history of every man's life; of every day's work of man, of the world, of each nation, of the Church, of every member of the Church, the threshing floor."

BAPTISM.

In the reflections on the Sacraments, again, Gordon always goes back to material types, by way of interpreting and explaining spiritual operations. He may be a mystic, he may be an enthusiast, yet the practical side of his intellect must have something tangible to argue from; just as in fixing the sites in the precincts of the Temple he makes his start from the solid rock and the perennial spring. Thus, man fell by eating the apple; he received a foreign and poisonous substance, in the shape of the forbidden fruit, into a body that had hitherto been pure and spiritual; so corruption came of incorruption, bringing diseases and death in its train. Man was dead; baptism revives him from death; and in partaking of the Holy Communion, the fruit of the tree of life becomes the antidote to the deadly poison of the tree of good and evil. "Water must be the connexion of baptism with some event prior to the Fall, and that event is the Creation." "In the beginning God created heavens and earth, and the earth was without form and void, and the Spirit of God moved on the face of the waters." And in baptism the Spirit, always giving life, is moving as of old on the face of the water. We said that Gordon's very conciseness is somewhat confusing, and at first it struck us from the tenour of his reasoning that he was opposed to infant baptism. But, on the contrary, he holds to it very strongly, though, as is frequently the case, we follow him to his conclusion through a rather fine-drawn and far-fetched chain of thought. "Baptism signifies the burial of a dead thing which cannot move of itself. A babe is dead as far as its will, &c., are concerned, and when it is figuratively buried in baptism by believers, there is reason to suppose—indeed, our faith in God obliges us to believe—that it will rise in Christ." It is Gordon's idea, we may remark, that as the earth once lay dead under a dark waste of waters, so baptism is meant to cover man with water as the figurative acknowledgment of his death.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Perhaps we have said enough to show the characteristics of Gordon's system of theology, which is highly mystical, and sometimes fanciful, but intensely devout and sincere. We have indicated some of his ideas as to the rite of baptism, but we greatly doubt whether this is the place to explain his views as to the holier sacrament of the Lord's Supper; for we could only do him justice by going into them at length. We should only say that, holding as he does that the elements are actually a spiritual medicine to the body and spirit that were tainted in the person of the first Adam, he is urgent in his pressure upon all to partake, and most catholic in the wide invitations he issues. "I say, then, what is needed of a man to eat the Sacrament? Simply a sense that he is morally sick and wishes to be better—and few men do not feel both these sentiments."

It is impossible not to respect—nay, to reverence—the spirit in which Gordon approaches sacred subjects, whatever one may think of his theories or of the process by which he reasons them out. He has read much in a single Book; he has meditated upon it profoundly, and sometimes he puts things very quaintly, sometimes very tersely, and with pregnant force. He seems to have modelled his thoughts and style on Thomas à Kempis, who is known to be his favourite among uninspired writers. Here is what he says of the tongue and the ladies: "The tongue is glib, serpent-like, and it is odd that women have it in such perfection, which none have ever doubted. It is their defence. The woman ate first, and the tongue is her particular forte. Yet when women speak good, how well they speak out! They are in this point the salt of the earth." Again, and in a different tone: "If the Holy Ghost spoke through us, as He would through many (if the pipe of their bodies were in harmony—that is, if they were sanctified), would not the voice be God's voice?" Again: "I think our life is one progressive series of finding out Satan. As we grow in grace, we are continually finding out that he is a traitor; he is continually being unmasked."

For the most vivid and painful piece of writing in the book, we may direct attention to Gordon's conception of the sufferings of the Passion and Crucifixion. But we have said enough to show that the Reflections are a clue to the heroic character of the man who has set before him ideals impossible indeed of attainment, but towards which he is always striving to elevate himself; who seeks to mortify self like his model, Thomas à Kempis, and carries with him the profound conviction that, happen what will, his prayers are being heard and his footsteps directed.

OPEN-AIR MISSION: TRACTS WANTED.—DEAR SIR,—We commence our "season" with an exhausted exchequer, and with liabilities amounting to £50, and hence are greatly in need of grants of tracts, or of gifts to enable us to purchase them with. We have now more than 800 members, many of whom look to us for supplies for their street work; but specially do we need Gospel literature for our visitation of races, fairs, &c.—Yours faithfully, GAWIN KIRKHAM, Sec.

MY FOURTH EMIGRATION PARTY.

By Dr. T. J. BARNARDO.

IN a letter dated Halifax, April 5, from my valued fellow-worker, Rev. T. Fielder, under whose charge my fourth emigration party of 61 recently sailed, he says: "I have to chronicle our safe arrival at this port. Our passage across the Atlantic has been performed without any serious occurrence, although our experiences have been varied and somewhat trying. We have had stormy nights and foggy days, and plenty of tossing in the bosom of the deep; but our gracious and loving God has brought us out of all our distresses and delivered us from all our fears. We are now, for the most part, well, and are about to proceed on our further journey by train to Toronto, a distance from Halifax of 1000 miles. This will probably occupy four days. The boys have behaved admirably; no insubordination or misconduct has arisen. All of them, however, have been very ill. Some are only now recovering."

A good deal has been recently said in many quarters as to the undesirability of sending any more children to Canada! Strange to say, a compact party of opposition has been formed on the other side, who have contributed paragraphs to Canadian and other papers, which would impress many people who did not know the facts of the case with a fear that the work of emigration was being overdone, especially so far as children were concerned. I have never known a single instance myself in which any such feeling was expressed by well-informed people, but I have heard that such statements have been made. As I am contemplating the emigration of our boys and girls upon a carefully extending and well-arranged plan, distributing them only where they seem to be really needed and are likely to be well cared for, I charged my co-worker to ascertain from the most reliable sources if there were any grounds for such fears. I am happy now to be able to say that the real state of the case proves the very reverse, and that there is still a vast and increasing demand for carefully-trained children, whose characters have been proved and tested before they are sent out.

If, therefore, all who contemplate, or would carry on, emigration would but use common care and prudence, not to send to Canada those who are idle, depraved, dishonest, or vicious, but only children of good character, who have had some practical training in habits of cleanliness, obedience, and industry, the opportunities and channels for their disposal on the other side are absolutely unlimited.

Let the following fact be carefully weighed: I have had myself to refuse hundreds of applications for children in the Dominion, from the very best class of employers, and I have now on my books offers of situations with really excellent people, which I cannot hope to avail myself of for a considerable time. A few days ago the following confirmatory telegram came to hand from Mr. Fielder, who has since reached Toronto. "Plenty of places, and wide demand for boys; will be glad to have another party out this year."

The only real limit to our usefulness is the difficulty of paying the expenses incurred in emigration. We have now reduced these expenses to £9 per child, and do not hope this year, at all events, to economise much further.

As I announced last year at our annual meeting, I am hoping to accompany our fifth party of 150 little ones the second week in July. To outfit and pay the passage-money for these we will require £9 per child. It will be a great comfort and support in the arduous work which I am carrying on if Christian friends, who desire to save the children of our streets, will send me aid in promises or gifts. This will make the future, as to our emigration work, very clear, and will serve to lighten the pressure of present burdens.

As to the necessity for this work, and to give some idea of the urgent demand for admission to the "Homes," now being made on behalf of absolutely destitute and homeless children, I will only add, that within the past eight days I have admitted nineteen little girls and ten boys, two of whom are babies seven and eight months old respectively, and all of whom were in most abject and urgent need of immediate shelter. Our "Babies' Castle," as it has been called, at Hawkhurst, Kent, the gift of a benevolent friend, enables me now to admit the youngest children, even babies of two or three weeks old, so that I am literally able to open our doors to children of all ages, if they are absolutely destitute, i.e., without friends or home.

The Future of Palestine.

SIR,—As to the future of Palestine, let me inform your correspondent in Iowa, that those of us who had been helping Messrs. Kelk and Friedlander to supply the immediate needs of such Jewish refugees as had made their own way to Palestine, have found ourselves with Jews dependent on us in Palestine itself, whom we could not turn adrift. We have been forced to find place for them, and so have formed ourselves into a small society called the "Jewish Refugees' Aid Society," which has been acquiring an estate of about 1200 acres at Artouf, between Jaffa and Jerusalem.

We have no grant of land, but a private purchase, which we want funds to complete, but which is already harbouring a community of 40 families, each in a wooden partition of a temporary shed, with the bare earth for floor subsisting as yet on the pittance that we lend them for their maintenance till crops can be got in, and working hard to get the place in order; converts, inquirers, and strict Jews living peaceably together under a Christian manager, with a Christian missionary coming weekly to hold a Christian service and a Christian schoolmistress teaching the children; such a thing as has not been since Jerusalem was taken by the Romans.

What will come of it, or what place it may take, in the unfolding of God's purposes I do not know. It does not seem to me likely to be a place of much importance, but it is surely something that a few needy outcasts, who had never heard of Jesus as a living, loving Saviour, should be helped in his name and for his sake, and should be given to understand, as these Jews are, that it is for his sake they are helped, not with money only, but with hearty human kindness.

We call ourselves a society, but we are more like a committee for the building of a church or chapel, for we are not endeavouring to raise an annual income, but a little capital to float our enterprise. We want about £5,000 to complete our purchase, buy our stock and implements, build our houses, and keep our folk alive till crops can be got in, and they can maintain themselves, pay rent, defraying all expenses of management, and repay all advances made them. We have gone to work in faith, and if the funds should not be forthcoming the whole scheme must fall through. Our treasurer is Mr. Sanfield, of 10, Angel-court, E.C.

As one of the trustees, let me say on our own behalf, and in behalf of all who are engaged, like Mrs. Finn, in other similar enterprises, that I cannot see we are guilty of "rejecting Christ," as "Eboracum" asserts, for expecting the fulfilment of the promises which (as he himself admits) are confirmed to us of God in Christ; for God works out his purposes not only through the acts of wicked men as in the Crucifixion, but through the acts of those who trust in Him, as when believers took the body from the tree and laid it in the tomb, and though all that wealth can do to place Israelities safely in the land given to Israel can at best only be preparing for a mightier work of grace, such as that which the Apostle seems to liken to the Resurrection (see Romans v. 10 and xi. 15), yet I do not see that we are bound to hold aloof, or that taking part in such a simple work of charity, need be any indication of a "spiritually unhealthy sentiment."—Yours faithfully,

E. B. BIRKS.

THE REVIVAL IN LONDON.

"Lizzie's Letter."

IN our report of the meetings held by Major Whittle at Greenwich, we noted the use he made in a sermon of a letter which had been sent by a daughter, in domestic service, to her father, urging him to give his heart to the Saviour. We are glad to say that since the receipt of the letter the mother has trusted in the Saviour, having decided the matter at one of Mr. Moody's meetings at the New Cross hall. On Sunday evening, March 16, under Major Whittle's ministry, the father came to the same decision. We append a copy of the letter, in the hope that it may, by God's blessing, be again useful in leading some to decide for the Lord:—

"Dear Father,—Thank you for that pretty card you sent me. The words upon it are very beautiful. They are the words God gave to the priests to say to the children of Israel, when they dismissed them after a religious ceremony. You say to me through the card:—

"'The Lord bless thee, and keep thee:

"'The Lord make his face to shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee:

"'The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace.'

"When you sent it to me did you really believe that God could and would do all this for me? If He would do it for me, He can do it for you. You have tried to begin a new life in your own strength, and you have failed. Now try in God's strength. Ask Him to help you. It may be very hard for you to begin. Friends may not trust you at first, and false friends may laugh at you; but with God's help you can do it. But it can only be done by prayer. Every time you feel like giving way, pray, if it is only, 'God help me.' There is no other way of overcoming but by meditation on God's word and prayer. This is not cant; cant is pretending to be religious when you are not. There is no cant in true religion. Do not make any rash promise, but ask God to help you through his Son, who died that you may be saved from the power of sin. You know you are a sinner (we all know we are). You know that God can save you. But there is no use in asking his help and then going to a public-house and mixing with bad companions. Keep away from them all, shun them, and pray 'Lead us not into temptation.' It will be hard to begin, but be firm and God will be your helper and friend, the same as He is mine.

"I hope you will not mind me writing to you like this, but I feel so anxious that you should be happy. How different all our lives might have been—mother's, yours, and mine. When I look round and see how happy other families are, how other girls have nice little homes to go to, I feel so sorry. Let my twenty-first birthday, at any rate, be the happiest I have yet spent. Let me be able to come with some friends to tea with my father and mother, with not a cloud in your faces, in the dearest little home in the world, and one of the happiest in it, I know, will be your loving "Lizzie."

Messrs. Moody and Sankey at Hampstead.

It is a curious exercise for a Christian journalist to note the very varied attitudes assumed towards this Gospel work by the conductors of what is called the "secular" press. One would imagine that a movement which brings together, in any neighbourhood, say 10,000 men and women, on working days, and twice as many on the Sabbath, might claim a fair share of space in the columns of the newspaper that is intended for the mental delectation of the dwellers in the district. Our readers may judge of our surprise when, having invested a current coin of the realm in the purchase of the local Hampstead weekly, of Saturday last, we found that no less than five lines, all told, were generously given up to the record of the past week's work at Fleet-road Hall. Here are the lines, headed "Messrs. Moody and Sankey":—

"The evangelistic services now being conducted by the above-mentioned gentlemen in Fleet-road Hall continue to attract crowded congregations. Overflow-meetings have been held in the Gospel Oak Wesleyan Chapel."

That seems to us to be "news in a nutshell," with a vengeance. We can only hope in this case that the Editor, having whetted the appetite of his readers by this most meagre dish, means to satisfy it by a full meal in his succeeding issue.

It is perfectly true, though now trite enough, that these meetings "continue to attract crowded congregations." The interest of last week's meetings in Fleet-road Hall culminated on Friday. We were not present at the afternoon gathering, but those who were say it was a very remarkable time of the right-hand power of the Most High. The subject of the address was "The work of the Holy Spirit," and it would seem as if He specially honoured the occasion by an unusually distinct manifestation of convicting and converting power.

We can personally vouch for the wonderful blessing that rested on the proceedings of the evening. The hall was not crowded, as it had been on former evenings; indeed, it was scarcely full. Friday evening has always been found a comparatively slack time in point of attendance. The Hampstead Hall is on the very confines of the city, being in full view of the green fields adjoining the East Heath it is not exposed to the same pressure of attendance as when erected in the heart of a dense population.

Having viewed those great spectacles so many times from the platform and the reporters' table, we elected on Friday evening to take a seat at the very back of the raised gallery that now stretches across the rear end of the hall. The erection of this gallery is an excellent move, and it is a pity it was not done on all the previous sites. But the Committee have been learning by experience as they went along. We can but say in a word, that though seated at the furthest point of distance from speaker and singer, the rapid, rousing utterances of the one, and the melting, thrilling tones of the other, reached us as easily and distinctly as if we had been within a yard of the platform.

Mr. Moody's address on Friday evening was one that he generally reserves till near the close of a Mission—"Not far from the kingdom of God." Though we could not from our position observe the effect of his solemn, earnest words on the audience, we could not but note the deep stillness and attention that reigned in the vast assembly throughout. The evangelist seemed to us to close abruptly, and made no attempt to follow up the impression of his words by asking the anxious ones to commit themselves by rising. He quietly invited all who wished to become Christians to proceed to the inquiry-room, and there get on their faces before God, asking that He might guide them to a decision. Almost without any pressure or the personal invitation that often follows the address when Mr. Moody asks "the Christians all over the hall" to "speak to those nearest them," the enquiry-room was soon filled from end to end. In a few minutes this company of seekers and workers were indeed "on their faces before God," and brief petitions for help and forgiveness were going up from burdened hearts, by Mr. Moody's suggestion.

Then followed a busy and blessed season of personal converse with the inquirers. If we may judge of the whole from some cases that came under our individual notice, the reality and depth and interest of this evening's work was something unusual even in a work where the unusual is often happening. Talking over the matter with an experienced worker at the close, he remarked that perhaps the secret of the blessing that fell on the assembled company might be partly found in the fact that several friends were in an ante-room wrestling in prayer to God while the evangelist was delivering his discourse.

THE GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MEETING

on Saturday evening was very largely attended, and again the power of the Lord was present to wound and to heal. Several personal testimonies of great interest were given by men who had been rescued, within a recent period, from the thraldom of the drink; two of the witnesses spoke of the horrors through which they had passed while under delirium tremens. Mr. R. Simpson and Mr. Spencer Walton were intensely earnest in their exhortations to the undecided, and a good many were evidently brought to the deciding point. Others intimated their intention of joining the Hampstead Mizpah Band, which will be formally organized at next Saturday's meeting.

Mr. Moody made his appearance at the close, and by some timely words helped to gather up the results of the evening's work.

We have not space to make any detailed reference to the meetings of Sunday last, which were equal in interest to those on former like occasions. The address to workers in the early morning on "Shining for Jesus" was a very stimulating one, and must have sent them out with a quickened impulse for the engagements of the day and of the week. The address will form one of those in the forthcoming volume on "Working for God."

Mr. Moody went to Liverpool on Monday, to address a meeting of converts there on that evening. His place at Fleet-road Hall was taken for this occasion by Major Whittle. We trust the young converts throughout London will rally in large numbers to the farewell meeting at Hampstead on Monday next.

Dr. Pentecost and Mr. Stebbins.

By Dr. MOXEY.

The services of these beloved brethren were continued at Mildmay last week; the numbers who have been drawn to them, and the widespread blessing that has rested on the messages spoken and sung, have necessitated their continuance during the present week. How much we owe to America! Joseph Cook said that the greatest blessing America ever conferred upon the mother country was D. L. Moody. She has supplemented that great gift by sending to us (in Major Whittle and Dr. Pentecost) other evangelists only second to Mr. Moody. For them, and for the sweet singers whose equals we know not on the Gospel platform, we would gratefully thank America and humbly praise our gracious God and Father.

We recommend every Christian in London, interested in the advance of God's kingdom, not to lose the present opportunity of hearing these evangelists, as the term of their stay in London will so soon expire. To those who are engaged in active, soul-winning work, we can, from a most helpful experience, advise a sitting at the feet of each of the three American teachers and preachers who are now blessing London. "It is by imitation," says Edmund Burke, "far more than by precept, that we learn everything; and what we learn thus we acquire not only more effectually, but more pleasantly. This forms our manners, our opinions, our lives." By following only one example, however good, we are apt to become mere mimics, but by contrasting manner with manner, method with method, system with system, we obtain the greatest good, while we retain the individuality that God has given us, and which He intends us to use to his glory.

In listening to each of the three evangelists, we are put in mind of the four Gospels, wherein we get views of the Son of God and of the Truth of God from fresh standpoints. A harmony may be useful in its way, and the study of any one of those glorious Gospels is most blessed, but give me the whole four with their substantial unity, yet with their most instructive and edifying diversity.

In Mr. Moody you get a unique man, raised, as it seems (though we know God educated him as well), to do a work that, so far as we know, stands alone in the history of the modern Church. It is easy to mimic the defects of this outstanding personality, or to copy his methods; but who has tried, and succeeded, in matching him?

In Major Whittle you come under the constraining attraction of a most lovable man. His face looks like a battle-field, and you instinctively say, "That man not only can sympathise with me, but he can help me, for he has come through all I have, and the very tones of his voice invite my confidence."

Dr. Pentecost claims not only your heart through the intense emotional nature that shines through his dark Jew-like eyes, and quivers in every tone of voice, but he enchains your mind by an intellectual demonstration of each great cardinal truth, such as can be neither gainsaid nor resisted. His theological training as a minister, and his exegetical acumen as a divine, are most skilfully brought to bear in each of his discourses, and tend to give his utterances an authority and power that are specially needed in these sceptical days.

And yet with all the learning, not a word seems to be lost. There is no shooting over the heads of the audience. The manner is so unconstrained and natural, the style so simple and unconventional, the words, though so fluent and eloquent, yet so everyday and understandable, that we forget it is a minister that is addressing us at all, and only feel that the Lord is speaking to us through a man, one of ourselves. Of all the evangelists we would specially commend Dr. Pentecost to the attention of our ministers. We are so apt to think that laymen, and laymen only, are specially blessed with the evangelistic gift, and facts seem certainly to point in that direction; but here you have a full-fledged minister, the pastor of a flourishing church in Brooklyn, that "city of churches," sowing the seed night after night in the most orthodox fashion, and reaping on the spot a harvest of souls. Why cannot other ministers do the same? Dr. Pentecost does not let down the Gospel net and enclose a multitude of fishes, and then leave it to the devil, the world, and the flesh to share among them, but following Peter's example on the day of Pentecost, he draws it ashore, and the Lord nightly owns the faith of his servant.

In this connection I would instance Dr. Pentecost's method of asking individuals to rise in the meetings. Instead of making it easier to the anxious one, as is so generally done, by requesting the whole congregation to bow their heads in prayer while the invitation is responded to, Dr. Pentecost as he utters the last word of his discourse, desires those who are willing, and who do accept Christ, as their Saviour and Lord, to rise up before the whole audience and do so. On Sunday night, April 20, he said, "Friends, I am sure there are many of you who want to accept Christ to-night; now it is as easy to accept as to want to—then do it now." Immediately all over the large hall, which was crowded in every part, men, women, and children rose up, each saying aloud, "I take the Lord Jesus as my Saviour." Over seventy were counted as having done so.

If we were asked to say what special characteristic of Dr. Pentecost's teaching and preaching (for the daily Bible Readings are as precious as the nightly evangelistic addresses) impressed itself most vividly on our mind, we should say that it is the ruthless way in which he tears off from saint and sinner that film of mysticism and sentimentality in the one case, and of dreaminess and unreality in the other. Christianity is a favourite word of his, as opposed to religion. "There is too much sentiment in our so-called 'religion.'" he said to the Christians one morning. "Christianity is built up of, and on solid facts, within the scope and reach of every intelligent human being." To the unsaved he said, "Christianity has solid facts as its basis, and in this respect it is different from all other religions which are founded on theories. In the same way the natural man of a Christianised society thinks that if he cultivates all the good in himself it is all he need do for salvation—that's his theory. Another says: 'It matters not what you believe, if you are only sincere'—that's his theory. And both are unsupported by a vestige of solid fact."

We have only time to add that scores are, we believe, being daily added to the blessed fold, and we ask fellow-believers to join us in prayer to God for a still greater blessing.

Dr. Pentecost gave two remarkable addresses at Mildmay on Sunday afternoon and evening on the words of the Apostle, "As having nothing, and yet possessing all things." We hope in due course to present them in substance to our readers. The Bible Readings are continued this week at 11 a.m. According to present arrangements, this Mission closes on Sunday next.

Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan.

Major Whittle and his singing companion have, fortunately, found Woolwich to be one of those pleasant places where all minor differences among Christians disappear when special opportunities present themselves for the furthering of the kingdom of our common Lord. Pastors and workers of all denominations have gathered together to aid in the Mission. The Rink, in Herbert-road, the largest available building, was secured for the meetings, and from the beginning it has been filled to overflowing.

There are many well-known Christian officers in the army who are stationed here, who carry on Mission work at the Soldiers' Home and elsewhere all the year round. These have rallied round the evangelists and largely taken the responsibility of management off their shoulders. The usual arrangement has been followed in reserving special seats, but in this instance they are not for "working men," but for soldiers. They, with their wives, largely avail themselves of the privilege.

The meetings at the Rink began on Wednesday last week, and on that evening the Major preached from the text "I am the Way," to a splendid congregation. Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan were in excellent voice, and "Abundantly able to save," prepared the audience for a full and free Gospel, which was faithfully proclaimed. In pressing home the truth for the encouragement of the anxious, the Major called on those to rise who had found their doubts dispelled, their hopes fulfilled, and their sins forgiven on their coming to Jesus. The response made was grand to see.

The work continued throughout the week; at meeting after meeting there were some pressing into the kingdom. On Friday, after the usual mid-day prayer-meeting at the Soldiers' Home, a lady whom the soldiers know as one of their best friends quietly put the question to one present, "Have you given yourself to Jesus?" The reply was rather a strange one; it was: "No, but I mean to do it to-night!" And sure enough he was one of those who stood up for prayer at the Rink that evening, and there he found the Saviour. It then came out that a brother-soldier had been long praying for him, and that the Spirit had been striving with his spirit when the lady addressed him. The Christian soldier warmly welcomed the "new chum," and said, "There's another comrade in my stable who needs salvation, I think he'll be next."

The mid-day meeting on Sunday was reserved for women only, and in spite of the heavy rain which fell, the Rink was filled. Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan most appropriately chose "The Two Lives," and sang it evidently with much acceptance. In other pieces they were supported by the Woolwich Gospel male choir, which has just sprung into existence under the guidance of Mr. McGranahan and Captain Russell; it being their first appearance in public. There was much waiting upon the Lord in prayer, and the good news was tenderly and earnestly preached from the great dialogue at the well of Samaria. At the close those who were anxious were invited to come to the front seats and many came, evidently belonging to all ranks of life—the mistress and maid together. They were received by a large band of ladies, Christian workers, and a good afternoon's work was done, as we hope, for eternity. One young girl who came to the great decision was welcomed by her Sunday-school teacher as the sixth of her class thus blessed within the past few weeks. "I have eighteen in my class," said the lady, "and I am praying and hoping for them all."

Messrs. Jordan's three o'clock service for children on Saturday was attended by thirteen hundred children, one hundred and twenty of whom waited to an after-meeting for special instruction and prayer.

There is a great shower of blessing upon Woolwich, and the spirit of expectancy and prayer is active in the hearts of God's people, for further blessing at the Rink, where the meetings are continued this week. After leaving Woolwich, the evangelists will hold a short series of services at the Rink Hall, Blackheath, commencing on Tuesday afternoon.

The Coming Croydon Mission.

A well-attended meeting of workers, in anticipation of this Mission, which commences on May 6, was held in the Public Hall on the 21st April, to meet Mr. Moody and discuss the arrangements. Rev. JOHN BRAITHWAITE, Vicar of Croydon, presided. In introducing Mr. Moody, he referred to some letters he had received from clerical friends in parts of London where Missions have already been held, giving most encouraging accounts as to the after results to their congregations. Pointing out that Messrs. Moody and Sankey have clearly received a mission from God to do this great work of preaching the Gospel, he invited all present to join with himself in giving them a most hearty welcome to Croydon, and in praying that the Divine blessing would rest on their labours there as elsewhere.

Mr. MOODY having said a few words as to methods of working, many questions were put on points of detail, eliciting replies of a helpful nature. A strong opinion was manifested as to the desirability of discouraging any traffic from the outlying districts on the Lord's Day. Arrangements have been made for the house-to-house visitation of Croydon and the surrounding districts, for the purpose of inviting the people to the meetings and distributing tickets, and prayer-meetings are being held daily that the power of the Holy Spirit may be manifested in our midst.

Central London.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey will begin a three-weeks' Mission on the Thames Embankment on May 27, at the close of the Croydon Mission. The Hall is to be on the vacant ground near the Temple Gardens. This may probably be their closing Mission in this country, and prayer is earnestly desired that a great blessing may attend it.

"GREECE AND ITS PRISONS."—Mr. Cole was mentioned in our last as having lost his sight through ophthalmia. We are glad to say that the affliction proved to be only temporary, and that though his eyes are weak, they are now much better.

CIVIL SERVICE PRAYER UNION.—Mr. C. E. H. Jay, of the War Office, writes to the Civil Service Prayer Union Quarterly Paper:—"We have a Civil Service lifeboat, why should we not have a Civil Service city missionary? I think the Union alone might support one, but I am sure there are many outside it who would gladly help. If every member of the Union would give or collect ten shillings a year, it could be done handsomely." Members disposed to assist in this scheme, may communicate with Mr. Jay, at Hawkhurst, Hawk-road, Upper Norwood. The Union has now extended into the India Office, the Inland Revenue, Customs, and Post Office departments, the Local Government Board, the Land Office, London District pay office, and Paymaster-General's offices.

Notes and Comments.

We have received a number of letters on the subjects of "Holiness and Faith Healing," taking divergent views of them. We must postpone to our next the insertion of such extracts as our limited space will allow.

The days are lengthening fast, and though the bitter east winds have retarded vegetation, it needs but a few warm sunny days to clothe the fields and forests in their beautiful summer garments. Many little longing eyes in the city are wistfully looking forward to their accustomed "Day in the Country." We are receiving applications for help towards these outings, and hope that our readers will, by their generous aid, enable us to respond.

Not less than three and a half millions of men are said to be constantly kept in Europe in military service. Russia alone has a standing army of about 770,000 men, involving an annual expenditure of many millions sterling. Both in France and Germany nearly half a million of men are kept under arms, while Great Britain has a standing army of 130,000 men. In the light of the Gospel which inculcates "Peace on earth and goodwill to men," the fact that we are so far from realising such ends is saddening in the extreme. We can only find relief in earnest prayer for the advent of the King in whose reign "wars shall cease," and nations learn the art no more.

The alarming earthquake last week in the Eastern Counties has called attention to the occurrence of similar shocks in the past history of our country. It is stated in the summary of The Times for April 24, that more than one hundred have been recorded since the Conquest. The last great earthquake in London took place in March, 1750. An interesting incident in connection with it is, that at the time it occurred Charles Wesley was preaching in the Foundry. The congregation was greatly alarmed as the building moved backwards and forwards. Wesley, without losing his presence of mind, quietly repeated the words, "Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and the mountains be cast into the depth of the sea." Such is the Christian's unchanging confidence.

Dr. Uhlhorn's book on "Christian Charity in the Ancient Church," just added to Clark's Theological Library, calls attention to a theme of pressing moment. The lack of charity, in the New Testament acceptation of that word, is one of the greatest blots on modern Christianity. The early Christians shone conspicuously bright in the love they bore to one another, and in the zeal which they displayed in alleviating the miseries and necessities of "a perishing world," or as Dr. Uhlhorn describes mankind at the commencement of our era, "a world without love." The love of the poor was then a passion; soon, however, it became congregational rather than personal; then institutional as connected with monasteries and orders, so that instead of being the outcome of genuine Christlike sympathy, the charity of the churches degenerated into the idea of meriting release from purgatory, or purchasing further degrees of happiness in heaven. Nothing is more desirable in the Church life of to-day than a revival of the spirit of love which at the first so nobly characterised the disciples of Christ.

A correspondent of The Methodist, writing in reference to Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's speech on Christian Socialism at Exeter Hall, aptly expresses one of the points involved. Coming from a large employer of labour, his remarks are worthy of commendation and respectful attention. He says:—

"I believe this to be the crucial problem of capital and labour in the present day—co-operation—instead of competition and disintegration. Mutual faith and mutual love, instead of class jealousies, mistrust, and bitter hatred. The brain directing the hand, the hand loyally and lovingly obeying the head, recognising its supremacy, though not its right to all the emoluments, all the privileges, of life. Until we have attained something of this ideal we are only in a state of civilised barbarism; given over, a few of us, to money-making and what we are pleased to call Christian charity, and denying to large masses of our fellow-countrymen any but the scantiest justice; still asking, with insolent (or shall I say ignorant?) arrogance, as of old, 'Am I my brother's keeper?'"

The Twenty-first Annual Report of the Surgical Aid Society has just been issued, and contains ample proof of the truly beneficent work the institution is doing. 7280 surgical appliances have been given to the poor during the last twelve months, 4632 persons having been relieved in various ways. No statistics can fully represent the benefits conferred by such a society, many by its aid not only being saved from deformity and physical suffering, but also from a life of helpless dependence.

The Baptist Missionary Society has again received tidings of bereavement from the Congo. The death of a devoted young brother, Mr. Hartley, which occurred at Manyanza on February 29, has been followed by that of the two mechanics who were on their way to Stanley Pool to assist in the reconstruction of the steamer Peace, recently sent out for Mission use. Their death was caused, it is said, by overstrain and fatigue in travelling. It needs to be pressed upon young missionaries that Western energy cannot be exercised without danger in Eastern climes.

Mr. J. M. Hark, of the Moravian Church, has been writing in the New York Independent on the need for a Christian alliance of an active, positive, and definite character. He pleads for one that should have for its object, not the discussion of doctrines, or ritual, or government, nor yet the destruction of any denominational "diversities of operations," but only the unification of purpose, and the drawing up a general plan of campaign. Referring to the Evangelical Alliance, he admits the value of its preparatory work, but pleads for something broader, more definite and practical, because men are now ready to carry out into further action the principles it has established.

Professor Lavaleye, of Liége, speaking at the Tercentenary Celebration of the Edinburgh University, thus expressed his view of the socialistic problem and how to solve it: "Open on the one side, on the left, the economists, Adam Smith and Stuart Mill; but on the other side open the Gospel; and if there is ever disagreement, follow above all the Gospel, for between the good, the just, and the useful, there cannot truly be contradiction. Recall to yourselves that admirable and profound word of Jesus, which would put an end to our miseries and discords if it were listened to: 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and the rest shall be added unto you.'"

The increase of dram-drinking in Calcutta is one of the most painful facts in connection with the social condition of that city. We learn that at the last sale of liquor-shop licenses, held about six weeks since, the aggregate amount realised was 20,000 rupees a month in advance of the sale of three years ago. This increased value of licenses proves the enormous advance made in the drinking propensities of the people. This means increased poverty, vice, and wretchedness among the population. It is a sad blot on the escutcheon of modern civilisation that wherever it goes the importation and use of strong drink follows in its train.

It is an interesting question what effect the placing a David or a Daniel at the head of modern Governments would have upon national legislation. A gentleman in Calcutta, writing to an Indian contemporary, says:—

"The announcement of the appointment of either Daniel or David would fill the country with alarm, and his first measures would strike with panic the Government that had appointed him. The first stroke of his pen, at ten o'clock on the morning that he took charge of his office, would be made through the opium revenue. The distilleries would next be ruthlessly expunged, and after one or two other similar acts of exorcism he would set to work with the confidence of a man of God to manipulate the lawful revenue till it fitted the lawful expenditure."

Would God that many Daniels and Davids were among us as administrators of justice and righteousness. But the world would not bear with them, and their firmness and fidelity would soon make them martyrs rather than heroes.

Among the remarkable men of present times, Lars Olsen Smith, the ex-brandy-king of Sweden, should certainly be ranked. Once the largest manufacturer of spirits in Sweden, he is now an ardent and uncompromising advocate of Temperance. He speaks seven languages, and is familiar with every country in Europe. Bent on the reconstruction of modern society, at least in his own land, he has agents all over the Continent, busily employed in gathering practical suggestions helpful to his end. He has lately been in England, examining the condition of our working classes, and investigating closely our social problems. The result of his work among the four and a half millions of his fellow-countrymen in Sweden will be watched with no little interest, and probably be powerfully felt by nations of far larger importance and size.

Mr. Smith's remarks on food, published in a recent number of the Pall Mall Gazette, are eminently practical and suggestive. He has established in Stockholm public kitchens for supplying cheap and wholesome food for the poor. As he says, of the expenditure of a working man, while only 15 per cent. goes for rent, 60 per cent. goes for food; therefore, if you can provide him with food twice as nourishing as that he gets now, so that he only needs half as much, or with as much at half the price, you save him at one stroke 30 per cent. of his wages. This Mr. Smith has done at home, and declares it can be done everywhere else. Insufficient nourishment is at the root of much of the physical degeneracy and drunkenness which prevail, so that reform in food is a great step in the right direction. The system he adopts is at once a simple, economical, and practical one, the cost of apparatus for supplying 1000 persons being only £200, and the management more than self-supporting.

We have received a lengthy communication from Mr. S. Gillespie Prout, dated "Souakin, Red Sea, April 14," detailing his experiences in Egypt, whither he lately went with the view of carrying on Christian work among the soldiers. We must defer the insertion of extracts from Mr. Prout's interesting letter.

Correspondents of The Christian World report from New Zealand that the several Methodist communions are drawing together, a basis of union on which they may become eventually and practically one having been drawn up and approved by a large majority of all concerned. A Congregational Union has also fused into one, various organisations hitherto working separately, so that a prospect of increased efficiency for service opens up before the churches composing it.

One of the correspondents whose reports we allude to, writes most seriously on the need there is for the home churches supporting vigorously colonial efforts to establish the cause of Christ. We quote his words as worthy of wide attention:—

"After years of close observation, I unhesitatingly pronounce it to be one of the most imperative obligations now resting upon the British churches, the provision of spiritual sustenance for the ever-increasing stream of emigration to the colonies. In the absence of duly ordered religious services abroad a moral deterioration goes on at an appalling rate. Every influence tends downwards. Prosperity brings its snare, and adversity begets a demoniacal despair. The quickened intelligence of colonial youth unmodified and uncontrolled by sound religious principle will but develop a rampant devildom. Already a 'larrikism' is upon us which bodes no good, and reverence is disappearing from our homes. The miserable negations of the Freethought School are eagerly caught up by the pleasure-loving throngs, and a deadly materialism is eating out the soul of society. It rests with earnest men both here and at home to determine whether or not a cry more bitter than 'The bitter cry of outcast London' shall not some day be heard from God-forsaken colonists."

According to Board of Trade returns recently issued for the past year, eleven persons met with their deaths in the United Kingdom from unavoidable railway accidents; 114 from causes the majority of which might have been avoided; while 754 were injured. We find, however, that in the same period 1042 railway servants were killed, and 2773 injured. These figures awaken serious thoughts as to the spiritual welfare of our railway men. We are glad to know that the Railway Mission is greatly encouraged in its evangelistic efforts among them. Just now the Mission greatly needs help to extend its operations. The treasurer is Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, 25, Threadneedle-street, E.C.

A lady has received a letter from a young friend who went to Brisbane a few months since, in which she says:—"I am not sorry I came, but it is a downright shame that there is no one to look after the young women and girls when they land here. Thirty or more of the girls that came out with me are on the street now, and I do believe that one-half of them would not have gone wrong if ministers or some one had spoken to them on landing. It is the same with every shipload that comes in; 400 women and men cannot get employed in a day or two; they have nothing to do, are in despair, and go wrong. I do wish something could be done." Emigration Societies profess to look after girls on their arrival at colonial ports, but it seems they do not do so. There must surely be Christians in Brisbane who would take up this work if it were brought before their notice.

In a recent note we stated, on the authority of a correspondent, that a patient had been prevented from reading a copy of one of Mr. Haslam's books. The Secretary of the Infirmary having been appealed to by one of our readers, wrote in reply as follows:—

"The book to which you refer was not taken from the patient with a view of depriving him of it, but in consequence of serious complaints by the medical officers of indiscreet visiting on the part of a lady who was supposed to have lent the book; it was simply borrowed from the ward for the purpose of ascertaining the name of the lender, and it was inadvertently omitted to be returned for some little time. The Governing Board were not appealed to in the matter, so that the statement with regard to their approving the act is utterly without foundation."

Young converts throughout London are reminded of the third gathering convened by Messrs. Moody and Sankey specially for their benefit, which will take place at Fleet-road Hall, Hampstead, on Monday evening next. Tickets may be had on sending stamped addressed envelope to Mr. Lindsay Brown, Wesleyan Chapel, Gospel Oak, N.W.

A correspondent draws attention to a lack of courtesy often found even in religious gatherings. A young man, for instance, will sometimes allow a grey-haired person to stand during an entire service, while he himself is comfortably seated. Doubtless it is a satisfaction in a crowded meeting to obtain a "good place," but we are not acting in accordance with the Divine command to "Love thy neighbour as thyself" when our personal wishes make us blind to the discomforts of those about us. On the other hand, we have often seen two persons occupying one chair in turns. In this way a little practical Christianity as well as courtesy might often be shown.

The children are the joy and brightness of a household, and when our own children are grown up, how we try, and how we love, to live our young home life over again, and to romp, and play, and laugh with our grandchildren, as we used to with our own. And has not the Son of Man, who took the little children in his arms and blessed them, provided children for his spiritual family? Are there not thousands of children to-day who love Jesus because they have learned that they are loved of Him, but who are kept outside the Church, which is their proper home, which they would brighten and soften by their presence, and turn into tenderness and sweetness the hard and bitter thoughts which often grow up in the gnarled hearts of elder people?

"I felt that I must sit down and weep over what I saw." These were the words of a Christian brother the other night to his pastor, after an evangelistic service in connection with which the speaker had been going to and fro, inviting passers-by to enter the Mission-room. He had seen bands of girls, from twelve to sixteen years of age, unblushingly parading themselves as prostitutes. Victims of drink and profanity were encountered on every hand, and scorn of his errand and object greeted him all along. His tears were those of sadness at the sight of sin, and of true compassion for souls, not of despair or disappointed endeavour. Would that such concern and Christ-like tenderness were common among the followers of Christ! Only let this be generally felt in our churches, and zeal for God would soon drive out formalism, and strongholds of evil, now impregnable, would be broken down on all sides.

"Can nothing more be done to stem this torrent of vice?" Will not Christian ladies in the Church, for Christ's sake, give themselves to rescue these poor girls, who are thus led captive by the devil?" These were the questions asked by the same earnest worker, as he described the scenes he had witnessed. Oh! the need there is for self-denying, loving, faithful service of Christ in such directions. The cry for help comes up from many a worn and weary toiler in the great field of the world. Souls are perishing for lack of a kindly hand to lead them out of danger—away from Satan unto God. How regretfully, and with what self-reproach, many in the day of account will look back upon lost opportunities of doing the Master's work. "It is high time to awake out of sleep."

It is gratifying to note that the Church of Ireland, following the example of the English Church, has determined to form a Church Purity Society. This was resolved upon at the General Synod at Dublin on April 23, on the motion of the Rev. Canon Wynne, supported by the Dean of the Chapel Royal, the Provost of Trinity College, and the Bishop of Meath.

Mr. Wm. Tallack has lately called public notice to the need of classification in reformatories, and supports his case by facts. The youths found in these institutions are, for the most part, of a very depraved class, but some are much more so than others, and need separating from the rest. The associating little boys of eleven and twelve with young men of eighteen and nineteen is a serious evil, as is also the massing together in any one building of large numbers of juvenile offenders. The plan pursued at the Redhill Reformatory presents a wise contrast to some other similar establishments. There, 300 boys are equally divided amongst five houses. We hope the subject may receive speedy attention from the Government.

A Layman writes to the Record expressing anxiety to know what is thought in ecclesiastical circles of a rector's inviting a Plymouth Brother and a Wesleyan to offer prayer in the church at the "after-meetings" during a Mission. "Is it seemly? is it expedient?" he asks. Why not seemly and expedient? may well be asked in reply. Is a Plymouth Brother or a Wesleyan unacceptable before God in prayer? Are the prayers of members of any one church more likely to prevail than those of another? Surely prayer is free; the brotherhood of all believers should be recognised at the throne of grace without reserve.

"There are three things essential to build up a true Church of Christ, or to build up any man's moral health and spiritual life, 1, conscience; 2, more conscience; 3, a little more conscience still." Thus naïvely and pointedly writes an American contemporary, when dwelling on the need of revival in religion. The Apostle furnishes an example all Christian professors are bound to follow when he says: "Herein do I exercise myself to have always a conscience void of offence toward God and men." There can be no genuine, lively faith in Jesus Christ as the Saviour of men, where this principle is disregarded. The doctrine of vicarious atonement and the vital influence of all really evangelical truth, is diametrically opposed to all low standards of moral action. Wherever the Divine Spirit dwells, He quickens conscience and leads to holiness and strict integrity of life.

May Meetings.

Turkish Missions.

THE annual meeting of the Turkish Missions' Aid Society was held on Monday week at 3, Stanley-gardens, Notting Hill; the attendance was large. Hon. A. F. Kinnaird presided.

The report and balance-sheet were of an encouraging character, showing that considerable progress had been made during the year. The Chairman remarked on the agreeable fact that this Society had been the means of setting on foot a number of Christian agencies in the East, which were now in a prosperous state.

Dr. Donald Fraser, in the course of a vigorous speech, expressed satisfaction with the improved condition of the Society, which he ascribed to the ability and perseverance of the Secretary. He said it was strange that Christians should be sceptical as to the results of the preaching of the Gospel in lands where the most wonderful religious revolutions had been witnessed, and where that Gospel had achieved its earliest victories. Under the baleful influence of the Crescent, things were at present in a deplorable state; even Christian sects seem to have no sympathy with each other. The prevalent impression over the East was that powerful influence for good must come from without, and the eyes of many intelligent people there were turned to England. He pressed the claims of the Society as an instrument for helping forward Christian work in the ancient East.

Rev. W. Roberts, Rev. Dr. Thornton, Rev. Dr. Morison, Sir Wm. Muir, and Rev. W. Wingate also spoke. Dr. Thornton pointed out that we were now giving to the Turks that very Gospel for the lack of which, in its purity, they were sent as a scourge on corrupt Christendom. The audience manifested the deepest interest throughout, and there was a good collection at the close.

The Protection of Women and Children.

The twenty-sixth annual meeting of the Society for the Protection of Women and Children was last week held at Exeter Hall. Mr. Henry Cridland occupied the chair. Rev. A. A. O'Neill, Secretary, read the report, which stated that during the past year they had rendered valuable assistance to many who stood in need of it, not a few of the cases having been sent in by the police. Every complaint had received careful investigation, and in some cases judicious advice, or the knowledge of the fact that the society would interfere, had been sufficient to lead to amendment of conduct and the alleviation of suffering. The total number of cases brought under the society's notice and dealt with during the past year was 700. In 148 cases prosecutions were unavoidable, for which convictions were obtained varying from seven days' imprisonment to ten years' penal servitude. Many young children had been restored to their parents; homes had been found for many young girls, and comfort and happiness had been restored to domestic life in many instances.

The Chairman expressed his belief that this society properly carried on would prove a most valuable agency, though in the absence of careful management it was not unlikely to do infinite harm; for a number of the cases that came before the council were found on investigation to be trumped-up cases, such as the complaint of undutiful children, jealous wives, or abandoned women with a grudge against a particular man. Such matters demanded careful and discriminating treatment, such as could be supplied only by persons who had a knowledge of the world and of human nature. He thought it would be of great use if a council of ladies were appointed to assist the council in the investigation of cases, particularly where children were concerned.

Primitive Methodist Schools.

The Primitive Methodist Metropolitan Chapel Building Society held the annual meeting at the City Temple, Mr. George Williams in the chair. The report stated that since its formation the society had provided over sixty chapels and schools, accommodating 30,000 persons. The income for the year showed a balance of £181 10s., a large proportion of which, however, was promised already for new chapel accommodation. Now that the "Bitter Cry of Outcast London" had been so loudly heard, the committee, whilst appealing for continued support, drew attention to the fact that the Primitive Methodists had for many long years been labouring in the poorest slums of London. During the last fifty or sixty years their missionaries and workers had been visiting the localities where wretchedness, squalor, intemperance, vice, and crime abounded; and, mixing with the working and industrial classes, tried to improve their material and spiritual condition. Thousands of people had been made happy, thousands had been converted from evil ways through the working of this society, whose officers not only preached the Gospel, but visited and consoled the sick and dying, and in every way sought to promote the cause of virtue and religion.

The Chairman, in alluding to the work of the society and of the Primitive Methodist section of the Church in general, remarked that, while all would soar above any narrow denominational ideas, they must admit that the sect before their notice had been most powerful amongst those who had endeavoured to reach the lowest order of people, and to bring them the tidings of the Gospel. Other speakers also addressed the meeting.

Friendless and Fallen.

Quite a considerable company met on the afternoon of Tuesday, April 22, in the lower Exeter Hall, to testify their sympathy with the London Preventive and Reformatory Institution, of which Mr. Edward W. Thomas is the honoured and respected secretary.

After a short season of prayer, the Earl of Aberdeen, who presided, called upon Mr. Thomas to read an abstract of the Annual Report. From this we learned that 1435 cases in all had been dealt with during the year. Of this number 504 had been admitted to the Homes, and 558 to the Open-all-night Refuge. Of the six Homes belonging to the institution, two are of a preventive character, and four are for reformatory cases. Over 20,000 cases have been admitted since the foundation to these Homes and the Refuge. A noticeable point was made of the extreme youth of the majority of those who had applied for admission during the past year, but few being beyond their teens. Girls had been directed to the Open-all-night Refuge by clergy and ministers, City missionaries, policemen, former inmates, and others, and some even by poor women who were still leading an evil life themselves. While thankful for the moral reformation of those under their care, the friends who manage the Homes do not rest satisfied without seeking the conversion of their souls.

An encouraging feature of the work was the fact of 275 applications having been made for rewards from former inmates, who had kept their situations for two or more years. These had each received a book, and eighteen presentation Bibles had also been awarded to young women who had married during the year. The first young woman received into the first Home was mentioned as having married respectably, and brought up a family in a highly commendable manner. Particulars of other specially satisfactory cases were given.

The Chairman thought that if there was one work above others which should claim the active sympathy of all Christians, it was that of raising the fallen and protecting the friendless. The work had, doubtless, the effect upon the immediate workers of a realisation of the evil and bitter thing that sin is, and also begat in them a strong pity for the sinner. He was especially thankful for a noble movement in a similar direction for raising a higher tone with regard to the complicity of men in this sin, thus attacking the evil at its source. This should not cause relaxation in the effort of saving the fallen, but, on the contrary, should encourage them to renewed effort. It was a work which called for our most earnest pity and active sympathy.

Rev. Canon Spence, vicar of St. Pancras, testified to the great blessing this institution had been to his parish, and the always ready and cordial help rendered by Mr. Thomas in cases brought under his notice by his Christian workers. When they looked into the seething mass of corruption in this great city it often seemed a wonder that the wrath of God was not poured out upon it. Might it not be that such noble works as this, striving to ameliorate the mass of corruption, perhaps helped to avert that wrath?

Rev. H. G. Duffield said that his connection with her Majesty's prisons had proved to him the value of these homes, especially the readiness with which girls were received. He was often asked what was the nett result? He maintained that we had nothing to do with results, it was ours to work and leave the results to a higher power; but if the failures were ten times as many as they are, they would be more than amply compensated by the good achieved.

Dr. Sinclair Paterson related a touching incident in the life of James Hinton, who finding himself on one occasion surrounded by a knot of fallen women, detained his friend who would have fled, and discoursed sweetly of Christ, who came to seek and save the lost. Society for its own sake puts a ban on this vice. To reform a drunkard he (Dr. Paterson) would only need that the drunkard should be on his side, but to reform a fallen woman he would need society to be on his side too. The strong tide of feeling now setting in on behalf of purity must become ten thousand times stronger before this end would be attained.

Rev. W. R. Mowll related several histories of women who had been reclaimed through the Homes, in which he had worked with Mr. Thomas. Mr. J. L. Christien and Mr. J. J. Drydale also spoke; the latter related a pleasing incident of Mr. Thomas's persevering applications at the Home Office on behalf of a poor girl who had been sentenced some years ago to penal servitude for life for infanticide. These applications had at last been successful, and the girl was now restored to her aged parents.

Indian Female Normal School.

The annual meeting in support of the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society, or Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, was held on Wednesday week in Prince's Hall, Piccadilly. The Earl of Shaftesbury presided, and there was a moderately large attendance, consisting chiefly of ladies.

Mr. W. T. Paton (hon. financial secretary), in lieu of reading the report, stated a few facts in connection with the working of the Society. They desired earnestly to raise the income of the Society to £20,000, as there was nothing more touching than to receive constantly, as they did, appeals from India for more missionaries, and to be compelled to refuse them solely from want of funds. Their income at present was £9500. The number of lady missionaries sent out by the Society last year was ten, and encouraging reports of them had been received. He was glad to say that the British and Foreign Bible Society had granted to this Society the salaries of twelve Biblewomen to spread the Gospel through India. The number of Zenanas visited by the missionaries of this Association in 1883 was 682, against 491 in 1882. All along the line they had extended their operations, for which they were thankful to Almighty God. As for their hospital at Lucknow, under the able superintendence of Dr. Alice Marston, the number of patients increased from 529 in 1882 to 1250 last year, a fact of immense importance, considering that the key of Christian kindness was the only one by which entrance could be gained into the homes of India. The objects of the Society for the coming year included extension of the Lahore rls' school at a cost of £500, and the purchase the premises occupied by the normal school Allahabad, the cost of the latter undertaking ing £1200. Altogether, increased assistance as greatly needed.

The Bishop of LAHORE said they must praise od that there were no fewer than four societies, which this was one, endeavouring to spread hristian education among the females of India. e made bold to say that such labours as it ndertook—labours carried on through the gency of ladies—were the most important mis- onary work done in India. The bearers of the ospel message were meeting the men of that ountry in the bazaars and the boys in the hools; but the Indian homes, where the females f the country could be reached, seemed quite npenetrable. Then, by God's blessing, the adies of England came forward with the key of oving-kindness, of gentle, courteous, refined, ultivated influence, and said, "Let us go into hose homes; hermetically sealed hitherto they ay have been, but by God's blessing, carrying he light of the glorious Gospel, we shall obtain n entrance for the Saviour Himself." He rusted that ladies of rank, influence, means, nd force of character would go out to India, ather about them groups of assistants, and mploy their gifts in revealing the love of Christ nd ameliorating the condition of the women of hat country.

Mr. EUGENE STOCK, speaking on behalf of the hurch Missionary Society, pointed out the reat assistance which it derived from bodies like his. Rev. A. J. PAINE moved a resolution, rging that more support should be given to the ociety, and in doing so dwelt upon the deep orruption caused by idolatry in India. Rev. . H. LASH seconded the motion, which was nanimously adopted. Dr. PRINGLE proposed a esolution, pledging the meeting to use every ffort to extend medical Missions among the uffering women of India. Enlarging upon the mportance of this branch of the work, he offered o assist the Society's agents, especially by eaching them how to vaccinate. Mr. H. MORRIS seconded the motion, which was unani- nously agreed to.

The Noble CHAIRMAN said: This Association ppears to me one of the best calculated, for the urpose it has in view, that ever entered into the ind of man. It means absolutely invading the omestic system of the whole Indian empire. ou are obtaining acc ss to the zenanas and the aremes, and you are obtaining access to the women connected with these baboos and nabobs; nd you can only do it by the agency of women nissionaries, especially medical women. They go into the zenanas and talk to the Indian ladies bout their present wants; then what an oppor- unity for dropping the word in season about he future! Such an opportunity, perhaps, ecurs on no other occasion, and it needs only hat people in this country should disburse freely f the funds they possess. See what an army we have of ladies fully qualified for the work, nd many training themselves in medicine and ther knowledge—what numbers we have full of eal, and piety, and intelligence, ready to devote themselves to service in that great country. This appears to be a mighty undertaking. Here are 200,000,000 of women in India; and all to be lifted out of the mire in which they are. The Government have always declared—I am not going to enter into the rights and wrongs of the ase—that they must look to the secular educa- tion and the secular education alone of the people of India. If that be the case—if the Imperial Government will not undertake to give the knowledge of Christianity—it must be given by the great mass of the English people themselves. If England should cease to govern that mighty empire it will be the greatest glory that ever came down upon this country if it can be said that the Imperial Government made India free, but the mass of the people of England made it Christian.

The Widows' Friend Society.

The annual meeting of this society was held at the Mansion House, City, on Wednesday last week, Mr. Alderman Savory presiding.

Mr. CHARLES E. CESAR (secretary) read the report, which showed that eighty-two widows had been effectively assisted last year by being supplied with the means of earning a permanent livelihood. Each case was personally visited by a member of the committee, and the necessary inquiries were made in a kind, sympathetic, and Christian spirit. Much indirect help had also been afforded, such as recommendations for employment, coals in winter, dinners at Christmas, &c. Nine £5 pensions were also granted to Christian women over sixty years of age. The report concluded with an appeal for aid, and for the assistance of a few earnest Christian ladies or gentlemen willing to visit cases in the south and west suburbs.

The Chairman commended the work to the Christian public as worthy of enlarged support, and deprecated indiscriminate charity. Dr. Thain Davidson referred to the practical and sympathetic character of the work, and its willingness to receive applications in any period of widowhood. Mr. Walter Hazell hoped that ministers and clergy would more largely advocate the Society's claims. Revs. Burman Cassin, A. Styleman Herring, Mr. F. A. Bevan, and Rev. J. W. Horne also spoke.

The Salvation Army.

The annual meeting was held at Exeter Hall on April 23, and was characterised by the demonstrativeness conspicuously peculiar to the Army.

The "General's" entrance was hailed with uproarious applause, aided by deafening blasts from various instruments, some horribly discordant. After a martial hymn to the tune of "The Sweet By-and-By," Mr. Booth prayed for reality. "Give us the kernel, O Lord, and the shell will look after itself!" The responses were deep and loud, as he supplicated for "a moral earthquake," and rose to a shriek for "the Salvation Army all over the world." Another hymn, and the leader introduced an "army trophy," a stalwart man of fifty-three, enumerating various sinful pastimes that he had habitually indulged in, such as prize-fighting, upsetting vehicles and persons at electioneerings, thrashing his wife, all accompanied, of course, with habits of fearful drunkenness. His stout and burly form well filled the red, yellow-lettered guernsey, and his testimony began with the uncompromising statement, "Oo'm well saved." In his own words: "Oi was a bad 'un! But oi went to the 'barracks' at Sheffield, where oi live, and me mates asked me if it was true, and oi says, 'Ay, and oo'm goin' agin to-neet,' and after oi'd been six times in a week, and three of a Soonday, oi got so as oi couldn't stop oot!"

"Captain" Johnston then sang, "Soldiers of our God, arise!" the full vocal and instrumental force thundering out the chorus:—

"Storm the forts of darkness, bring them down! bring them down!
Storm the forts of darkness, bring them down! down! down!
Pull down Satan's kingdom, where'er he holds dominion,
Storm the forts of darkness, bring them down! down! down!"

Mr. Booth then followed in a telling address, which lasted an hour and a quarter, intimating at intervals that he was just about to sit down, "to give place to his dear wife."

He denied the statement sometimes heard that the Army was a secret society, keeping friends and enemies alike in the dark as to its internal management. He was only too glad to take the public into confidence, but the difficulty was, they would not consent. Reviewing the past year, there were many events which called for gratitude to God. He had, however, to report some failures, some retreats, some disappointments, some mistakes, many things done which they ought not to have done, and others left undone which they ought to have done.

Seven years ago this movement began to attract public notice. For twelve years under the title of "The Christian Mission" they had laboured steadily for the salvation of the masses, and at the end of that period they had 26 corps and 36 officers. Now there are 749 corps and 1843 officers distributed amongst 18 nations and colonies, as follows: England, 473; Scotland, 37; Ireland, 17; Wales, 31; France, 4; Switzerland, 5; Sweden, 3; United States, 61; Canada, 30; Australia, 16; Victoria, 13; New South Wales, 14; Queensland, 1.; Tasmania, 3; New Zealand, 15; India, 7; Ceylon, 1; South Africa, 6.

His report embraced a period of seventeen months instead of twelve, which gave the idea that the extra prosperity in the five months of last year made a better total than the twelve months alone. However, the "General" strongly denied that the work was decreasing, though the actual advance had not been so large in proportion as in the previous year. The work is being carried on in thirteen different languages, and in spite of recent persecutions in Switzerland and Stockholm no retreat has been made. Speaking of the future, Mr. Booth said that his answer to the question, "What are you going to do?" was invariably, "Whatever God tells us to do: whatever takes place in the future, you may depend upon it we shall be there, and even at the battle of Armageddon our soldiers will be amongst the foremost. People say the Army will become a sect; then if it does, those persons will have the satisfaction of saying, 'We knew it would!' and with so many sects as at present exist, one more or less will not make much difference." He then made what he termed a "regular good beg," the object being to raise a relief fund of £10,000, amounts to be promised within twenty-eight days, and paid in during the year. During the collection, a solo was sung, with the rousing chorus:—

"We'll all praise the Lord for the victories we have won,
The Salvation Army will make the devil run!
Say what you like; when all is said and done,
We'll fight beneath our colours till we die."

Mrs. BOOTH devoted most of her remarks to answering various objections raised against the Army, in the course of which she said: Does not the history of humanity show how difficult it is for men and women, bound under the power of even one sinful habit, to break away from it? But here we have thousands of men and women who have lived for ten, twenty, and some even thirty years, steeped in all manner of evil and debauchery, who stand upon their feet, a mighty army of saved men, and declare before the world that the power of Jesus of Nazareth has made them whole. Therefore, I ask, what but the Divine breath could have quickened these "dry bones," and made them live?

The revenue for the year shows increase in every respect. The total raised by the Corps in the United Kingdom and spent locally by their own treasurers is £180,000. Received at Headquarters in the Trade Departments about £72,000, and in the Central Funds (including loans) of the Army £70,000. Income raised abroad and spent there, £71,800. Grand total, £393,800. Of this some £90,000 have been expended during the year in the acquisition of property in various parts of the world.

The Army has thus become one of the largest, if not the largest, Missionary Society in the world, with an income almost entirely derived from those who have benefitted by its ministrations.

The amount received in donations at Headquarters from the outside public was £32,000, and the vast demands for the extension of operations at home and abroad explain the extreme straitness constantly felt at Headquarters. For example, ten persons present at this very meeting are going abroad—five to Australia, two to California, a married couple and family to Canada, and one to the Cape of Good Hope. This alone will cost in passage and outfit £260.

Mrs. Booth then supported the General's appeal, and the meeting concluded in the usual manner.

Young Men at Exeter Hall.

The Young Men's Anniversary is always one of the great events of the Exeter Hall season. The thirty-ninth, held last Thursday, was not a whit behind any of its predecessors that we have attended. Lord Shaftesbury presided for the thirty-ninth consecutive time, and though he is on the verge of eighty-three, he showed as much vigour as would fairly be expected from a man of half his years. As Mr. Frank Bevan remarked, his lordship is the "Grand Old Man" of Christian London. The début of our old and highly esteemed friends, the Fisk Jubilee Singers, was an unqualified pleasure, and augurs well for the success of their third British campaign.

The report, an abstract of which was read by Mr. CAMERON CHURCHILL, spoke of decided progress in every department. The midday prayer meetings at the three City branches, the open-air work, the meetings for Bible study (which now includes a Bible-class for French and Swiss young men), the lodging-house visitation, the promotion of foreign Missions, the general educational work, the employment register, were among the many items touched on in this comprehensive but not exhaustive summary. The general work of the Associations in providing recreation and rest for young men at the close of the day, in giving advice, counsel, and a helping-hand to those who are out on the great ocean of London life, is also very important though difficult to tabulate. The sea-side homes at Hazelwood and Shaftesbury House have been largely resorted to during the summer. The national work of the Association becomes increasingly valuable and has been greatly extended during the year.

The financial footing of the London Associations has been considered, and it is decided that in future the three branches at Aldersgate-street, Exeter-hall, and Gracechurch-street, will each stand on its own feet. The year ended with a deficit of £1700. Towards this a legacy of £500 has been given, and Mr. George Williams, the ever-generous treasurer, undertakes to defray half of the balance, the other half being met by the Committee and other friends.

After some hearty words of introduction by the noble and venerable Chairman, the Jubilee Singers, clustering around their musical instrument, sang the old favourite, "Steal Away to Jesus." Who can hope to describe in cold and formal prose this exquisitely thrilling performance? It must be heard with a musical ear and received into a sympathetic heart in order to be understood. Then came the solemn, stately measures of the Lord's Prayer, chanted to perfection. At a subsequent period of the evening the song of these gifted dusky friends created quite a furore, and no progress could be made till they had satisfied the audience with another piece.

The first to address the young men was Dr. SINCLAIR PATERSON, who spoke on "Power for Service." "He who would be greatest," said the Master, "must become the servant of all." This is the first lesson for us to learn if we would tread in his steps. We are saved through grace, but our reward will be in proportion to our service. It may take a thousand different forms, but the great aim of the worker is to be a "living epistle of Christ." The power we need is Divine, and we are made partakers of it in the new birth. Then we must learn the methods of the Holy Ghost. As philosophers study the lines of nature's operations, and shape their investigations accordingly, so must it be with the Christian servant. Other indispensable conditions of service are simple faith and self-surrender. What the world wants is fully-consecrated men aflame with love to their Lord. If all the talent and energy of the Church were set on fire, what a storehouse we should have of the potency for effective service. Given these conditions, we must still bring to our work all the qualities of head and heart with which God hath endowed us. As some one has well said: If God does not need our culture, still less does He need our ignorance. We cannot be too complete in our mental and physical equipment; but most essential of all is the baptism of the Holy Ghost.

The second address, by Rev. R. T. HORTON, of Hampstead, was on "The Motives to Service," and was handled in a simple, earnest, and altogether admirable way. Young men must have an ideal in their service. As scientists, and philosophers, and statesmen, have their ideal, to which everything else must bend, so the Christian and especially the Christian young man, must find his ideal in the building up of the kingdom of God. If he will but grasp it, and become familiar with it, he will be willing "to spurn delights and live laborious days" in order to help on its fulfilment. The thought of the reward will undoubtedly prove a strong motive to services, though it is not the strongest. As we read in Daniel: "They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars for ever and ever." What a beautiful and expressive phrase, "to shine as the stars." This is no selfish ambition, no sordid desire. It is simply to be what God means us to be, and to do what He means us to do. The highest and most powerful motive of all is the constraining love of Christ. To discover what this love means we must meditate much upon it.

The last to speak was Rev. CHARLES A. FOX, who expatiated with much force and expressive beauty on "The Reward of Service." We regret we have not space for more than a few of his stirring sentences: I do not think Peter had any idea of asking what would be his reward when the Master said "Simon, lovest thou Me? Feed my sheep; feed my lambs." He must only have thought as we think, "Is it possible, Lord Jesus, that I am permitted to do such wonderful work for Thee?" The reward of service, surely, is the infinite condescension of God, in using such poor instruments as we are. Christ's work is its own reward. In this day there is rising up in the midst of us a scientific unbelief which is rearing atheistic and agnostic altars to the unknown God. I do thank God that, in the face of all the nebulous negations that are surrounding us everywhere, there are at the same time rising up living human altars crowned with spiritual fire, with this inscription, "I know in whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed to his trust against that day." What is this service that we are called to? Every believer is bound to be a messenger of the Cross. Every soldier is bound also to be a priest. "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit." Is your heart crushed between the justice and mercy of God? Do you feel that it is only because of the great compassion of the Lord that you have any place in his kingdom at all? You must be priests also to offer the sacrifice of a presented body. Young men, this is the time to begin before the hand of the devil has got such a hold of you that, perchance, you shall never break from the habits of passion. Now is the time to put your foot down and conquer. Let us be irrevocably the Lord's. Shall we not answer the invitations of the world according to the parable of the Master? When the invitation went out to the Gospel-feast, one said, "I have bought a piece of land; I pray thee have me excused." Shall we not turn the tables on the world and say, "I have bought a piece of land, by the wondrous purchase of Christ Jesus; it is the promised inheritance: I must needs go and see it, live on it, build an altar there, and live for ever with Him; I pray thee have me excused." "I have bought five yoke of oxen; I must go and prove them." We have to prove the exceeding great and precious promises of God. "I have married a wife." We are married to the Lord. Shall we not say to the world, "My desire is to my husband; I pray thee have me excused?" We want more of this whole-hearted enthusiasm to the Master. Christ is his own reward. Do not be afraid of a few scars in the fight.

Of course there was the customary vote of thanks to the Chairman, who replied briefly, and to the point. We must not omit to say how well the Male Choir, under Mr. Godfrey's lead, sang a selection of Mr. McGranahan's Gospel Songs, whilst the audience were assembling. They were overshadowed, no doubt, by the more finished efforts of the Jubilees; but, all things considered, they amply earned the plaudits they received.

Young Women in London.

An all-day convention of the Y.W.C.A. was held at Exeter Hall last Friday. The day's proceedings began with a meeting for prayer. The morning sitting was occupied by a conference of secretaries and workers, at which Mrs. E. W. Moore presided. A letter was read relating the happy experiences of the late Miss Battesby in her last illness.

Brief papers were read on "The Adaptation of Y.W.C.A. Agencies to the Different Classes of Society;" "How to Create and Foster more Esprit de Corps;" "The value of Parochial Branches;" "The Association and Hours of Leisure;" and "The Association Viewed from an Educational Standpoint." The ladies reading them were Miss Moore, Mrs. Moore, Mrs. Legg, Mrs. Menzies, Mrs. Hay Chapman, Mrs. Thwaites, Miss C. Maynard, and Mrs. Wyatt.

The report for London acknowledges thankfully the prosperity God has vouchsafed the society. There are now twenty-seven institutes and homes in affiliation, besides fifty-three outlying branches, making eighty altogether throughout London, with a total membership of 6877. The appeal made by the committee last year for the sum of £1500, to enable them to extend their operations, had met with a liberal response, more than £2500 having been realised. Mr. Samuel Morley had also promised £500 toward strengthening their City centre. The total receipts for the year had been £5072. The Association had co-operated with Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Missions in each of the districts where held, and these had resulted in a large accession of members. Various projects were under consideration for the further development of the Association. In the country there had been a larger increase than ever before. The number of total abstainers, too, was constantly increasing.

The afternoon meeting was devoted to hearing reports of secretaries upon various subjects bearing upon the work of the Society. Young women in our cities, foreigners in England, evangelisation, young women in the country, &c., were among the subjects discussed. This was followed by a conversazione and reception by the Countess of Tankerville. The literary organ of the Society, Our Own Gazette, contains monthly information on the work done, besides useful articles on dress, music, painting, botany, cookery, nursing, emigration, &c. A printed list is published of the institutes, boarding-houses, and restaurants opened for the benefit of young women.

The evening meeting, held in the large hall, and presided over by the Earl of Shaftesbury, was crowded, and was enlivened by the charming melodies sung by the Fisk Jubilee Singers. Mr. Stebbins also sang some of his solos.

Three addresses were delivered. Rev. C. BASKERVILLE, of Birmingham, was there to tell of the progress of the Y.W.C.A. in the town from which he hailed. It had been a blessing, indeed, and he believed the secret of its success was mainly due to its being founded and worked on the line of evangelical principles. It was making itself felt in Birmingham. Its grand aim was to win souls to Christ. The example of Phebe was commended to the Y.W.C.A., as having been "a succourer of many."

Rev. C. SPURGEON, of Greenwich, in an enthusiastic address, warmly commended the service of Christ to those as yet undecided. The character of the Divine Master, the nature of his service, and the wages He gives, were affectionately urged as motives. Rev. Dr. MORGAN, of Swansea, believed that many did things which they never intended, and repented when too late. A young man on leaving home neglected to fulfil his last promise to his mother, viz., to write her. Years passed away, and he returned to find she had died of a broken heart because she had never heard from him. He went and threw himself on her grave, crying, "Oh, I never meant to do it!"

The CHAIRMAN said he had never dared to hope to see such a meeting as this at so early a stage of its history. He was glad to see the black people there helping the whites, as the hite people had formerly, and for many years, ought to help the blacks. Mr. T. A. Denny aid it was one of the grandest meetings he had ver seen in Exeter Hall.

Midnight Meeting Movement.

The annual meeting of this Society was held n Friday afternoon at Exeter Hall. The chair as occupied by Mr. Drysdale. A "comparative tatement" shows that the work of the Society as been much extended and consolidated, many ore Christian workers have taken part in its perations, and a greater number as well as a ore varied class of women reached. Mr. hristien, the travelling secretary, read extracts rom the report, showing that during the past ear 46 meetings have been held in London and 7 in the country towns, and that great success ad resulted.

The Chairman urged that strenuous endeaours should be made to get hold of the fallen y means of personal converse. Believing this, he committee rejoice in the successful service f a worker who goes forth at night into the treets with suitable tracts and papers for disribution.

Rev. Burman Cassin did not think it would e possible to find anywhere a more thrilling eport than the one sent him by this Society, or was it in the least exaggerated. He was resent yesterday at a meeting in the Rochester Diocese, at which it was resolved to establish a ranch of the Social Purity Society. He did ot believe in sisterhoods, but would certainly ntreat women generally to take up the work of escue. He hoped ere long the ban would not e on the fallen outcasts alone, but on the men, oung, middle-aged, and old, who had been heir ruin. After a few earnest words from Rev. – Oakshot, the Chairman called on Rev. Dr. O'Brien, who marvelled that not until quite ecently had the Church of Christ been aroused o grapple with this devastating evil. He told f a potman, who was converted at Mr. Moody's eetings, and at once gave up his situation, hough without a penny; he is now at the head f a Mizpah Band in the neighbourhood of King's cross.

Mr. W. Thomas recommended the Mission to he support of the public by reason of its Christ-ike character. Jesus came to seek and save the ost. If one class was more lost than another, t was the poor fallen outcast. When he first egan rescue work, he was cautioned to leave it lone. Since the Society was called into existnce, many thousands had been rescued, and any were now before the Throne. He thanked God for the Purity Society, and for the White Cross Society. Unholy fortunes had been accumulated by the holders of buildings used for mmoral purposes. He was glad to say that a igilance committee had recently been formed n the drawing-room of a Christian lady, who nvited seventy of her friends. The City Corporation had given fifty guineas to the Society epresented that day. Mr. Thomas made an loquent appeal for a much increased income, o that their operations might be proportionately xtended.

A Mission in Greenwich.

BY the same post we have received the two following reports of the same Mission. With the exception of slightly abbreviating the longer account, we give them as received, allowing each to tell its own story:—

REPORT NUMBER ONE.

A most successful Mission has just been held at St. Peter's Church, Greenwich, conducted by Rev. Dr. Morris, from the Parochial Mission Society. Truly it has been a blessed time. At first the numbers attending the services were small, but day by day the numbers increased, till it was most joyous to see the sight of poor people eagerly drinking in the truth.

Through the earnest, powerful appeals of Dr. Morris, combined with a masterly and loving delivery, with a burst of eloquence which could not fail to arrest the ungodly, very many are now rejoicing in the Saviour who were hitherto utterly lost in sin. Nor is this all. Morning addresses on "The Christian Life" have been given to the Lord's children, with the result that large numbers have now entered upon a life higher, nobler, and deeper, and which, we doubt not, will lead to true devotion and entire consecration to the will, work, and service of the Lord.

The Lord's name be praised for the Christian privileges which this Society affords through its agents!

REPORT NUMBER TWO.

Among the clergymen of Greenwich, none was in deeper sympathy with the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey at the New-cross hall than Rev. Storer Clark, Vicar of St. Peter's, Bridge-street, nor was any more willing than he to assist in the continuance of the movement in the Greenwich district. Much to his regret, however, from want of support, and in certain instances from actual opposition among his brother clergymen, he could not actively join in the most successful services conducted by Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan in five of the Greenwich churches, and which were reported in your columns. But anxious to profit by the evident increased interest in religion, Mr. Clark arranged for a series of special services in his own church. The meetings took place last week, and were conducted by Rev. J. Morris, M.D., of the Church Parochial Mission Society.

Previous to this gentleman's arrival Mr. Clark had thankfully accepted the proffered services of the Greenwich Gospel Male Choir; but Dr. Morris having discovered, as he stated, that such choral aid had not been particularly acceptable at the later meetings of Mr. Moody, he limited their attendance to one evening only. His only requirement in that direction was "soft music in dealing with souls."

St. Peter's parish is the poorest and most densely populated in Greenwich, and in order to ensure a good attendance every house in it was methodically visited and supplied with full particulars as to the Mission. I regret to say the attendance was most meagre. At the closing meeting of last week, at the hour for beginning the service, less than 120 were present, of whom less than a third were men, and that meeting was the most successful of any as regards numbers. The voice of the speaker echoed through the empty building, so that some of the few present lost much of what was said. The sermon was an hour long; the entire service extended to two hours and a half. About sixty persons remained to the after-meeting, at which the doctor, during "soft music," went from pew to pew speaking to nearly every person present. He then stated, as the result of this personal canvass, that he found nearly everybody present were already Christians. He inquired of the women present where their husbands were. If there were any working men in Greenwich, where were they? He had heard that "one poor fellow," who had been at the Mission the previous evening, had given himself to Jesus at his home afterwards, for which he praised the Lord.

The addresses given by Dr. Morris were in many respects very unlike such as we are accustomed to hear at such occasions. That of Friday evening was based on the text, "How shall ye escape if ye neglect so great salvation?" and the subject was introduced by the following illustrations: A hat with Christy's name in it was sure to be a good hat; a book written by a good man was sure to be a good book, and a painting by some celebrated painter was sure to be a good picture. So a salvation brought by God was sure to be a great salvation. Such illustrations, which were submitted to an audience who very evidently knew nothing about Christy's, literature, or art, may be taken as a more than average specimen of the teaching power and discernment which the working men of St. Peter's parish failed to take advantage of.

The Sunday afternoon meeting reserved for men only had an attendance of about seventy. On this occasion those who were anxious were asked to rise, but meeting with no response whatever, Dr. Morris assumed that all present were Christians.

Rev. Storer Clark has my deep respect and sympathy, for it is not because he does not know how a Mission should be successfully conducted, that his was a failure to the extent I have indicated.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

PISA.

THE Vaudois Evangelical Church, meeting in a hall at Pisa, is much disturbed by some atheistic opponents. By noise, hurling stones against the door, whistling inside, attempting to put out the gas, and insulting threats, the peace of the little community is broken up. The agents of the police refusing to act, the gendarmes were besought to stop the tumult and protect the congregation.—Semaine Religieuse.

PORT SAID.

Mrs. Prinsep writes that Mr. Eoll has arrived at Port Said in safety; also that a new Sailors' Home will shortly be opened at Alexandria, under the care of Mr. Whitfield and his wife, formerly in charge of the Bethel ship.

BARCELONA.

The Emperor of Germany has given £15 for the Barcelona Cottage Hospital, after making official inquiries as to the need of such an institution for Barcelona, if it was a help to the Protestant cause, and if it was in need of assistance. Miss Mielecke, who is the superintendent of the Hospital, asks for used postage stamps (not English penny ones), which she disposes of for the institution. Address, Shugborough, Great Haywood, Staffordshire.

SWEDEN.

Religious freedom does not reign in this country, at any rate as far as the Baptists are concerned. A Swedish pastor says: "The Baptists belong nominally and legally to the Swedish State Church, because they cannot separate from it without becoming subject to certain limitations which they deem contrary to the teaching and principles of the New Testament. We can only come out from the State Church by placing ourselves under the 'Law for Dissenters.' It requires that we should seek the King's permission for our existence, and we should not receive into our fellowship any member under eighteen years old. Places our church under the oversight and control of the Ministers of State, and forces us to support the State Church. These considerations cause use to remain as we are, to continue preaching the Gospel, baptize believers, build up the Church, and patiently to endure all the penalties inflicted on us, fines and imprisonment, &c."

BRITTANY.

Pasteur Lecoat writes:—A sick woman came to my wife for advice, and, during conversation, said, "I cannot read, but one of my neighbours can. Some time ago we bought a New Testament between us. I paid a penny more than she did, and she was to read it to me. When she went to confess the priest asked her if she had bought any Protestant books, and she told him about our purchase. He then said that to commit adultery was a smaller sin than to buy and read this book; so she came to me and said we must burn it. We threw the book on the fire, but two of the pages flew up the chimney. We put them on again, but with the same result. We tried once more, but up they went again. We were very much frightened, and I said, 'As long as they will not burn let us read them.' She did so, and on one leaf was written, 'God so loved the world,' &c. We both began to cry with fear, and thought we had been wrong in following the priest's advice. We have bought another book, and no priest will make us throw it in the fire when the fire refuses to burn it."

The Late Rev. A. A. Rees.

HIS PRAYER FOR THE PRESENT YEAR.

O H! to be ripe and ready
For the change so soon at hand:
Oh! to be firm and steady,
When on Jordan's brink I stand.

Oh! to be bold and fearless
When Death bursts on my view;
Oh! to be calm and tearless
When Earth I bid adieu.

Oh! to have no regrettings
When sinks my life-day's sun,
No sad, remorseful frettings
For work I've left undone.

Oh! to need no confession
Of sin I did not know,
But to see each transgression
And judge it, ere I go.

May Heaven to me be open
When my life's race be run;
And may the first word spoken,
Be—"faithful soul—well done."

And oh! when in I enter,
May the first sight I see,
Be Jesus in the centre
Of myriads saved, like me.

Or, if the Lord's returning
Precludes that I should die,
May my bride's heart be burning,
To meet him in the sky.

State Regulation of Vice.

YOUR readers will be interested in hearing of the large and influential meetings held in Edinburgh during the last week, in opposition to State Regulation of Vice. The meeting in the Assembly Hall on Saturday, April 19, was well attended by both men and women. The speakers were accompanied to the platform by a large number of the leading citizens. Professor Calderwood was in the chair.

Dr. Andrew Thomson opened the meeting with a few earnest words of prayer, which seemed to solemnise it at the very commencement. Among the speakers were Mr. Ferguson, of Kinmundy, Canon Butler, Mrs. Butler, Professor Stuart, Rev. John Young, Miss Tod, of Belfast, and Mr. Kelman.

Professor STUART gave a powerful and interesting address, showing the sympathy of all classes, both in and out of Parliament, with the repeal movement, and that through good report and evil report, the cause of God had prospered.

Mrs. BUTLER said that it seemed to her the question asked was still as it was then in the Temple, "What shall we do with her?" We never hear it asked, "What shall we do with him?" No one-sided legislation can ever be accepted by the friends of repeal.

Interesting as was the demonstration on the 19th, it was far surpassed, in the estimation of those who had the privilege of being present, by the meeting for women only held in the Queen-street Hall on Sabbath evening. It happened to be the anniversary of the resolution of the House of Commons passed on April 20, 1883.

Mrs. Duncan M'Laren presided, and Mrs. Kelman opened the meeting with prayer. Miss Tod spoke at some length in a serious and solemn manner, warning the women present of the responsibility resting on them with regard to this question and the question of morality generally.

Mrs. Butler then addressed the meeting, but words are inadequate to describe the solemnity and impressiveness with which she related her own spiritual experience, and pleaded with all present for fuller consecration to the Lord's service. In a few solemn words of prayer she then commended the meeting to the Lord, and besought Him to give them of his spirit. After a few words from Mrs. M'Laren and Miss Wigham, the meeting closed. R.

PIONEERING—PAST AND PRESENT.

MY DEAR BROTHER,—A work for God is never lost. In the life of the American Missionary Judson, he is reported as saying: "I never was deeply interested in any object; I never prayed sincerely and earnestly for anything, but it came at some time, no matter how distant the day—somehow, in some shape, probably the last I should have devised, it came."

How this has been verified in our own case, in the China Mission, the Bible-woman's work, the French tract distribution, the Soldiers' work, and now more recently in the Kabyle Mission. The Lord has graciously used us to initiate these movements, but in his infinite wisdom He is pleased to carry them on by means which we never anticipated. For the China Mission we can only exclaim, "What hath God wrought!"

Many of your readers came to our help thirteen years since, to assist us in the support of twenty-nine Bible-women in various towns of France. This agency proved to be of the greatest value, but a relative of mine, a minister, strongly recommended us after having established the work, to leave it to the support of the French people themselves. This we did, and we do not regret having acted upon his advice. But I feel responsible to the many friends in England who contributed for several years to their support (some through THE CHRISTIAN) to tell them the subsequent history of the Bible-women. Six valuable labourers are continuing the same work, mostly in the South, sustained by French ladies. One was originally supported by Mrs. Ranyard, and one still by English friends; three have important engagements in Christian institutions in the north; five, we believe, are working in connection with Baptist brethren; four are retained in connection with their families, but still, we have reason to think, working for the Lord in various ways; one has become too infirm to work; three died at their posts, faithful to the last; two were not quite competent for an aggressive work; and five, wives and widows of evangelists, &c., we have no very definite information about, though we believe they are still serving the Lord.

It was necessary to superintend these sisters, but it could only be done efficiently on the spot. Mrs. Pearse did a good part in training most of them and setting them to work; during this time they distributed the half a million of tracts Mr. Henry Bewley placed at our disposal, and when I left the Depôt Central in Paris for work here, it was rich with the remains of the supply brought over from Dublin (thanks to the aid of many kind friends), some recently adopted tracts, besides two millions of essentially Gospel tracts, written by ourselves, which we find more and more adapted to our own purposes here, and much appreciated.

The Religious Tract Society, with their accustomed liberality, are prepared to make grants of tracts from their depôt, and we recommend all our friends scattered throughout the provinces of France, who have in many cases received them through us, to make application for a grant to the Secretaries of the Religious Tract Society, Paternoster-row, London.

I will now refer to some of the needs here in this prolongation of France, as many of its people love to call it.

The agency which we have found to be so valuable in France is still more needed here. Algiers is utterly destitute of evangelists, and what a boon a Bible-woman would be to penetrate amongst the families of Arabs, Kabyles, Moors, Jews, Spaniards, Italians, Maltese, and French! At present it is a subject for prayer and inquiry. We trust the Lord to raise up a suitable helper, and a Christian lady is on the spot prepared to superintend such an agency, when one is found.

A Sailors' Rest is also greatly needed here, and one to undertake it who could be missionary to the sailors and hold meetings for men of all nations. The Rest might include a reading-room and tract depôt. A locale in a very eligible situation on the quay can be had for £5 a month.

The soldiers' meeting, which we began with our beloved sister some years back in Algiers, has been kept up, but now needs the presence of a Christian lady to carry it on. Our soldiers' work in Paris being stopped by the authorities, we came here in 1876, and began the work in Algeria. We cannot undertake the responsibility of a permanent work in Algiers, as we keep before us as our first business the Kabyles, and pioneering amongst them in Kabylia. The letters which have appeared in THE CHRISTIAN from time to time have awakened much interest for them in various countries, and I trust labourers may be raised up on their behalf, and amongst them that great desideratum, a medical dispensary.—Yours very truly, GEO. PEARSE.

L'Agha, Algiers, April.

Major and Mrs. Poole at Bristol.

THESE Evangelists have been conducting a Mission on a large scale in this city for the past twelve days, ably assisted by the Revs. J. P. Gledstone, Hugh Price Hughes, and Mr. Hankinson, of the Children's Special Service Mission.

The Colston Hall, seating over three thousand was chosen as the scene of their labours, and the expectations of the four hundred Christian workers who assembled to meet them on the evening of their arrival has been realised, not only in the success of the Temperance cause, so lovingly pleaded by them, but in the real, spiritual work done, both in refreshing the Lord's people at the mid-day prayer-meetings, and in gathering in the anxious souls after the solemn after-meetings, which are invariably conducted by Major or Mrs. Poole. Six special drawing-room meetings were arranged for, and succeeded in rousing much interest amongst the better classes, enlisting their sympathies both for Gospel Temperance and work amongst the soldiers.

Major Poole gave two special addresses to men, and his powerful pleading, which is marked by delicate handling of a difficult subject, won him the hearts of his hearers. Mrs. Poole conducted, at the same time, women's meetings, which were densely packed. The Sunday services and special meeting for Bands of Hope were magnificent sights, the large hall being filled to overflowing with a silent, listening crowd, on whose faces one could read the solemn feelings of their hearts.

Mrs. Poole conducted the last Sunday evening service and after-meeting, and none are likely to forget her pleading for heart-surrender to Christ, in clear tones which reached every part of the enormous building. Many rose to testify to their decision for Christ and adjourned to the inquiry-room afterwards for counsel and prayer. Great closing meetings were held last Sunday afternoon and evening. The Hall was crammed on both occasions, and there was much evident blessing in the after-meetings.

It has been a happy, blessed time, and we shall send our friends away next week to Cheltenham and to Clevedon, winged with prayers from many loving hearts in Bristol.

Temperance Notes.

HULL.—Mr. W. Forbes has closed a seventeen days' Mission here. The blue ribbon is a feature on the streets of the town. The large hall was often crowded, and God blessed the work.

THE KING OF SWEDEN AND THE GOOD TEMPLARS.—An English Company is at present engaged in working a gold mine in Norway. The King of Sweden, a few days ago, had an interview with some of the heads of the concern. His Majesty was greatly pleased when informed that a large number of them were Good Templars, and said, "I am very glad to hear it, because they are just the sort of men to give satisfaction."

GLASGOW.—A conference on the best methods of promoting the Temperance cause was held at the Christian Institute on Monday week. Mr. Campbell White spoke of what might be accomplished through individual influence and effort. He said he had been led to abstain through meeting with a half-tipsy man in the inquiry-room. Dr. Elder Cumming said the good effects on society would be immeasurable if it were an understood thing that no Christian should have intoxicants on his table.

Blackdown Hills Mission.

DURING the past two months I have been evangelising in various parts of England with blessing to many souls from the Lord. Said one, "I have lost the burden of fifteen years to-night. I was so awfully miserable that I said I must be delivered to-night or I shall destroy myself. I can't endure it any longer. Fifteen years since you preached in this town; from that time I have been troubled, and often the dread of sudden death and eternity to follow has made my life miserable. I've tried to forget it, to drown it by drink, but cannot; and I've tried by reformation, but the past is always present, and the future is always present to my mind. Bless the Lord, I have found deliverance from my burden."

In every place visited of late this good news from God to sinners has found hearts ready to receive the message. The season will soon be here for tent services, and we hope to visit many places and persons with the Gospel, who do not hear it in a language that reaches the heart. We ask the prayers and fellowship of the Lord's servants for this work. We shall soon have the soldiers on the hills for their summer training; we have access to the camp, and shall be thankful for help.—Yours faithfully,

GEO. BREALEY.

Evangelistic Notes.

SWANSEA.—Bible readings and Gospel services were held by Mr. H. Varley during Easter week in Mount Pleasant Chapel and St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, and were well attended. Many persons professed to decide for Christ, amongst the number being several young men.

GRAYS, ESSEX.—Mr. Catlin, of the Cow-cross Mission, has been paying us a few days' visit. His Bible-teaching has been most valuable, and many have been stirred up to feel their need of a closer study of God's Word. A meeting was held every night in our Mission-room, preceded by an open-air service. M. B.

LISKEARD, CORNWALL.—After eight days' Mission, a praise and testimony gathering concluded the first Mission ever held in this finest of Cornish churches, seating 1400. The Mission preacher was Rev. Walter Bradbury. Mr. and Mrs. Bradbury and Miss Haire are now having Bible-readings, &c., at 19, Claremont-crescent, Weston-super-Mare.

COLLINGWOOD-STREET, S.E.—A series of Gospel services just concluded here have been attended with much blessing. They were conducted by Mr. J. Creer, of the "Evangelisation Society." The scenes in the inquiry-room were most striking; many of those sunken in sin signed the Temperance pledge, and commenced a new life in Christ Jesus.

MR. DENHAM SMITH has been preaching for the last six weeks in Ireland, first in Limerick and Kildare, and during April in Dublin, where the meetings were very large, and many souls (some who were Roman Catholics) confessed to their having found Christ. On last Sunday evening many Christians testified to the blessing received. Many soldiers attended also. There is an excellent Soldiers' Institute in Limerick, where the converted ones are welcomed and helped in the divine life by the excellent and devoted lady in charge.

HENGLER'S CIRCUS, LIVERPOOL.—The seventh season of these Gospel Services was terminated on the evening of Sunday, the 30th ult. As a result of Mr. Moody's visit to this circus, in which he held his meetings last spring, the number of workers has now grown to about 150, and with this large staff nearly 60,000 houses have been visited, and a small Gospel book left at each. In point of attendance, the services have been even better sustained throughout than before, the congregation being always in the thousands, and sometimes many unable to gain admittance. Results have not been neglected, for short after-meetings were conducted at the close of each service, many always remaining to be conversed with. Arrangements are made to resume the work on the first Sunday in October next, and during the summer I hope to carry on the open-air meetings in Wavertree-park for the thirteenth season. D. M. DRYSDALE.

Notices of Books, &c.

THE NEW LIFE AND THE TRUE LIFE. By Rev. WILLOUGHBY BALFOUR. 1d. Elliot Stock. A pamphlet showing the influence of the Holy Spirit in the Christian's life.

SOCIALISM A SNARE. By "ONE OF THE PEOPLE." 1d. Wade & Co., Ludgate-arcade. This pamphlet presents some very fair, and of course adverse criticisms upon Mr. Hyndman's tractate, "The Social Reconstruction of England."

A SCRIPTURE ALPHABET FOR BUSY PEOPLE has been compiled by Mrs. E. H. Riches. It is well suited for hanging up in bedrooms, cottages, schools, hospitals, nurseries, kitchens, ships' cabins, and in the homes of all classes. (3d. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.).

SEEKING AFTER GOD IN SCIENCE AND RELIGION. 1s. By Rev. C. J. WHITMORE. Nisbet & Co. This is a useful little manual of Christian evidence derived from the sources of Astronomy, Geology, History, Scripture, &c. It contains the substance of eight lectures given by the author to his congregation.

CHRIST'S CALL. By W. J. H. Y. 6d. Elliot Stock. An appeal to the Young on behalf of Mission work, the exhortations being supplemented by "Missionary Thoughts and Aspirations," or the utterances of such noble men as Rev. Henry Martyn, whose whole desire in life was to lead the heathen into the light of the Gospel.

"WOUNDED IN THE HOUSE OF HIS FRIENDS." 1s. By F. M. Nisbet & Co. Applying these words of the Prophet to our Lord, the author "groups together thoughts on certain passages which show how deeply wounded He often is, in the house of his friends." It is written in an humble, earnest way, relating what is doubtless the experience of many; its perusal should stimulate every reader to a closer walk with God.

THE CHURCHMAN'S FAMILY BIBLE: NEW TESTAMENT. 6s. Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. This goodly volume contains an extensive commentary, principally the work of several Episcopal celebrities. It furnishes a considerable amount of helpful and important information concerning the ways and habits of the eastern peoples, exposition of difficult incidents, historical and geographical allusions, &c. On the whole the work is a valuable one, while the illustrations which occur on almost every page add to the reader's conception of the events and circumstances referred to.

THE WAY TO THE CITY. By Mrs. E. J. CARR. Holness. The gifted authoress of this charming little volume is no longer with us, but by it, in a literal way, she "being dead, yet speaketh." The book is a spiritual gem, and cannot fail to be highly prized by its readers. The style is pictorial, the doctrine sound, and the aim Christ exalting. Travellers to the Celestial City will find in it waymarks they do well to carefully consider and closely follow. It is a book calculated to wean from the world, draw to Christ, and induce prayerful preparation and eager desire for his coming. We welcome its publication, and speak heartily and warmly in its praise.

OUR MODERN PHILOSOPHERS—Darwin, Bain, and Spencer. By "PHYCHOSIS." 4s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin. This is a clever, amusing, and instructive book, and forms a valuable contribution to the literature of Evolutionism. In the first part there is, with pleasant irony, something like an apology for Darwin's theories. In the second and third parts the reductio ad absurdum is very telling as applied to Bain and Spencer. The versification (for it is in this form the satire moves) is excellent, always rhythmical, and often very skilful. The copious notes and quotations are by no means the least valuable part of the work. They are really worth the price of the book. On the general subject we are quite sure that the mechanical conception of the universe, which has been advocated by the three above-named philosophers, among others, is increasingly being discredited; and the more the mere field of physics is explored, the more is the conception becoming self-contradictory and untenable.

INDUSTRIAL HOME FOR BOYS.—This institution, like those of Stepney and Southwark, is designed for destitute boys who, if left uncared for, are liable of falling into crime. The boys, to the number of 100, receive teaching in school and industrial work, and thus become fitted for respectable situations. In spite of strict economy, the yearly receipts fall short of the necessary expenditure by about £470, towards which donations may be sent to the Treasurer, EDWARD AUSTIN, Esq., at the Home, 119, Copenhagen-street, W.

Gospel Work amongst Sailors.

THE French schooner Mystery, connected with the Portsmouth and Gosport Seamen's Mission, put into this port for a week on her way to France. Gospel services were held every evening on board and in the Baptist Chapel alternately. Crowds of seafaring men, with their wives and families, were gathered together, and the Spirit of the Lord was manifestly present on every occasion. On the last evening a special meeting was held in the chapel to commend this new French work to God, and when the little vessel sailed, many Christians gathered upon the shore to bid her God-speed on her mission of peace. J. T. ALMY.

Brixham, Devon.

We have had a very happy time with the fishermen, seamen, boatmen, and others in the West of England, first in the Annie, from Feb. 7 until the middle of the present month; then by way of trial in the Mystery Gospel schooner, previous to her sailing for France. Meetings were held every evening and on the Lord's day for the preaching of the Gospel. In Torquay and Brixham there were very evident tokens of the Lord's approval. Now the Annie has returned to be used among the East country fishermen and seamen, but the Mystery has arrived at Havre, one of the successful fields of the past few years' labours there. Any godly brethren or sisters, with means to provide for themselves, who can speak the French language fluently, and who can preach the Gospel, will find a welcome. HENRY COOK.

"Sinless Perfection."

SIR,—As the much disputed subject of "sinless perfection" has often been referred to in THE CHRISTIAN, I think it may serve the cause of truth to narrate the following remarkable dying testimony.

Two ladies resided a short distance from each other, and both being decided Christians were on terms of intimate friendship. Miss A., in reliance on the power of God to keep from sin, maintained that she had been thus kept and cleansed from sin for some few years. Miss S., who did not view the subject in the same light, thought, however, that if anyone could say so, Miss A. might, as her life was a singularly holy one. Some members of Miss A.'s family died, and as she was left alone, she asked that she might be allowed to live as a boarder in Miss S.'s house. This plan was adopted, and they lived for some time under the same roof. One day Miss A. seemed so ill that medical aid was sought. The doctor thought Miss S. was needlessly alarmed, and that there was no cause for anxiety. Miss S. sat up with her that night, and she became so much worse that early in the morning the doctor, on coming again, pronounced her to be dying. She told Miss S. she did not want to see any of her relations or friends, but wished Miss S. to promise not to leave her. Miss A. appeared from that time to take no notice of passing things, but during the remaining few hours of her life she emphatically repeated, at intervals, these words: "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us."

Miss S. can never forget the solemnity of that dying hour; it seemed as if, when entering into the presence of Him "that is holy" (Rev. iii. 7), Miss A. had learned in the glory of that light what she never knew before, and was permitted thus to acknowledge her ignorance of the Divine standard. A CONSTANT READER.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.—On Tuesday week the annual tea and public meeting in connection with the Sunday-schools Christian Mission was held in the chapel, Little Wild-street, Drury-lane. The proceedings opened with a tea, at which over 400 sat down. The public meeting was presided over by the Earl of Shaftesbury, and addresses were given by Mr. Alderman Savory, Dr. Oswald Dykes, and others.

Russian Missions.

WE do not usually connect missionary effort with the Russian Church, which, however, carries on an active propaganda in Central and Eastern Asia.

A very large proportion of the population of the Asiatic dominions of the Empire are heathens, and although not actual savages, many of the tribes of Siberia are in what may be called the second stage of barbarism. There is a Society of Orthodox Russian Missions, which seems to be supported pretty much as our own missionary societies are, and to carry on its work in a similar way. Hitherto the principal field of activity of these Missions has been the Altai, the Amoor, and maritime provinces, with the population composed of Tartars, Buriats, Tungus, and Chukchis; during 1883 the propaganda has been extended to the Kirghiz and the peoples of Turkestan. Special attention has been given to the Kirghiz, who are very numerous in Central Asia; there are half a million in the territory of Semipolatinsk, 30,000 in Akmolinsk, and some hundreds of thousands in the provinces of Semirechensk and Turkestan.

Russian missionaries are specially active in Japan. The orthodox community in Japan is stated to number 7,217, with thirteen priests and ninety-three unattached preachers. There were ninety churches, besides 277 "houses of prayer." Indeed, the Russian Church claims to have more adherents in Japan than the Roman Catholic and Protestant Missions together.—The Times.

Irish Church Missions.

LAST week was an important one for the friends of this society in Dublin and in various parts of Ireland, who met to celebrate the annual meeting. Lord Plunket presided at the opening meeting in the Metropolitan Hall. During the proceedings, about five hundred of the outdoor children under the care of the society sang a number of hymns learnt in their several schools.

The Chairman showed the necessity of such a society as this at work among the Roman Catholics of Ireland. He admitted that there had been many saintly men and women, many scholars of great learning and ability in the Church of Rome. "But," he said, "when we see how the way between the sinner and the Saviour is blocked up by mediation on earth and in heaven, and think how God is dishonoured by the worship, due to Him alone, being given so largely to saints and angels, and to the Virgin; when we remember that on the Continent the very images of those saints have become objects of the worship, while we love and respect many of our Roman Catholic countrymen, yet that very love prompts us to proclaim the truth, and to endeavour to win them to a knowledge of the Saviour alone.

The Rev. H. W. Townsend, the Secretary, presented the annual report, giving a résumé of the Society's operations, which will come before London friends at the society's May Meeting, held on May 13 at St. James' Hall (not at the City Temple, as erroneously stated in our list). The funds collected in Ireland, including legacies of £489 3s. 2d., amounted to nearly £3000.

SLAVERY IN EGYPT.—Last week the Lord Mayor presided over a meeting at the Mansion House, convened to establish at Cairo a home for freed women slaves, a similar meeting having been held on the 28th ult., at Cairo, by Sir Evelyn Baring. Letters of sympathy were announced from the Earl of Shaftesbury, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Earl Granville, and others. After a few introductry words from the Chairman, Mr. W. E. Forster, M.P., moved: "That this meeting, recognising the urgent claims of the emancipated slave population in Egypt to the generous sympathy of the British public, desires to express its hearty approval of the proposal made by Sir Evelyn Baring and the committee in Cairo to establish a home for freed women slaves in that city, and at the same time pledges itself to support the movement by every means in its power." He argued that as we were interfering with Oriental slavery, we should not refuse to take the consequences of that interference; and it was manifestly the case, as regarded these poor women, that we ought to establish this home. Upon this there was in Egypt absolutely no difference of opinion. The Queen, too, had most generously given a subscription of £100. The scheme, if carried out, would deal a heavy blow at the slave trade. The Lord Mayor, Mr. Forster, Sir T. Buxton, and Mr. Edmund Sturge were appointed as the London committee to co-operate with that in Cairo.

A Lesson from the Sea.

FROM the shore I gazed o'er a stormy sea,
As a strong wind swept its waves,
And impelled them on with a mighty force
To mysterious rocks and caves.
Oh so grimly brown, yet so white, that sea!
So exceeding fierce and high;
It appeared enraged with its very self
As its spray tore madly by.

Many wild waves broke with a sullen roar
'Mid a sheet of seething foam,
Which was straight recalled by a backward rush
To its ever-changing home.
How I loved to follow a crested head
In its path across the waste;
And to watch its course, as it shoreward sped
In its grandly solemn haste!

Then to see it break, with a leaping crash,
But a few yards off from me;
How I pitied those who were even then
Far away on that dark sea.
But one crest I saw high above the rest,
And I traced its course with dread;
On and on it came, then—no angry burst—
But it kissed the shore instead!

Yes, its wrath was spent, and it gently played
With the pebbles near my feet;
And it seemed to say unto me that day,
In a voice both clear and sweet:
"Oh, distrustful heart! why so often look
At a trial you dread may come?
For that very wave may at last but end
In a sheet of silvery foam."

For the storms of life are in loving hands,
And though wind and wave may roar,
Often breakers change into ripples soft
When they really touch the shore.
And if not, trust on, thou wilt surely find
That the Father's arms are cast
Right around his child, who needs only rest
On the strength that holds him fast!

TENTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN"
WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
CASE REPORTED by Dr. K——.

An eminent physician (Dr. K——, M.D., L.R.C.P.), writing Mr. C. for a friendly consultation on his own case, speaks of an extraordinary case coming within his knowledge, and says: "Had I been free you should have used my name. The patient had been dreadfully ill with cough, debility, and loss of flesh, going on gradually for twelve months. His paroxysms were terrible, with spitting of much muco-purulent matter, and followed by extreme prostration. He took your medicine for ten weeks; his attenuated frame gained 9 lbs.; his appetite returned in full; sleep was sound and refreshing. His cough and expectoration were instantly relieved; in fact, it acted like a charm. There is no disputing the case."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.
INSTITUTED 1844.

This Society is employing 120 earnest and faithful workers under the Clergy, to labour among the Poor, the Sick, the Ignorant, and the Outcast of their respective Districts in London and the Suburbs. Regular house-to-house visitation and general parochial assistance is thus provided in poor and populous localities, and with most blessed and encouraging results. The Committee specially appeal for New Annual Subscriptions, and also for Donations and Collections, to maintain and extend this most necessary Religious and Social work among the masses.

HOMES OF HOPE,
4, 5, and 6, Regent-square, Gray's Inn-road, London, W.C.

This Society was established in 1860 for the reception of the less degraded class of penitent young women. Young women are admitted on any day, and coming from any quarter whatsoever, if there be room and funds. Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied. A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women before they become mothers, as are unfitted from their previous good character and position to mix with others. The applications for admission are painfully urgent. Funds are greatly needed.

THE CHARACTERISTICS OF ODO-MAGNETISM.

Every scientist knows the sensation felt in the nervous system from certain forms of Electricity. Every living animal experiences sensations produced by the positive and negative state of the atmosphere. The braced-up condition of the nerves in a dry or frosty mountain air may be constantly experienced as a permanent effect of Odo-Magnetic influence. When applied to the body it is constantly in action or perpetual operation. An influence for good, as natural as the air we breathe, is superadded for the invalid's advantage, surrounding him, as it were, by a vitalising Magnetic atmosphere. Magnetism, like all the forces of Nature, is subject to interruptions in the freedom of its flow and to inequality in its distribution, not only during thunderstorms, but also during the prevalence of epidemics. Now the essential characteristics of Odo-Magnetic influence, as Nature and Art have enabled us to apply it, are its penetrating and permeating qualities, and the unabating regularity in its lines of force, which are so equally distributed and well balanced in their operation as to induce a uniform flow of health in the living organism amidst surrounding disturbances. It may be applied with no more inconvenience than the wearing of an ordinary garment, and is often as effectual as the most radical change of climate or condition of health which could be devised for an invalid.

"May 1, 1884.

"It is now five months since I adopted your treatment for neuralgia in the side, and I am glad to say that at the end of a month I was relieved of all acute pain, and at the end of four months all pain was quite gone. I now have more energy, and can go about my duties with pleasure and comfort. A lady who saw me recently, after an absence of over a year, remarked that I was not like the same person, I looked younger and brighter, and went about with such a quick step that she was quite astonished at the change; and, indeed, I am a different person. After three years of such suffering, to be so well seems marvellous, and almost too good to be true. Recently I undertook a journey, during which I was riding in the train eight hours, and I did not feel the slightest pain, although, when I came to you, I could scarcely bear the motion of the train for the short distance I had to come. As I have tried no other remedy since adopting the Magnetic treatment, I am convinced that it is this alone that has helped me, and I can never sufficiently express my thankfulness to you."

THE WAY TO THE CITY.

By Mrs. E. J. CARR.

The gifted authoress of this charming little volume is no longer with us, but by it, in a literal way, she "being dead, yet speaketh." The book is a spiritual gem, and cannot fail to be highly prized by its readers. The style is pictorial, the doctrine sound, and the aim Christ exalting. Travellers to the Celestial City will find in it waymarks they will do well to carefully consider and closely follow. It is a book calculated to wean from the world, draw to Christ, and induce prayerful preparation and eager desire for his coming. We welcome its publication, and speak heartily and warmly in its praise.—The Christian.

THE LATE CHARLES READE.

AN ACCOUNT OF HIS CONVERSION.

By Rev. CHARLES GRAHAM,
Minister of Avenue-road Church, Shepherd's Bush.

The reader will find in this brief narrative the record of the conversion of Mr. Charles Reade, with the notice of his Christian character growing out of that conversion. This account the writer thinks to be due to the memory of his friend, but more especially to the cause of Christ and to his people, in particular to those of them who, verbally or by letter, make inquiries of him on the subject. And he is not without hope that this short history will lead some of the many friends of Mr. Reade who may be still in the world to seek for themselves that Saviour whom he found to be his refuge and consolation in the day of his trouble. For all his friends, and for all mankind, this was the earnest desire of his heart.

MR. CHARLES READE was born in 1814; was educated in Magdalen College, Oxford; took his degree, with honours, in 1835, and became fellow of his college. In 1843 he was called to the bar in Lincoln's Inn, but never followed his profession as a barrister. He devoted himself to literature, and by his numerous novels and his dramas was widely known in this country and America as a man of decided and original genius.

Mr. Reade was by nature a philanthropist. He sympathised with all known sorrow and suffering, and in his writings aimed at the correction of those abuses which he regarded as their cause. He considered our drink traffic and drinking customs as a gigantic evil and a peril to our nation, and sought, by his well-known and exceedingly popular drama "Drink," to bring his fellow countrymen to share in his convictions. His charities, even before his conversion, might well put many Christians to shame. A fortune which fell into his hands about six years ago he gave entirely away, dividing it between Christian institutions and the poor. But when the light of the Divine holiness shone into his heart he saw that, however his works and charities might have benefitted man, he had never done a single action simply and solely to please God.

Early in December, 1877, Mr. Charles Reade came with his brother to a Sunday morning service in Avenue-road Church, where it was my privilege to minister. On the following Sunday morning he was also there, and after the service asked for a personal interview, in which he frankly and fully opened his mind in relation to his spiritual state. Throughout the month these interviews were repeated several times each week. He had then deep conviction of his state as a sinner condemned by the righteous law of God. Determining that his "faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God," I read with him the Holy Scriptures. The substitutionary work of Christ as seen in the burnt-offering accepted for the offerer (Lev. i. 4); God by his ambassadors beseeching men to be reconciled to Him (2 Cor. v. 20); and God made a liar by our refusing to believe His testimony that He has given to us eternal life in his Son (1 John v. 10, 11): these with similar scriptures gave him a foundation on which he felt he could securely stand. He saw that the penalty of his sin had been borne by his Substitute, and that though God could not accept him as a sinner, He could accept Christ for him, and pardon and accept him for Christ's sake. So convinced was he of his acceptance that he told me he believed whenever God took him from earth it would be to his own blessed presence.

In his confession of Christ, at this period, Mr. Reade was bold and decided. At his house in Albert-gate, I met, at his own request, persons in whose spiritual state he felt a deep interest, that I might explain to them the way of salvation. For the same purpose I many times visited, at his request, his brother, the late Mr. William Barrington Reade. He himself, both by letter and personal intercourse, became a preacher of the Gospel. He commenced to visit and relieve the poor, and though he soon discovered that he had not strength for the visiting, the relieving he never discontinued. In this ministry he was careful that his left hand should not know what his right hand did.

Mr. Reade's attendance on the Sunday morning services in Avenue-road Church was only interrupted by illness, or an occasional brief absence from home. On what he heard he meditated, and on each Sunday afternoon his rule was to spend an hour with me for conversation, the subject often being what he had heard in the morning, or what he had been reading in his Bible.

In Mr. Reade the critical and logical faculties were strongly developed. Knowing this, and knowing also his long study and deep knowledge of men, I pressed him to write on some of the leading characters of Scripture. This, among other reasons, he desired to do, that he might leave something behind him in defence of the truth. He was a great admirer of Nehemiah, and finished a careful sketch of his character. On his principle of "Prepare thy work without, and make it fit for thyself in the field, and afterward build thy house," he spent much time on the study of David and Paul, but, alas! had not the time to commit those studies to writing. The character of Jonah, which he seemed to consider to be as useful for warning as for example, he finished at Cannes. This, with Nehemiah, will I hope yet be published.

For the recent persecutions of the Jews Mr. Reade felt both shame and sorrow, and in a well-known letter in The Daily Telegraph gave expression to his pained sympathies, and his strong conviction, based on the prophetic Scriptures, of the Jews' return at no distant day to their own land. On this subject we often conversed and read the Scriptures together, and rejoiced that as the righteousness of God was so awfully manifested in their punishment, his grace, in the sight of all the nations, will be still more magnified in their restoration to their inheritance and their great temporal prosperity and spiritual blessing under the covenant of grace.

Early in 1880 Mr. Reade asked my advice in relation to his connection with the theatre. My reply was that he had now found a new Master, from whom it was both his privilege and duty to seek guidance. Soon after, he said to me, "I have now cut off the right hand and cast it from me: I am done with the theatre." But here it is only right to say that in the meshes of that evil net he allowed himself to be again entangled.

Of his sin in this entanglement my valued friend soon became convinced. Confined to his room by one of his severe bronchial attacks, I called on him, when immediately he said to me, "I have backslidden from God; I have returned to the world. Is there mercy for me?" I pointed him to the examples of David and Peter; and among other scriptures I quoted for him the words of 1 John ii. 1, 2, the words with which he concludes his own epitaph: "If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the Righteous; and He is the propitiation for our sins." That propitiation I reminded him is ever under the eye of God, and is the ground of his pleading, whom the Father heareth always. To this Advocate he returned, and on this propitiation his soul again rested.

After Mr. Reade's return from Cannes, his short stay on earth was spent chiefly in prayer. I saw him several times, and in one of my last visits we prayed together that God might graciously mitigate his severe suffering. The suffering after this was mitigated. To his niece, who nursed him with tender care and affection, he expressed himself as comforted by the promises I had quoted to him in one of my final visits, and asked her to keep me longer near him. His last audible words to me were: "I have no hope but in God. God only can create; and God only can re-create."

It is one of my joyful anticipations by-and-by to realise what my late honoured and esteemed friend said to me after his conversion, that in another and perfect state we would together examine those stellar worlds in which the great Creator has revealed so much of his glory. But, above all, my hope is that we may together search and enter into the depths of that love which passeth knowledge, and for ever admire and adore together that Blessed One, "who washed us from our sins in his own blood, and made us kings and priests unto God and his Father" (Rev. i. 5, 6).

I subjoin his epitaph, written by himself:—

Here Lie, by the Side of his Beloved Friend, the Mortal Remains of

CHARLES READE,

DRAMATIST, NOVELIST, AND JOURNALIST.

HIS LAST WORDS TO MANKIND ARE ON THIS STONE.

I hope for a resurrection, not from any power in nature, but from the will of the Lord God Omnipotent, who made nature and me. He created man out of nothing; which nature could not. He can restore man from the dust, which nature cannot.

And I hope for holiness and happiness in a future life, not for anything I have said or done in this body, but from the merits and mediation of Jesus Christ.

He has promised his intercession to all who seek it, and He will not break his word: that intercession, once granted, cannot be rejected: for He is God, and his merits infinite: a man's sins are but human and finite.

"Him that cometh to Me, I will in no wise cast out." "If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the Righteous; and He is the propitiation for our sins."

[This memorial, with portrait, will be published in a separate form in a few days.]

Gospel Effort in Pontymoil.

THE inhabitants of this locality are chiefly iron and steel workers, colliers, brick-makers, factory girls, &c, many of whom lived regardless of God, spending their Sabbath in drunkenness, idleness, and sin. The children, too, were uncared for and allowed to run about the roads and lanes shoeless and almost naked. To this neighbourhood the Lord (in 1878) directed Mr. T. M. WINTLE to employment as foreman at the iron works. On every hand he saw the district lying in the depths of sin and ignorance, without concern for their salvation. The population was 4000, with one church and two chapels accommodating only 1000 persons. By cottage-meetings for adults and children's services he reached the hearts of numbers, and many of the children are now growing up sober and industrious workmen.

The whole neighbourhood is entirely changed, and the cottage rooms have been superseded by an iron hall. Rescue work has also been carried on amongst young women with great success, and many lads have been entrusted to different London Homes. It is now proposed to employ a colporteur for the surrounding villages to counteract the pernicious literature which still abounds in many homes.

WHAT IS THE GOSPEL?—7.

By Mr. GEORGE F. TRENCH.

IN the Gospel according to John the Father is plainly revealed by the Son "the Word of God," full of love to the world, and to his children.

The eternal Son, creator of all things, is revealed in the flesh, full of grace and truth, giving his life as Lamb of God for the salvation of men, without respect of nations; the light, the way, the truth, the life, of all who believe.

The Spirit is revealed as about to be sent by the Father and the Son, to convict, quicken, indwell, teach, comfort, and empower for worship and ministry.

Men, on the other hand, are exposed as helpless, blind, sinful, false, murderous, Satanic, and, in spite of all their religiousness, bitterly hostile to God. Yet the Gospel tells that now by faith in the uplifted Son of Man, being born anew, they may escape from judgment, receive everlasting life and sonship, and in oneness with Christ share his service and sufferings here, and at his coming (as "the resurrection" of the sleeping saints and "the life" of the living) behold his divine, and inherit his human glory. For this He keeps them safe in faithful love.

Henceforth the condemnation of the world is in its rejection of Christ, while all the fruit of life in believers is dependent on love for and fellowship with Him.

The Gospel in John unites the narrative of our Lord's life, death, and resurrection, with the germs of the doctrine of the Gospel, fully unfolded in the Epistles.

The Gospel in the Acts of the Apostles, is the preaching of Jesus Christ by them and others, in the power of the Holy Ghost now present upon and in them.

It has a twofold character and sphere. First to Israel, Jesus is presented as the Christ, crucified by that nation, but risen from the dead, by whom they may, through repentance and faith in his name, receive justification from all things from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses, the gift of the Holy Ghost, sanctification, and at Christ's coming the long promised Kingdom, with the restitution of all the position and power forfeited by their unbelief.

Secondly, the glad tidings are proclaimed to the Gentiles, Israel having rejected them, that of every nation without distinction, whosoever believeth on Him shall receive, through Christ's death and resurrection, the salvation of God, remission of sins, eternal life and the Holy Ghost.

This Gospel is carried far and wide by witnesses who are ready to suffer persecution, peril, imprisonment, scourging, and death for Christ's sake, undaunted and unmoved. Those who receive it confess his name by baptism, and commemorate his death in the breaking of bread, and are united, as the Church of God, in fellowship one with another.

The Gospel in the Revelation of John is the prophecy of the joys and honours in glory, which await those who have been washed from their sins in the blood of the Lamb, answered by the praises of the redeemed, to Him who loved them unto death.

Mainly devoted to warnings of the judgment about to fall on Christendom, preparatory to the coming of the Lord in his Kingdom, and upon the wicked and unbelieving thereafter, the book throughout looks back to the death and resurrection of Christ (the little Lamb as it had been slain), as his title to the kingdom and universal dominion, and ours to a salvation whose characteristics are active service in eternal joy, as kings and priests before the throne of God and the Lamb, with the final abolition of death, sorrow, sickness, pain, and tears.

The latest words of this latest book of God are the Lord's promise of his speedy coming, coupled with the invitation to everyone who is athirst to come and take freely the water of everlasting life.

HOLINESS AND FAITH HEALING.

REFERRING to the letter of Dr. Woods Smyth, and to our note thereon (April 24), Miss Mason, of the Kilburn House of Rest, writes:—

"Although I was only present twice at the Holiness Meetings, and on neither of those occasions was the subject of the 'root principle of sin' mentioned, still I ask to be allowed to decline being included amongst those of whose views Dr. Woods Smyth seems to be the exponent. The truth respecting deliverance from the dominion of sin does not run either in the line indicated by your own comment or that of your correspondent.

[We have not space for the exposition of Miss Mason's own views, which follows here.]

"I feel much more disposed to weep over the miserable contentions about this question amongst the Lord's people, and the constant pleadings 'for Baal' that one sees and hears everywhere. One would suppose that holiness was the thing to be dreaded, and not sin. For one voice raised against sin with any definite meaning, there are at least a hundred warnings trumpeted forth against some fancied 'unsoundness' on the subject of holiness."

We are constrained to remark that we do not plead for Baal, nor do we regard holiness as a thing to be dreaded. But we plead for a true interpretation of Scripture and for holiness as it is set forth in the Scriptures of truth. We are not against the shining of the sun, but we are against following an ignis fatuus—a Will-o'-the-wisp, which rises from the marsh and leads thither. Our friend adds:—

"In conclusion, I should like to say that I think your caution on the subject of "Faith-healing," so-called, is well-timed. I have no doubt whatsoever but that the Lord is quite as able and willing to heal the body now as when He was upon the earth. But granting that even all the cases of healing recorded are genuine, does anyone seriously see any connection between them and the miracles of our Lord and his Apostles? Is the healing of a few functional disorders to be understood as the 'greater works' which were to be accomplished by the baptism of the Holy Ghost? It seems to be forgotten that the body is part of the old creation, and still subject to its laws, and will so continue until 'the creation itself hath deliverance from the bondage of corruption.' But the 'inner man is already created anew in Christ Jesus,' and partakes of that which is divine (2 Peter i. 4). Our dear friends will pardon me for saying that in trying to promote 'holiness' by parallels on these lines, they are defeating their own ends."

Dr. Woods Smyth concludes a discussion of the subject, for which we have not space, by saying of 1 John i. 8: "This is not an independent scripture, but is linked with the succeeding words, which show that it really relates to an unforgiven and uncleansed person." C. D. writes to the same effect, and Admiral Fishbourne is reported to have said in reply to a question at an after-meeting in Dublin last week, "That verse does not apply to Christians." If these views of holiness require, as they do, such an inverted exposition of Scripture as this, then we think they are sufficiently self-condemned.

J. S. writes of healing as one of the gifts of the Spirit. C. D. speaks of having been cleansed from indwelling sin a month ago. Name and address are given, but we think it better that this valuable Christian worker should take more time to come to a mature judgment before we commit her to these views by publishing her name.

J. W. L., a young inquirer, is anxious to know the truth. We affectionately recommend him to study what the Scripture teaches as to the two natures in the believer.

S. B. S. dwells upon the happy experience of hearing and knowing the Shepherd's voice; also the importance of apprehending Christ as our Life, "the revelation of which great mystery by the Holy Ghost preserves us from the foolish and dangerous doctrines abroad on perfection in the flesh."

"A Suffering Sister" says:—

"When Christians pray for increase of holiness in heart and life, God often grants their request by personal or relative suffering, and thereby they enter into 'the fellowship' of their Divine Redeemer's 'sufferings.' A very tender sympathy with suffering in others is generally the result of this; and I am grieved to say this feature is not always discernible in the Christians who frequent 'Holiness meetings' or 'Faith Healing' meetings! While we desire to 'rejoice' wherever 'Christ is preached,' and much spiritual blessing realised anywhere and everywhere, it does increasingly force itself upon my most thoughtful and prayerful judgment, that these dear people have not 'attained,' and are not 'already perfect'; but that we all 'now' know only in part."

D. C. asks: (1) Can a child of God be a saint and a sinner at the same time? (2) Does the Scripture anywhere say that there are sinners in heaven, or that there are sinners going there?

Paul virtually answers both these questions when he says, at the end of his life: "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief." "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

E. G. has had for fifteen years such unbounded confidence in healing by faith that it was a constant trial never to have come in contact with anyone like-minded:—

"At length I met with one of the principal leaders of this movement, and entered into a long correspondence, of which the tone was this: That my unbelief was the sole reason I was not healed. . . . I am convinced that some of the Faith-healing teachers lack that humility which all followers of the lowly Jesus need, and . . . shall be thankful if these remarks should prove a comfort to any child of his who, like myself, is one of the failures not reported."

A. H. F. has written to Dr. Woods Smyth quoting Rom. viii. 13, to show that we are to mortify the deeds of the body, proving that the root principle of sin is there. He directs attention to the cleansing by the Word as well as by the blood, and to the difference between them. And he believes in healing by faith, having himself been so healed.

R. T. speaks of the very im-"perfect soundness" of the so-called healed ones. Her observations during some days at a faith-healing establishment led her to conclude "that the really bad cases, i.e., real cases independent of any mere nervous malady, did not get healed. And I have been with dear Mrs. ——— (a leader), when she has had most splitting headaches, long after having been completely healed. But the serious part of the whole case is the doctrine taught, connecting by an indissoluble link all sickness with some sin allowed and clung to; and the teaching that Satan is only and always the author of sickness of all sorts."

A minister of Christ has in preparation for us a series of brief papers on this subject, which we believe will be well considered, scriptural, and impartial; and which, while showing that God does heal in answer to believing prayer, guards against such errors and extravagances as have been noted in some of the above correspondence.

PUT YOURSELF IN THEIR PLACE.

By Mr. D. L. MOODY.

IN this great city are there not hundreds and thousands who are in some need of human sympathy? That will speak to their hearts a good deal louder than eloquent sermons. This lost world is not going to be reached by eloquent sermons, so much as by tenderness and gentleness and sympathy.

Some of you may say: How am I to get into sympathy with those who are in sorrow? That is a very important question. Many people go to work for God, but they seem to do it in such a professional way. I will tell you how you can be brought into sympathy I have found this rule to be a great help to me: Put yourself in the place of the sorrowing and afflicted ones with whom you want to sympathise. If you do that you will soon gain their affections and be able to help them.

God taught me a lesson a few years ago that I shall never forget. I was superintendent of a Sunday-school in Chicago, with over 1,500 scholars. In the months of July and August many deaths took place among the children, and as most of the ministers were out of the city, I had to attend a great many funerals. Sometimes I had to be at four or five in one day. I was so accustomed to it that I got to do it almost mechanically. I could see the mother take her last look at the child and see the coffin-lid closed without being moved by it.

One day on going home my wife told me that one of the Sunday-school children had been drowned and the mother wanted to see me. When I got there I found the father in the room drunk. The mother told me that she took in washing in order to get a living for herself and her children, as her husband drank up all his wages. Little Adelaide used to go to the river and gather the floating wood for the fire. That day she had gone as usual; she saw a piece of wood out a little way from the bank; in stretching out to reach it she slipped and fell into the water, and was drowned. The mother told me her sad story; how she had no money to buy the shroud and the coffin, and she wanted me to help her. I took out my note-book and put down her name and address, and took the measure of the coffin in order to send it to the undertakers.

The poor mother was very much distressed, but it did not seem to move me. I told her I would be at the funeral, and then I left. As my little girl walked by my side she said to me: "Papa, suppose we were very poor, and mamma had to wash for a living, and I had to go to the river to get sticks to make a fire; if I were to fall into the water and get drowned, would you feel bad?" "Feel bad! Why, my child, I do not know what I should do. You are my only daughter, and if you were taken from me I think it would break my heart." And I took her to my bosom and kissed her. "Then did you feel bad for that mother?" How that question cut me to the heart!

I went back to the house, and took out my Bible, and read to the mother the fourteenth chapter of John. Then I prayed with her, and endeavoured to comfort her. When the day for the funeral arrived I attended it. I had not been to the cemetery for a good many years; I had thought my time was too precious, as it was some miles away. The father came to the funeral, but he was still drunk. I had got a lot in the strangers' field for little Adelaide. As we were laying the coffin in the grave another funeral procession came up, and the corpse was going to be laid near by. Adelaide's mother said, as we were covering up the coffin, "Mr. Moody, it is very hard to lay her away among strangers. I have been moving about a good deal, and have lived among strangers, and I have never had a burying lot. It is very hard to place my firstborn among strangers." I said to myself that it would be pretty hard to have to bury my child in the strangers' field. I had got into full sympathy with the poor mother by this time.

Next Sabbath I told the children in the Sunday-school what had taken place. I suggested that we should buy a Sunday-school lot, and when any of the poor children attending the school died, they would not be laid in the strangers' field, but would be put in our own lot. Before we could get the title made out, a mother came and wanted to know if her little girl who had just died could be buried in the lot. I told her I would give permission. I went to the funeral, and as we were lowering the little coffin I asked what was the name. She said it was Emma. That was the name of my own little girl, and I could not help but weep as I thought of how I would feel if it was my own Emma. Do you tell me I could not sympathise with that bereaved mother?

Very soon afterward another mother came and wished to have her dead child buried in our lot. She told me his name was Willie. At that time that was the name of my only boy, and I thought how it would be with me if it were my Willie that was dead. So the two first children buried there bore the names of my two children. I tried to put myself in the places of these sorrowing mothers, and then it was easy for me to sympathise with them.

About the first thing I did when I returned to Chicago nine years ago was to drive up and see our children's lot. I thought it would last a good many years, but it was about full. Many little ones are laid there waiting for the resurrection, and I would like to be buried close beside them.

If you would get into full sympathy with others, you must put yourself in their place. May God fill our hearts with the spirit of the Good Samaritan, so that we may be filled with tenderness and love and compassion. I want to give you a motto that has been a great help to me. It was a Quaker's motto:—

"I expect to pass through this world but once. If, therefore, there be any kindness I can show or any good thing I can do to any fellow human being, let me do it now: let me not defer or neglect it, for I shall not pass this way again."

SOCIAL GATHERINGS OF YOUNG WOMEN.—Another of these gatherings in connection with the Y.W.C.A. has been held for young women employed in railway and other refreshment rooms, fifty-five responding to the invitation of Rev. Howard Wright, in Bayswater. Gospel addresses were given, and several ladies rendered vocal and instrumental music. Ladies willing to help in this desirable work, either by lending their drawing-rooms or in any other way, are invited to communicate with Miss Gough, 5, Theberton-street, Islington, N.

VILLAGE WORK IN HAMPSHIRE.—For some months Rev. James Thompson has, in addition to his usual work as a Congregational minister, organised a preaching circuit in the four hamlets of Ashton, Dean, Dundridge, and Whitehouse-hill, where there are no other services held. The purely unsectarian character of the work is shown by the fact that his helpers include members of the Baptist, Brethren, and Methodist persuasions, who in turn undertake meetings in the various localities every week. Friends willing to help, either personally or financially, will be welcomed by Mr. Thompson at Bishop's Waltham, Hants.

Lepers' Home at Jerusalem.

"OUR work among lepers is not one that shines by its success. However, we can speak of some fruit, all the more precious that it has been reaped after many tears. Take, for instance, one poor patient, named Fatmé, who has long suffered from a large and deep wound, while her hands and face, and particularly her feet, are pitiably deformed by fearful swellings. She keeps her eyes fixed by faith on Jesus, the Man of Sorrows, who gives her strength to bear her great trial. 'Nothing,' she says, 'happens to me without his will. I believe in Him, I thank Him for all his blessings, and am sure that a happy life above will succeed my miseries here.'

"Another patien tbeing asked if he was ready to go to Christ, replied, 'Yes, by God's grace I am, and I hope He will receive me in his kingdom.' This man had ripened for heaven, and learned to pray, in the midst of great sufferings, and calmly met death, which ended fifteen years' of leprosy. You can understand how such experiences encourage us. Amid all our anxiety, we find a recompense in the hope that some of our patients attain the prize of the heavenly calling. This seems the most difficult of all the labours of Christian philanthropy in Jerusalem, but also one of the most beautiful. What a blessing to tell of a Saviour to these miserable cripples whom men repel, and with whom few of the churches will occupy themselves!"

The above is part of a letter received by Rev. J. La Trobe, Victoria-square, Cotham, Bristol, who receives contributions for the Home.

Notes from Stornoway.

DEAR SIR,—It is not often that any accounts reach you of work done in this distant part of the Highlands. A few notes might not be unwelcome.

We had a visit from Rev. J. M'Carthy, of the China Inland Mission, who addressed thirteen different meetings during his short stay of four days. He spoke in the four Presbyterian Churches in Stornoway, and gave very interesting and stirring accounts of the vast spiritual needs of China; of the rise and progress of the Inland Mission; and of his own journey of 3000 miles across the country from Shanghai to Burmah. Mr. M'Carthy also addressed large Gaelic meetings at Back and Garrabout, through an interpreter. One result of all these meetings is evident, and that is the place given to China's conversion to God in the prayers of the Sabbath services and the week-day prayer-meetings.

We have with us at present Rev. G. Campbell, the evangelist of the Free Church General Assembly, who is holding a series of evening evangelistic services in the Free (English) Church. In this work he is most enthusiastically supported by Rev. D. J. Martin, minister of that church. Mr. Martin addresses open-air meetings of the fishermen, of whom about 1500 have already arrived from Morayshire and Aberdeenshire, to prosecute the herring fishing here, and Mr. Campbell afterwards addresses the general meetings in the church.

A large number of young women from Newcastle, Yarmouth, and Lowestoft come here every year to work at the kippering of herring. A meeting-house has just been completed at considerable expense and trouble, and two lady workers from Glasgow are expected to arrive in a few days to help in visiting and reading to them and getting them to come to the services. There is a coffee-room and a reading-room in the new meeting-house. One or two Christian ladies here work unwearedly every season among these strangers, and the Home Mission Committee of the Free Church send the two lady workers from Glasgow. Mrs. D. Smith, Francis-street, Stornoway, would gladly receive contributions towards the expense of the meeting-house erected.

One very sad result of the influx of so large a number of careless and wild women is that they are fast initiating into their habits many of the formerly well-disposed and very respectable young women of the place: and we are beginning to feel that when they get careless it is one of the most direful calamities that can befel any community.—Your faithfully,

NORMAN C. MACFARLANE.

THE REVIVAL IN LONDON.

The Kensington Mission.

THE Mission at Addison-road has so far led to important and blessed results, although a great part of the fruit has yet to be gathered in. I have had brought under my own knowledge some interesting cases of blessing received during these meetings. I think it will be found that many of the inquirers were persons already belonging to some Christian congregation in whom a most gratifying change has taken place. Some who were unmoved by faithful preaching, or were so shy and reticent that they avoided close contact and personal dealing, have become entirely different and are ready at once to speak of their own hopes, fears, and difficulties. Some say they are earnestly seeking Christ; others boldly declare that they have found Him and rejoice in his love.

The blessing has not been confined to the inquiry-room. A week ago I met a man who had been brought back from years of wandering by these services, and is now rejoicing in Christ. Yesterday I met him again, and he holds on with the same hope, but he had never been into the inquiry-room, nor had he spoken to anyone at the hall about his personal experience. There may be many such.

The great thing seems to be to follow up the work and gather in the converts to the churches. It is only there that we can hope the beginnings made will grow into mature Christian life and experience. William Page.

Hammersmith, W.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey at Hampstead.

The correspondent of The Record sends to that journal a full and interesting account of the week at Fleet-road, in the course of which he says:—

"We have learned much from Mr. Moody's method of working in the inquiry-room. It is very different from what is commonly supposed, and careful precautions have been taken, at least in this Hampstead Mission, to guard against incompetence in the workers and crudeness or shallowness in the work. Some time beforehand the ministers of the several congregations in sympathy with the effort were requested to recommend for the inquiry-room only those of matured experience, whom they judged to be skilled in dealing with souls; in the interval many faithful exhortations were given from the pulpit and in private as to the nature and importance of the work. Some of the most effective inquiry-room workers here have been godly men of the working-classes. One evening I was working next to a railway goods guard, and I never shall forget the earnest way in which he pleaded with a young inquirer of apparently his own station in life, and the skilful manner in which he turned from place to place in his Bible.

"We in Hampstead look for a large permanent blessing as the result of this endeavour. Mr. Moody has succeeded in disarming the prejudices of many who were by no means prepared to welcome him. His work, and that of his colleague, Mr. Sankey, has sent many to the throne of grace, either as converts accepting salvation, or as believers strengthened in their spiritual life. Soon the evangelists will have gone, and the result of their work will be, we are confident, a large addition both to the Church and to the churches: for Messrs. Moody and Sankey distinguish carefully between the respective functions of evangelist and pastor, and their aim is to hand over, when they leave, the care of their converts to the appointed ministers of the place.

"And now, what is the secret of this good man's wonderful power? Of this we are certain: it admits of no human explanation. Judged by ordinary standards, his discourses and their delivery are in no way calculated to produce the effects we see; but if one who has been present frequently may be permitted to express his deep conviction on the subject, the secret of power is to be found in the honour which God has put upon simple men who are absorbed in a genuine yearning for souls; and who make it their study to present the Gospel of Christ to the needs of their fellow-men with a directness, a fervour, and a reality with which no fear of man and no love of self are permitted for a moment to interfere."

Much could be told about the past week's work at Fleet-road Hall, though it would not differ greatly in essence from what has so frequently been written about "these wondrous gatherings day by day." As the Mission has drawn near its close the public interest has manifestly deepened, and the great crowds have overflowed the iron tabernacle into the adjoining chapel. There have been the same tearful, anxious throngs of seekers in the inquiry-room as the result of the Gospel messages. One evening last week Mr. Moody varied the usual procedure in the after-meeting, by putting Dr. Sinclair Paterson on the stand and extracting answers to questions on the way of life, and how to find it.

The Hampstead Mizpah Band was duly formed at a deeply interesting gathering on Saturday evening, when additional testimonies were given to the constraining power of God's grace in preserving from the tyranny of the drink demon.

The Saturday afternoon Children's Services have, as usual, been conducted under the auspices of the Children's Special Service Mission. Messrs. Jordan, J. Kennedy, and Arrowsmith took the meetings on April 19, 26, and May 3, respectively. The attendances were very large, and the interest very manifest on each occasion. The after-meetings have given many opportunities for close work with the children, and there have been several very encouraging instances of decision for Christ.

On Sunday the Hall was the centre of a busy and ever-changing scene "from early morn till dewy eve." To the workers at 8 o'clock Mr. Moody spoke with much unction and pathos on "Love as a motive power for work." Mr. Sankey's solos were in accord with the theme of the sermon, and lacked nothing of their accustomed power to move the hearts of the multitude. At the afternoon service the throng of women was so great that Mr. Moody issued a somewhat unusual but perfectly justifiable ukase, that every member of the male species (excepting, of course, his colleague and himself) should "clear out," and make way for the gentler sex. Many of the banished ones found their way to the Wesleyan Chapel, where Mr. Scroggie exhorted the workers. Mr. Scroggie remains at Hampstead this week, and conducts services in the Presbyterian Church, High-street. About the middle of this month he proceeds to Newcastle to inaugurate a series of special evangelistic efforts in that city.

By the time these lines are read Fleet-road Hall will be dismantled, and the evangelists will be in full swing of work at Croydon; but the fruits and memories of their visit to Hampstead will be found many days hence.

Messrs Pentecost and Stebbins.

We have received the subjoined letter from an influential Christian teacher and worker in the West-end:—

In common with very many interested in the work of God in the West-end, I appeal to you to urge the claims of this part of London to a visit from Dr. Pentecost, of Brooklyn. Among the tens of thousands who have heard Mr. Moody, there are hundreds who have been thoroughly stirred, but are now relapsing into carelessness or sin, and many such might yet be won by a further effort on the same lines. I myself have met with one and another such as I describe, since the Kensington Mission closed—persons who never entered the inquiry-room, and are not attending any Gospel ministry.

To such Dr. Pentecost's ministry would be specially suitable, and I should look for great blessing, too, upon Christian workers and Christians generally. "Of all the evangelists, we would specially commend Dr. Pentecost to the attention of our ministers." I quote from page 11 of The Christian of this week; and I heartily endorse the words, not because he is, as your correspondent says himself, "a full-fledged minister, the pastor of a flourishing church in Brooklyn," but as a grateful acknowledgment of help received through his preaching by one who has been teaching others for years by voice and pen.—Yours faithfully,

May 2. A Fellow-Labourer.

[Our correspondent will see, from announcements elsewhere, that Messrs, Pentecost and Stebbins move from Mildmay to Belgravia on Sunday next.]

THE MILDMAY MISSION.

The third week of this deeply interesting and much blessed Mission is over. Our hearts are filled with thankfulness as we look back upon these three weeks, during the short space of which so many who were in darkness are now rejoicing in the light of the Lord. There has been no sign of abated interest during the week which has just closed; and so it has been decided to continue the meetings for yet another week—till Friday, the 9th inst.—Bible-readings at eleven (except Monday) and Gospel meetings at eight each evening.

How truly the morning Bible-readings have been appreciated is manifest from the number of people who have assembled each day. The attendance each day, we think, has seldom been much less than 1000, and on one or two occasions must have exceeded that number. On Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of this week, Dr. Pentecost has been taking the earlier chapters of Exodus—the book of Redemption—drawing out wonderful and beautiful lessons from them of the Great Redemption which is in Christ Jesus. The Reading on Pharaoh's Compromises was one of the most interesting and practical addresses we have ever listened to; but really the same might be said of nearly every one.

On Friday Dr. Pentecost took by request the subject of "Assurance of Salvation." In introducing it he said that this subject had so often been spoken of that it seemed as if there could be little more to say on it; there were always plenty of sticks under a good apple tree, not many under a tree of sour crabs. Certainly Dr. Pentecost brought down some beautiful apples; they came showering down upon us that we felt almost bewildered.

At some of the morning meetings we have had both Mr. Sankey and Mr. Stebbins. This has added much to their interest. Mr. Stebbins' singing is very impressive. He has to a great extent that peculiar charm of Mr. Sankey's singing—a clear articulation—nearly every word being heard all over the hall. There is no attempt to "show off" his fine rich voice, but rather the desire to impress on his hearers the full meaning of the Gospel truths he is proclaiming in song.

Early in each meeting Dr. Pentecost has read out a number of requests for prayer, which have been sent in, some of them very touching; he has on several occasions given short answers to questions asked by letter. He has a singularly clear and candid way of answering difficulties. Indeed, nothing has more impressed us than the plain, straightforward manner in which he deals with every question he takes up.

We do not wonder that the evening meetings have been so well attended. On Sunday there was an overflow service, and grand gatherings each evening during the week, over 2000, except on Monday. Not only have the workers been diligent in trying to make the services widely known, but the addresses have been such as to bring people again and again. This week Dr. Pentecost has been taking "The Fools of Scripture," beginning with "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God." The address on Thursday evening on "Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die," was listened to by a large audience with rapt attention, and it seemed as if each one must be convinced by the powerful arguments adduced. Each address is characterised by clearness and definiteness of thought, abounding with telling, convincing illustrations. We have not heard one weak illustration from Dr. Pentecost's lips.

At the close of every service men and women have risen up in their places as a token that they accepted the proffered salvation, and desired an interest in the prayers of the congregation. These have generally adjourned to No. 6 room, which has been used as an inquiry-room, where they have had further conversation and prayer. We have been struck with the apparent reality of the cases we have spoken with. Some hundreds have professed to yield themselves to the Lord.

We have been thinking what are the chief characteristics of Dr. Pentecost's addresses. We should say first, his perfect naturalness. There is nothing conventional about him. There is confidence, too, in the message he is delivering, a confidence for which he is able to give a reason; and a fearlessness in speaking what he is convinced is the truth, though it may be contrary to the preconceptions of his hearers. There is eloquence without any attempt at eloquence, and with extreme simplicity and an almost conversational style, great aptness of expression. The Lord has done great things for us, whereof we are glad. T. S.

Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan.

The expectant feeling among the Church militant in Woolwich, that there was "blessing in the air," was abundantly justified by the result of the past week's services in the Rink Hall, conducted by Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan. The interest in the Mission steadily increased, so that the utmost capacity of the building was not sufficient, and overflow meetings were held in the nearest available building. In some degree to relieve the pressure at the evening meetings, Bible readings were held at 3 p.m., and at these Major Whittle had large gatherings to listen to his teaching, the subject being, "Union with Christ in death, in resurrection, and in glory." Through these meetings much spiritual refreshment was imparted to believers.

The work of soul-winning at the evening meetings went on from night to night. Conversion followed conviction, as the harvest the sowing of the seed. No address was given without being followed by the strangely solemn moments, when with head bowed in silent prayer the assembly waited, as it were, for the manifestation of the Spirit. Then, throughout the closely-packed audience, units in it asserted their individuality, and the power of God in their hearts, and gave the first visible sign of the new life by rising from their seats.

The testimony of the Christian workers, who were dotted all over the hall, was that the cases of conversion they met with were so bright, and the light broke in so sweetly and clearly, they had little to do but to join in thanksgiving with their newly-born sisters and brothers in the Lord. One worker was preparing to leave, thinking all who had waited behind had been spoken to, when a lady made the appeal, "Oh, are you not going to speak to me? I am seeking for salvation." The Saviour was again lifted up, and the seeker had but to "look and live." We hear of a workman in the arsenal whose leisure time was chiefly employed in betting upon the racecourse. Under God's blessing he was led to the Rink to hear the Gospel proclaimed by Major Whittle, and now he says he has made his last bet; he has found a new Master, and works for better wages.

The effect of the work comes home with stronger force when one personally knows something of converts. Twelve years ago we were introduced to a gentleman in the City who had an easy income of a thousand a year. But a life almost wholly devoted to the pleasures which town life affords brought disaster, and health and fortune were broken. And when he had spent all, and no man gave unto him, he was forced to hide himself away among the ne'er-do-weels of the great city, who live nobody knows how. The first step towards an improved life came with total abstinence and steady work, but reformation came with conversion, at these meetings. How we first learned of the good news was by seeing him bringing in others to hear the good news where he himself had found the blessing.

A very touching and solemn event occurred during the week, to some extent touching this Mission. A soldier who attended the meetings at the beginning of the week was taken ill, and went into the barrack sickroom. It was found that his case required special treatment, and he was ordered to the Herbert Hospital. The driver of the conveyance stopped on the way thither to see how the patient fared, when he discovered the poor man kneeling as in prayer, dead!

Sabbath was the closing day of the Mission, and very tender was the dealing with souls on that occasion. The afternoon meeting was reserved for women, and was so well attended that we had to be content to stand outside in a large crowd of eager listeners, round an open door. The blessing of God rested on the audience, and many in it yielded to the invitation of the Saviour, as it was sung and preached. The after-meeting was comprised of those who had received blessing during the Mission; words of encouragement and farewell were lovingly spoken by Mr. McGranahan.

The Thames Embankment Mission.

A most encouraging meeting of the Central Committee was held last Thursday in the hall of the City Mission House, to make arrangements for the meetings on the Thames Embankment, which are to begin on the 27th.

Mr. Hugh M. Matheson spoke with great thankfulness of the remarkable blessing which had been experienced hitherto, in the many hundreds who had been converted to God, and in the union and unanimity of those Christian brethren who had taken part in the various localities where the iron buildings had been erected. There had been a growing blessing, and they expected the Mission on the Embankment to be a great and mighty success. But it must be approached with much prayer and consecration, and remembering that the greatest blessing had invariably been given where the Christians were most united. The Central Committee were exceedingly happy in having obtained the services of Mr. Herbert Tritton and Mr. Edward Trotter, as hon. secretaries.

Mr. Tritton said this was a very great undertaking, and only to be accomplished by the largest amount of prayer, union, and help all round. Within a radius of a mile round the hall there was a population of 300,000 on the north side, and of 280,000 on the south side of the river. Many large establishments were included, such as the Post-office and Somerset House, the Royal Exchange, and the Banks, the railway-stations, printing and publishing establishments, &c., &c., all of which must be worked individually. He invited volunteers to undertake the visitation of all these places. The whole area had been divided into districts for this purpose. The co-operation and help of all clergymen and ministers was invited. A circular had been prepared asking them to supply the names and addresses of those persons who could assist as stewards, as workers in the inquiry-room, and in other ways.

A number of ministers representing the Church of England and the various Nonconformist denominations expressed their hearty interest and promised co-operation in every possible way. Suggestions and arrangements were made for local prayer-meetings. The claims and needs of all classes, rich and poor, merchants and bankers, barristers and solicitors, clerks and operatives, men and women, were earnestly pressed upon the attention of the committee of management. The representatives of several societies were present, and paticularly the Bible Society promised any number of portions of Scripture for which there might be occasion.

It is requested that the members of the various district choirs who have assisted at Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Mission services will meet for re-organisation and practice at Exeter Hall on Saturday, the 10th inst., at 4.30 p.m. The district choir tickets will admit to the hall on this occasion, and only those holding these tickets will be admitted. Mr. Sankey and Mr. Stebbins will (D.V.) meet the choirs, and it is hoped that there will be a large attendance. Any further information may be obtained from the Hon. Choir Secretary, Mr. H. A. Campbell, 3, Bridewell-place, New Bridge-street, E.C.

A Poetical Reminiscence

OF ONE OF MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY'S MISSIONS.

O blessed hours! so quickly pass'd
Beneath the Gospel's joyful sound;
Long will thy mem'ries live within
This heart, which long the Lord has found.

What joy to see the souls of men
Awakened from their sleep of sin,
By words wing'd by the Spirit's power
To search and probe the heart within.

To hear the message o'er and o'er
That "whosoever will may come,"
Proclaimed by lips divinely taught
To bring the wand'ring sinner home.

O peaceful, happy afternoons!
When the believers' souls were stirred
By loving counsels, faithful words,
That from the preacher's lips were heard.

The singer's voice, in tones so clear,
O how it thrilled my inmost soul!
How ev'ry sound was hush'd to hear
Words that could soften or control.

How often have I held my breath,
As those sweet notes would rise and fall,
And marked that many dropt a tear,
For solemn then were one and all.

Sweet, strangely sweet, would be his tones,
When singing of the home above;
But chiefly when the words would tell
Of meeting there with those we love.

O happy privilege to work
With these loved servants of the Lord!
Whether by song, or word, or both,
We labour on with one accord.

"With one accord." Ah! happy day,
When barriers all are broken down
That now divide the Church of God,
And all shall join our Lord to crown.

Rev. W. Haslam at Ryde.

THE Mission by Rev. W. Haslam, just concluded at St. James's, Ryde, has been productive of great spiritual good. There have been two services daily in the church, besides special meetings at the Town Hall, which were held by Mrs. Haslam.

The Mission as a whole has excited extraordinary interest, and the services have been very largely attended, more so, perhaps, than on any similar occasion. Mr. Haslam's discourses have been of the true "Mission" type, and were characterised by great plainness and earnestness. Some of his appeals were very solemn and striking, and produced a marked effect. On one occasion, at an "after" service, about fifty persons stood up as indicating a desire to be prayed for.

The meetings for women held in the Town Hall were evidently much valued. Large numbers assembled to hear the earnest and practical addresses given by Mrs. Haslam, and many testified of the blessing they had received. On Sunday every seat was occupied, there being from nine hundred to a thousand women present.

At the same time the church was crowded with children—one of the most interesting services of the Mission.

"QUIET RESTING-PLACES."

NO phrase that we can think of will better describe the two establishments at Kilburn and Eastbourne, over which Miss Charlotte Mason so wi-ely and successfully presides. It was a pleasure to be present at her annual meeting on the afternoon of Wednesday week, in Stafford Rooms, Edgware-road. It is a still greater pleasure to furnish our readers with some slight account of the proceedings. We wish the institution were even better known than it is, and had a more frequent share in the benefactions of the Christian public generally. There is not much about the work or about the methods of its overseers that commends itself to obtrusive publicity; but it is a work that grows in the esteem of those who know it.

In her very interesting opening statement, Miss Mason compared herself to Jehoshaphat, one of David's Court officials, who is described in 2 Samuel, viii. 16, as "recorder," and more fully in the margin as "remembrancer, or writer of chronicles." Her record concerned "the King's household." Those who shared in the benefits of the Houses of Rest are all messengers of God, going forth in his name to the lost multitudes, and seeking to win them back from the grasp of the usurper to a hearty allegiance to David's Son—the great King of kings. They are called "Christian workers." Their work takes varied shapes; it may be visiting the poor, nursing the sick, rescuing the fallen, nurturing the children, or evangelising those who are, as yet, aliens from the household of faith. Though the Houses are designed for women workers, occasionally a minister, or missionary and his wife are received, when the circumstances call for it. Many of the workers have small incomes; some are paid £1 a week, while others get only half that amount. When the strain of their work tells upon them, it is the privilege of the Houses of Rest to receive them for a time, and send them back to their posts invigorated by the change, and refreshed both in body and mind. In helping these workers at such crises, one is really furthering, in the best possible way, the carrying of the Gospel to the perishing masses of the population.

Miss Mason said that she was almost precluded from citing individual cases of those who had received help. She casually referred, however, to one, that of a young worker engaged in nursing the sick, who had become extremely exhausted, physically, by her arduous duties. She was an orphan, without friends and without a home, and she was so greatly helped by her stay that she asked if she might not look upon the House of Rest as her home, in the intervals between leaving one place and going to another. It was a great privilege to be able to say she might come at any rate for a little rest, and if a home was needed one would be found for her. Such cases were being constantly met with; of course those who were able to pay, or partly pay, the cost of their own sustenance gladly did so. During the year ending March 31, 623 workers had been received at both Houses; 233 at Kilburn, and 390 at Eastbourne.

Coming to the financial part of her "record," Miss Mason reported that the year's income from all sources, including £540 paid by the beneficiaires, was £1639, and the accounts showed a balance of about £13 on the right side. She went on the principle of regulating her expenditure strictly according to the income. If she had received £16,000 instead of £1600, she could have spent it all to advantage. Near the close of her statement, Miss Mason gave some very interesting details as to the noteworthy way with which the Lord from time to time supplied the pressing needs of the institution, in answer to the prayer of faith. There was also a little fund for providing some personal help to the workers, both for their own pressing necessities and for the temporary relief of any distressing cases of privation met with in their visitations. No sympathetic worker, she said, could go among the poor and see people starving without doing something to meet their sore need. It was also laid on her heart to do something towards helping to soothe the declining years of worn-out aged workers. She thought no one who had spent their strength in working for the Lord should be allowed to end their earthly days in the workhouse. This help she could only render, however, as kind friends were moved to furnish the means.

As one of the subsequent speakers well remarked, Miss Mason's full statement of the working of the Houses almost did away with the necessity of further advocacy. Nevertheless, the brief addresses from Rev. Newman Hall, Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Mr. A. Coote, Mr. T. A. Denny (Chairman), Admiral Fishbourne, and Mr. W. Haig Miller, each had a special value, and together formed a strong body of testimony at once to the need for and the excellence of the institution.

Miss Mason publishes a four-page sheet, entitled the House of Rest Monthly, which is sent post free from 8, Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn, N.W., for 1s. annually; it contains the latest information about the work, and also notes of her addresses at the weekly or monthly gatherings in the House of Rest.

Nine Elms Mission.

ON Tuesday week a conversazione was held at the Conference Hall of the Nine Elms Mission, Clapham-road. The programme included a Service of Song by seventy children from the Princess Mary Village Homes, Addlestone. There was also an exhibition of articles made by women discharged from prison.

The special object of the meeting was to give information relative to the various institutions connected with Mrs. Meredith's Mission work, comprising the Prison Mission, Village Homes, Missionary Institute, Medical Mission, and Christian Women's Union. Mrs. Meredith's address was one of much interest, and was delivered with much pathos. Many of the children in the Village Homes, she said, were the offspring of criminals, but not a few of them have been converted to God. Out of 500 who have been placed out, only two of them have gone wrong. Some have passed away, leaving a blessed testimony that they have gone to be with Jesus. Referring to endeavours now being made to improve the condition of the poor, Mrs. Meredith feared that the great obstacle lay in the indisposition of the poor themselves. The mothers in Mint-street revelled in their appalling condition. As 3000 women had been employed at the Nine Elms Laundry during the past year, opportunity was afforded them to hear the Word of God read and prayer offered.

The second address was given by Miss Cavendish, who spoke chiefly of the "training" provided by the Mission. This included preparation for missionary work both at home and abroad. Two of the students were now in Syria, and one was expecting to go to Africa. Others among the students were being trained for medical work. Young ladies present were urged to consecrate themselves to missionary work, and parents were tenderly besought not to hold them back.

Rev. Charles Graham preached a brief sermon from Luke i. 74, 75. The "Second Coming" Conference, to be held on May 14—16, was announced.

SEA BREEZES FOR LONDON ORPHANS.—We are requested to remind the managers of the London Homes who may wish to send their children and attendants to the seaside during the summer, that they should apply at once to the founder of the Dover Seaside Orphans' Rest, Mr. Thomas Blackman, 56, St. James's-street.

WARDOUR HALL, LITTLE CHAPEL-STREET, SOHO.—Mr. D. Basil Martin, B.A., of Oxford University, late of New College, and son of Rev. David Martin, late of Oxford, having become deeply interested in the condition of the very poor of London, placed himself at the disposal of the London Congregational Union, and has been appointed to the charge of the above Hall, which is very near Seven Dials. Mr. Martin was publicly ordained last Thursday evening, April 24, in the presence of a large number of his fellow-students, relatives, and sympathising friends.

General Gordon.

[General Gordon, just before leaving England for the Soudan, sent a message to Canon Wilberforce, ending, "I am now calmly resting in the current of his will."]

IT is easy when that current bears us softly through the vales,
Where sweet music ever cheers us, and sweet fragrance fills the gales; [shield from harm,
Where the sunlight gleams upon us, and the flow'r-banks
It is easy to be restful, when the stream is hushed and calm.

But it dashes and it crashes, and the rocks oppose its course,
As it rushes through the chasm with a wild impetuous force:
Lo, it leaps in foaming fury o'er the cataract's dark brow!
Am I resting in the current, am I calmly resting now?

Trust it, brother, ever trust it, for it cannot lead thee wrong;
Never dare to stem its progress, for its power is wise as strong. [darkly fall,
Though it wind among the mountains, where the shadows
Calmly rest upon its bosom, trust its majesty through all.

Do its waters overwhelm thee? art thou troubled and distrest?
Carried onward, carried downward, all is working for the best.
Hold the centre of the current; shun the rocks of human craft;
Calmly rest upon its bosom, and no hurt shall reach thy raft.

I am resting, calmly resting, in the current of his will;
Where it bears me, I am happy, be it cataract or rill.
Like a straw upon the waters, I would yield myself to go
Just wherever He shall bear me, and rejoice to have it so.

I am resting, calmly resting, in the current of his will;
Not a struggle, not a murmur, in the whirlpool restful still
O delightful, sweet submission! O enjoyed and perfect rest!
Till I reach the boundless ocean and his loving, peaceful breast.

WILLIAM LUFF.

Conference at Southsea.

THE third Southsea Conference was held on April 22—24. Says a correspondent: Those who came up to the Conference hungry can testify that "He hath filled the hungry with good things." The subject for consideration was a most glorious one—"The Preciousness of Christ." It was taken in three aspects—"He is precious" (1) as the Deliverer from Egypt; (2) as the Deliverer from our enemies; and (3) as the Deliverer from an unprofitable life.

Among those who spoke on these topics were Captain Baring, Rev. Graham Thwaites, Rev. J. B. Figgis, Mr. R. C. Morgan, Rev. E. N. Thwaites, Rev. F. Williams, Rev. S. L. Dixon, Rev. L. Young, Mr. Landale, Mr. H. Francis, and Rev. J. Wilkinson. Rev. J. Hudson, Mr. George Holland, Mr. Wilkinson, and others, gave interesting accounts at the afternoon gatherings of the work the Lord has entrusted to them.

On the morning of the last day a little company gathered around the Lord's table. A short address was given by Rev. J. Luce on the words, "Preserved in Jesus Christ." At the morning meeting for praise and thanksgiving testimonies were invited, and many lips were opened to tell how the Lord had blessed them. This was followed by a large gathering of children in the afternoon, at which an address was given by Rev. J. Macdonald, and in the evening there was a crowded evangelistic meeting, when the Gospel message was faithfully delivered by Rev. E. N. Thwaites and Mr. H. Francis.

MORNINGTON HALL, HAMPSTEAD-ROAD.—Gospel services will be conducted here by various evangelists throughout the month of May. This will opportunely follow the Missions of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in the north-west district. Workers and converts are earnestly invited to co-operate. Prayer is asked that much blessing may result from the meetings.

WORKING LADS IN WALWORTH.—An institute for the spiritual, intellectual, and physical improvement of youths in South London was opened on Monday evening, April 28, by Mr. Oscar Owers. Appropriate addresses were given by Rev. B. Senior (Primitive Methodist Minister at Surrey Chapel) and Mr. N. R. Hughman. Mr. Henry Hill, jun. (founder of the Whitechapel Working Lads' Institute), gave an interesting account of seven years' work amongst lads in East London, and congratulated the promoters of the new institute on the admirable premises which have been obtained. Rev. E. F. Alexander (Vicar of St. Paul's, Lorrimore-square) delivered a stirring address to the youths present.

MILDMAY PARK CONFERENCE,

JUNE 25, 26, AND 27.

LETTER OF INVITATION.

BELOVED CHRISTIAN FRIENDS,

IT is again our privilege to invite you to the Mildmay Conference. As year after year rolls away, thus bringing the day of our Lord's promised return nearer, and as the times become increasingly times of "perplexity," these occasions of withdrawal from worldly business, and even from the activities of Christian work, for quiet, holy worship, and for communion with our God and with each other, become more and more valuable and needful.

On the one hand we cannot but say with one of old, "This day is a day of trouble, and of rebuke and blasphemy." The enemies of the Lord and of his Anointed are crying more loudly than ever, "Let us break their bands asunder, and let us cast away their cords from us." Their attacks on the truth of God and on Christian institutions are growing more persistent and determined. The ties of society are being visibly loosened, and the very foundations of all that has seemed stable and permanent are "out of course."

On the other hand we are bound thankfully to acknowledge that "This is a day of glad tidings," and that while there is much to alarm, to sadden and to depress, there is abundant cause for praise unto our God for increasing manifestation of his presence and power. He is still our "King of old, working salvation in the midst of the earth." In this, and in other lands, the glorious Gospel of Christ has been wonderfully blessed, and we cannot doubt that the last few months have proved to be a time of wide spiritual awakening, not only in London and the neighbourhood, but in very many places, both at home and abroad. There is therefore very much to encourage our hearts and to lead us to renewed consecration in the work of the Lord.

Let us again come together, to take counsel, and draw near to God. "The work is great and large, and we are separated—one far from another." We need to draw close together as the days become more critical: and we are assured that, as in the past, our Conferences have been times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, and we have left them with spiritual strength restored, our God will renew his former mercies to us, and give us all just the blessings of which we stand individually and collectively in need.

The subject proposed for our consideration is "The Knowledge of God,"—as the purpose for which He has redeemed his people—as that which should be the object of their most earnest pursuit—and as the blessing which they are the appointed means of conveying to the world.

Must it not be acknowledged with sorrow that many among us are prone to rest content with the "knowledge of salvation," though called to the inestimable privilege of acquaintance with all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge which are hid in the mystery of Christ—that to many the inquiry may still be addressed, "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known Me?" May we not all make advances in this most glorious of all sciences—the knowledge of God Himself, as the One who can alone so satisfy our souls that we shall be filled with the fullness of God?

We earnestly trust that our meditations on this exalted subject may stir up all our hearts to "follow on to know the Lord," and thus not only to respond to his wondrous purpose of bringing us into fellowship with Himself, but also by closer intimacy to be more conformed to his image, so that we may represent Him more adequately to those around us.

The general arrangements of the Conference are now so well known that it is unnecessary to say more with regard to them at present than that we propose to adhere this year to those of our last gathering, in accordance with which the whole of the three days were dovoted, almost exclusively, to the primary object with which the Conference was originally held, worship and edification in the truth. The detailed arrangements will, as usual, be made known later.

You will, we feel assured, unite frequently with us in believing prayer that our gracious God and Father will, by the power of the Holy Spirit, make the Conference of 1884 an occasion of very great blessing to all who attend it, as well as to multitudes who are unable to come, and thus of glory to Himself, for his dear Son, Jesus Christ's sake. Yours affectionately in Christ Jesus,

S. A. BLACKWOOD, JAMES E MATHIESON,
CAVAN, HARRY C. NISBET,
Trustees of the Conference Hall.

Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N., May, 1884.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

HOLLAND.

THE Dutch Y.M.C.A. has in Holland 394 centres, with 8,099 members. There are 90 cadet centres, with 1,299 youths as members; and 21 reading-rooms open to the military.

VALPARAISO Y.M.C.A.

The first annual report of this Association has been sent to us. About 100 members have joined. A Sunday afternoon meeting for Bible study has an average attendance of twenty-one.

CAIRO.

Miss Todd, who has done so much good work among the soldiers at Maryhill, Glasgow, is now at work in Cairo, where the Scotch soldiers on their return from the war welcomed her with delight.

PERSIA.

A strange sect called the Baabys has arisen and is rapidly growing in Persia, who profess a religion which is a curious amalgam of Christianity, Mohammedanism, and Pantheism. One of the special commands of Beha is to be friendly with Christians and read their books.

RUSSIA.

There are twelve German Sunday-schools in St. Petersburg, with 1452 children and 152 teachers. One school numbers 400. All attendants on the schools are Protestants, for any attempt to draw in and teach others would be prevented by the authorities of the Greek Church.—Phil. S.S. Times.

THE McALL MISSION IN LYONS.

Major Colquhoun, who has laboured in Glasgow in Cowcadden's Free Church, under the Evangelistic Association, for some years past, left that city last week to take charge of Mr. McAll's Mission in Lyons. During the time he has laboured in Glasgow the Lord has greatly blessed his efforts.

EMMANUEL VON GEIBEL,

one of the greatest poets of the present day, who died recently at Lübeck, is said to have been an evangelical Christian. He once wrote to a friend: "If any good effect has ever been caused by my poetry, then it is a fresh confirmation of our Lord's words, 'My strength is made perfect in weakness.'"

HONOLULU.

The Chinese Y.M.C.A. at Honolulu has enrolled 100 members, who pay three dollars annually. They have voted a sum of £20 for the pastor of the Chinese church at Kohala. In the hall there is a service every Sunday afternoon. Once a week book-keeping is taught, and this class is attended by thirty young Chinese.

SPAIN.

The violent opposition which attended the commencement of Mr. Blamire's work at Marin is decreasing, and souls are being saved. A young woman, poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith, has voluntarily put her little house and garden at his disposal to construct a chapel or a hall, and has given in addition nearly all the stone necessary for the building. Many others are supplying the wood for the carpenters' work.

TRACTS FOR FRANCE.

The London Monthly Tract Society is publishing at Paris some good French tracts suitable for the more cultivated classes, for the benefit of those who may wish to obtain and send them by post.

THE CONTINENTAL SABBATH.

The Bulletin Dominical shows that the question of Sabbath rest is increasingly occupying the attention of employers in most of the Continental nations, both from the Biblical and hygienic points of view.

A VALUABLE WORK.

Pastor Augustin Bost, of Geneva, is preparing a Dictionary of Ecclesiastical History, which, after fifteen years of labour, he proposes to publish in June. A competent authority describes the work as a vast ecclesiastical and theological library.

SWITZERLAND.

A new sect called "Hinschiste," has arisen in Geneva. The pre-existence of souls, the eternity of Satan, the inspiration and authority of Mdme. Armengaud, née Hinsch, the community of goods, woman's ministry, and the abolition of the sacraments, are the principal articles of belief.—Journal Réligieux.

BELGIUM.

The quarter's report of the Société Evangélique of Belgium, ending in March, contains some very encouraging details. The young men of the Christian Associations take a very active part with the pastors and evangelists in spreading a knowledge of the Gospel. At Charleroi the members of this Union have distributed a large number of tracts to the soldiers at the barracks. Many meetings for Bible-reading and prayer are largely attended by Roman Catholics, but more labourers are needed.

ST. LOUIS, U.S.A.

Dr. Tudor, of the Centenary Church, in which Mr. Harrison held revival services for ten weeks, has recently baptized forty-seven adults. He has now a list of three hundred applicants for admission into the communion of the church. Mr. Harrison has left this city, but the services have not been discontinued. There are meetings for prayer and praise and experience every afternoon and evening, which are well attended, and much interest is felt.

GERMANY.

We lately reported a meeting of women in Berlin to consider the question of Social Purity. A similar gathering has since been held of men only, for, as Pastor Stöcker said, this question is not one for women alone, but concerns men and youths. "In the sight of God it was a cursed thought to lay the shame of the sin upon the woman, and not equally so upon the man." Another speaker said there were in Berlin alone 10,400 marriages where husband and wife were separated. A society was formed for the maintenance of purity, and an engagement to wage war against the barter of women. It will meet every month.

FRENCH IN LONDON.—In the brief notice in our last issue of Mons. Barbier's work among French in London it was stated that the chapel in Soho was closed for lack of funds. We are informed, however, that it is only the reading-room that is closed; the Gospel-meetings, the day-school, and the Sunday-schools are continued as before.

MISSIONARY LABOUR IN SHANGHAI.—In writing to a friend who sends him THE CHRISTIAN weekly, Mr. W. L. Pruen says:—"In this province American missionaries are being much used of God to extend his kingdom. During 1883 they admitted about five hundred natives into church membership. The Scotch missionaries, too, to the west of Chefoo have been bravely keeping to their work amid much difficulty, while we to the east of the harbour have had the privilege of a year's uninterrupted work, receiving about 4000 visits from out-patients, and attending to about 40 in-door patients, who have often heard of Jesus and his love. Here in Chefoo, although missionaries have been labouring in and around this place for nearly twenty years, the willingness of the people to hear is wonderful. 'Please go on preaching,' and 'Won't you stop and preach to-day?' are common expressions. Thus, far and wide, o'er this great land, the fields are ripening for the harvest."

Notes and Comments.

WE are obliged to hold over to our next Lady Hope's "Glance at the Great Work, Part IV."

The University of Oxford has done itself credit in admitting women to compete in some of its honour examinations. Experience has shown that in the world of letters women are as highly gifted as men, and we know of no valid reason why they should be in any way fettered in the due development and exercise of these gifts.

A gentleman will gladly pay the railway fares of a certain number of clergymen of the Church of England residing at a distance from London, who would like to attend some of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings in the Temple Gardens Hall, Thames Embankment, commencing 27th inst. Preference will be given to those who have not yet heard these Evangelists. Address T. F. W. D., 3, Bridewell-place, E.C.

The musical world has sustained a heavy loss in the death of Sir Michael Costa, which occurred last week at Brighton. In a profession where many temptations to frivolity and carelessness as to morals abound, the eminent conductor achieved a high reputation for self-respect and lofty character. His career was a remarkable one; he furnishes another example of what inflexible purpose, patient toil, and honest principle can effect in the battle of life. He certainly did much to elevate the profession to which he belonged.

Money is by no means scarce when earthly pursuits and delights are in question. Eighteen thousand pounds seems a large sum for two horses, yet more than this was given for two of Lord Falmouth's racing stud last week, while twelve others realised 1350 guineas each. Such facts show the intensity with which the children of this world pursue its pleasures and vanities. We have inspired warrant for using their example as an incentive to increased eagerness and consecration in the pursuit of righteousness and truth, and the attainment of the best things we can obtain for use in the heavenly race.

At the Synod of the Presbyterian Church of England just held at Liverpool, the new Moderator, Rev. R. H. Lundie, referred to the Salvation Army as a movement which had arisen through the lethargy of the churches. While regretting its eccentricities, he urged imitation of its zealous efforts to turn men from Satan unto God. This is the right position to assume towards systems with the entire workings of which we may not agree. Emulation of whatever is good in them is far better than wholesale condemnation, or minute criticism of what is open to difference of opinion.

Speaking from our own experience, we know of no more necessary means of grace (second to our own individual reading of the word and prayer) than social meetings for Bible-readings. The fifth of a series of papers on "Lay Service: its Nurseries and its Spheres," by Mr. J. Van Sommer, is on "The Scripture-reading Meeting." These papers have appeared in the Y.M.C.A. Record, and small parcels of each paper for distribution may be obtained without charge on application by post to Mr. J. Van Sommer, Wimbledon-common, S.W.

The openings in China for Gospel effort are so many, and the needs of that country so vast, that we are glad to see that it is resolved to establish a Scholarship at Regent's-park College, for training a succession of missionaries for that country. A distinct fund of £1000 is required for the purpose, and is now being raised, one friend having started it with £250.

The annual Convention at Keswick will be held from July 21—26. The arrangements will be similar to those of past years. The large meetings will be in the tent, and the Rev. J. N. Hoare, successor to the late Canon Battersby, has kindly granted the use of the church and lecture hall as before. Applications for accommodation to be sent to Mr. John Postlewaite, Eskin-place, Keswick.

We commend those of our readers who have the opportunity, without fail to hear the Fisk Jubilee Singers, who have now entered on their third tour throughout Great Britain. Christian singers everywhere would do well to learn some lessons from these gifted friends, in the matter of thorough training; intelligible and expressive rendering of the sentiments of the song, and of abandonment to the spirit of their theme.

All lovers of religious liberty will read with rejoicing the letter sent by the Education Department to the Rev. D. D. Mackinnon, of Speldhurst, with respect to the flogging of boys in the presence of the scholars of Speldhurst School, for attending a Mission chapel. The letter censures the act as contrary to the spirit and letter of the law, and warns against any repetition of it, on pain of losing the grant. No sterner rebuke of religious intolerance has ever been administered, and it may be hoped that its effect will be felt and seen in many a country village and town where bigotry and narrow-mindedness continue to hold sway.

An equally outrageous instance of scholastic tyranny is recorded in the following paragraph from the Echo of May 1:—

"Yesterday the School Board of Turriff, Aberdeenshire, considered the complaint of a parent whose son had been dismissed from school for refusing to desist from wearing a blue ribbon when ordered to do so by the teacher. Several members thought the children ought to be encouraged in the practice, if they carried out the principle of the Blue Ribbon. Ultimately the action of the teacher was approved of by the Board."

What are we coming to? We have been accustomed to boast of our land as "the home of the free"! But if a child is to be prohibited from wearing a blue ribbon, it is time for us to relinquish the boast. Surely there must be circumstances in the case that do not appear in the paragraph we quote.

The death of Rev. Dr. Kennedy, of Dingwall, last week, at Bridge of Allan, has deprived the Free Church of Scotland of one of its well known and much esteemed pastors. He belonged to the same ecclesiastical school as the late Dr. Begg, and was equally bold and uncompromising in the advocacy of his views. Many of the friends of revival were grieved at his opposition to Messrs. Moody and Sankey's work some ten years ago, while they gave him all credit for conscientious adherence to what he deemed the truth. He was an able preacher, and held a high place in the esteem and confidence of many of his fellow Christians in the north of Scotland.

Too many biographies of eminent men either ignore religion altogether or pass it by with a cursory glance. It is gratifying to notice in the recent autobiography of Dr. C. J. B. Williams, F.R.S., Physician-Extraordinary to H.M. the Queen, that while he attained to the highest place in his profession by his talents and integrity, he also bears witness to the value of true faith in Christ. At the close of a successful life he now specially directs his attention to the study of the Greek Testament, and consistently testifies to the truth of God.

We learn that Deacon Abraham, of Oroomiah, Persia, is now on his way to this country, if he has not already reached our shores. He hopes, during this second visit, to revive and extend the interest of English Christians in the evangelisation of his Nestorian countrymen. A recent examination of the Deacon's Orphan School, at Oroomiah, showed that very satisfactory progress has been made in the training of these friendless children. This is a very hopeful element in his work, and one that will tell on its future usefulness.

The Merchant's Lecture is a time-honoured and useful institution, which many citizens of our great metropolis would be glad to see invigorated and popularised. While associated with the Weigh House, it was to many a moral and spiritual oasis in the desert of City life, and in its new quarters at Finsbury Chapel it still retains a hold on some of the busy toilers around. We note that Rev. J. Baldwin Brown, having withdrawn from his place on the rota of lecturers, Rev. J. Guinness Rogers has been appointed to the vacant post, and during the month of May will discourse on "Every-day Religion," every Tuesday at 12 o'clock.

Professor Henry Drummond, of Glasgow, returned to this country last week, after a long absence of nearly a year, spent in the prosecution of his Mission of exploration in Central Africa. He is in excellent health, though we believe he experienced his due share of the fever attacks incident to travel in those tropical regions. Mr. Drummond went to Central Africa, at the request of several Glasgow philanthropists, to examine the physical aspects of the lake regions, with a view to further efforts for the introduction of Christian and civilising influences to these "dark places of the earth." His report will be anticipated with much interest.

Friends in the West and South-West of London will be glad to know that a Mission has been arranged for Dr. Pentecost and Mr. Stebbins at the Conference Hall, Ecclestonstreet (a few doors from Buckingham Palace-road, near the Victoria Station). It will commence on Sunday next, afternoon at three, evening at seven, and will continue each week night at eight o'clock, Saturday excepted. Bible-readings at eight from Tuesday to Friday. Members of the various choirs lately assisting in other of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings, and Christian workers generally, are invited to co-operate. Communications and applications for tickets to be addressed to the Hon. Secretary, Conference Hall, as above. Messrs. Pentecost and Stebbins remain at Midmay till Friday next. The subjects to be dealt with are "Sin" and "Punishment."

Our Sunday Schools.

STATISTICS lately compiled by Mr. F. J. Hartley, of the Sunday-school Union, show that in the United Kingdom more than six millions of young people are receiving regular instruction in our Sunday-schools, 674,704 teachers being engaged in the work. A grand total for the whole world is given of 14,806,451 scholars and 1,766,996 teachers. Of these only 386,808 scholars are found in the heathen world, all the rest are in European countries, or America. A mighty force for good is represented by these figures. We cannot be too thankful for such a wide-spread Christian influence being brought to bear upon the rising generation. It is still more satisfactory to know that the number of schools and teachers on the Continent and in some foreign lands is rapidly increasing.

At the recent Midland Counties Conference on Sunday-school Work, one of the speakers, Rev. A. C. Gill, said they had never yet as churches dealt fairly with the Sunday-school movement. He alleged as a proof of his statement the unwillingness which was felt to receive children into the fellowship of the Church. Their habit had been to compel them to hang around the portals, to crowd the outer courts of their temples, and often when they were lame and weary, and had lost the fervour of their youth, to bring them in. Wherever this spirit prevails it is a sad mistake. Child piety is not only beautiful but powerful, and churches blessed with its presence would find abundant cause for thankfulness that the privilege of welcoming and tending it was accorded to them.

Suburban Life.

A NEW term, "Suburbanity," coined by a contemporary, is certainly expressive of a distinct type of life, and that not of the most attractive or desirable kind. The Pall Mall Gazette and The Spectator have both been dilating on the merits and demerits of suburban residence, the former representing it as abounding in social or rather non-social evils and discomforts, the latter defending it as less subject to the evils named than country towns. Both admit that the changing and fugitive character of suburban life is a barrier to the development of social relations and confidences such as are of great value in promoting efforts for the good of others, and in developing the finer feelings of the human heart.

The spirit of unsettlement and independence which obtains in our suburbs is unquestionably a great hindrance to Church life and work. It prevents the spirit of brotherhood and mutual interest in each other, which is of primary importance in Christian communities. In hundreds of suburban congregations there is a sense of isolation and restraint, which sadly deadens spiritual activity, and prevents the Church becoming a spiritual home.

But this need not be regarded as inevitable. Etiquette and society regulations ought not to stand in the way of Christian brotherhood, and will not, where the genial influences of the Saviour's love and of the Holy Spirit's presence are yielded to and enjoyed. Christian society has its rules and regulations, but they differ materially from those of the outside world, heart being paramount in the one, form and ceremony in the other. One of the first duties of a true follower of Christ is to promote as far as possible, wherever he may dwell, the spirit of brotherly love and Christian intercourse.

THE NEED OF ABUNDANT LIFE.

By Pastor THEODORE MONOD.

WHAT do we mean by "deepening of spiritual life"? Not deepening of the life of God, but deepening our hearts to receive more of God. It is said that M. Lesseps talks of deepening the Suez Canal. There is something there which is taking the place of water, and has to be carried off. So we have, as it were, to shovel up the earth out of our hearts, and God will help us to do it. Then they will be deeper. Then, too, light, and love, and joy, and God can flow into them with a mightier and deeper current. All the stones hindering this must be thrown away. Each one, for himself, has to see what it is that prevents the life of God from flowing through his soul freely.

We need it for ourselves; we need it for others; we need it for the Church. We speak of the prosperity of the churches, and we have it at heart. But no amount of alteration of forms, or methods, will give prosperity to the Church if we have not spiritual life in abundance in every member of it. We want union in the church. But we may have meetings to promote this, reports, addresses, &c., and it all will be to no purpose, unless there is plenty of spiritual life. When they are thus full of life, Christians do not think about their differences. They will not fight when full of spiritual life; minor differences are lost sight of, all mention of them seems beside the point then. That was a good illustration used by the writer who compared our denominations to the little pools on the sea-shore, standing each one alone, and shut off from all others, when the tide was out; but when the tide came in they were all filled up, and the fish could swim about from one to another. We will love our own church, and do more for it than for others; but we will also love all the brethren.

Then, as to the question of religious knowledge. We are bound to advance in knowledge, and intelligence of the Bible. This is the first condition of spiritual life. But to search after knowledge without having life would be as absurd as it would be for a man who wanted to know about animal life to begin by killing the animals, to dissect them. We cannot understand what the apostles mean without having life. What can a dead church teach us of theology? If we want to advance, we must be full of the life of God. We shall then love one another, and understand each other, and work together, and be ready to give up whatever we may find out to be wrong, and realise that we are "one body," and members one of another.

Also, for the sake of the world we need this abundance of life. When the world sees us half-alive (and half-alive means half-dead), without any energy or joy, how can it be drawn towards Christ? They say, If that is Christianity, we will have none of it. Take the case of our young men who are drawn by the world. It is full for them of all that is bright; full of apparent life and motion. And if they do not see in us abundance of life, power, and happiness, will they be drawn? Surely not.

Nothing attracts the young so much as life. Children will rather have a live mouse than a stuffed horse.

Numbers of great questions resolve themselves into the deepening of spiritual life. Take the cry of the poor at the present day. It is truly said that the remedy is to bring them to see a new ideal of life, and how they may realise it. I was in the inquiry-room at one of Mr. Moody's meetings not long ago, and there a man told me he had been converted in another Mission nine months ago. I asked him, "What has Christ done for you?" "Oh, a great deal," he replied; "and not for my soul only, but for my body too. He has given me a new heart and a new coat, and I am happy in my home. My wife and brother are converted as well." Before his conversion this man was a drunken blasphemer. Don't you see that that man can take care of himself now, because Christ takes care of him. But by whom was he reached? By living Christians; so you see how deep spiritual life solves that question.

You want to bring up your family for God. You want your sons and daughters to be as godly as your father and mother were; it may be you are sorrowing because piety is dwindling down and becoming less and less with each generation. Have abundance of spiritual life. Come and ask Christ to give it you, out of his fulness, and your children will perceive and feel it.

Finally, we need this life not only for ourselves, not only for the Church and the world, but first of all for God Himself. How often we leave God out of sight as we look over the list of our motives! If we have abundance of life, we enable God to show what He can do. If we have it not, it is as much as to say we will not let God glorify Himself through us. But if we wish for it, we have only to ask God to take every hindrance out of the way. We have an instinct within us that, if we are to possess it, the self-seeking life must end. If the life of God comes in, the life of self cannot continue. This fulness of life is a life which has God for its object, comes from and flows towards Him, transforming us into the likeness of Christ, not by destroying our personality, but by bringing heart, body, and mind, into fellowship with Him.—The Life of Faith.

Mohammedans.

DEAR SIR,—In THE CHRISTIAN of April 17, under the heading of "Continental and Foreign Notes," you allude to an address given by M. le Pasteur Bost, of Boufarik, Algeria, at Lausanne, of Protestant work undertaken in this colony. M. Bost thinks the evangelisation of Mohammedan Arabs "almost impossible!" Should we then abandon the idea of evangelisation here? But against his dictum I would place another opinion, that of M. le Pasteur Mettetal, Inspecteur Ecclesiastique, in his Péril du Protestantisme en Algérie. (Grassart, Paris, 1883.) M. Mettetal says: "Some of our compatriots would not that we should undertake the conversion of Algerian Catholics to the Gospel; some are not less hostile to every Mission work for the salvation of the Mussulmans. They tell us, these men of little faith, that we shall preach the Gospel in vain to Arabs and Kabyles. But Jesus Christ, will He then share the empire of the world with Mahomet? But the Arabs and the Kabyles, are they not more religious than three-fourths of the 'Christians' of Algeria? And the miracles of the time of St. Paul, of Cyril, and Boniface, have they become impossible to the Son of God? Let them send Casalis's to the Kabyles, and they will soon see if they are more inimical to the Gospel than the cannibals of South Africa.

"Let us dare to undertake the conquest of Catholics, whether French, Spanish, or Italians, in Algeria. Let us dare attack Mohammed in his vast deserts; let us be true apostles of Christ. We shall then do a work in Africa which will astonish the churches of France; one cannot doubt it, if one considers the dispositions of the Spaniards and the Kabyles. Let them cease, then, to speak of the pretended impossibility of converting the Algerians to Jesus Christ!"

L'Agha, Algiers. GEORGE PEARSE.

May Meetings.

Christian Vernacular Society.

IN the work of training native Christians, and of scattering good literature throughout India, this Society was able to disburse last year nearly £12,000. At the annual meeting in Willis's Rooms last week great stress was laid on the pressing need of pure literature in India at this juncture. The emissaries of Satan are very busy spreading broadcast publications of a most hurtful and abominable sort. Warm reference was made to the valued services of Dr. Murdoch, whose unwearied efforts in different parts of this great English Dependency have prevented the dissemination of much evil reading.

The cause of the Society was ably and earnestly advocated by Bishop Coldwell, Dr. Sinclair Paterson, the Earl of Shaftesbury, and others. His lordship thought it would be well, if possible, to secure an examination of every publication sent into the country.

George-yard Ragged School.

The thirtieth annual meeting of the George-yard Ragged Schools, Church, Shelter for Outcast Boys, Infant Nursery, and other organisations, was held at George-yard on Monday evening last week. The four or five hundred people present completely crowded the schoolroom with its ample gallery. Lord Shaftesbury presided, as he has done for many years past when his health and other engagements permitted.

Mr. G. Holland, secretary, read the annual report, an interesting record. In speaking of the "bitter cry," Mr. Holland claimed that it was no new thing to East London workers, who had often had their attention called to the high rentals of the poor, the lowness of their wages, and the want of employment. They had grappled with intemperance, and set its slaves free by thousands. They had comforted the sick, and succoured thousands of children; their boys were on every sea; their girls were toiling hard for a livelihood, and were respectable members of society. Among the many departments of work carried on, there are the day-schools, Sunday-schools (five rooms are crowded with scholars on Sunday afternoons), numerous Bible-classes and Missions, with a children's service every Wednesday, toy classes, special classes for teaching little girls knitting, and to do up old clothing, boys' classes, day nursery, clothing and boot clubs, Bands of Hope, classes for elder girls and young women, instruction in cookery, a coffee-room, &c. There is to be a museum, in which Dr. Johnson intends placing 2,000 objects, chiefly illustrating Bible objects. No really hungry child is allowed to go empty away. Garments are lent to wear; children are enabled to go into the country for a short time in search of health, and the cottages at Shirley, provided by Lady Ashburton, and maintained by her, have alone given more than 200 children fourteen days' rest each. A "Louise Ashburton Rest" will be established soon. Lodging-house visitation, mothers' meetings, Temperance and evangelistic meetings are also dealt with. The hope was expressed that the premises may soon be enlarged.

A number of friends spoke warmly of the work, and due thanks were tendered to the noble Chairman for his continued interest in its prosperity. In responding, he alluded to a subject that he never seems tired of mentioning—the kindness shown him by the Ragged-school children of London as expressed in many useful presents. Speaking of the rougher lads and the improvement in them, he said that a group had recently come at a quarter to nine one evening, knocked at a class-room door, and said they wanted to hear about religion; and, on the time being mentioned, wittily rejoined, "Ain't a quarter of an hour's religion better nor none at all?" He mentioned the case of a clergyman who had been appalled at the roughness of his parish, but who was induced by him (the speaker) to open a ragged-school. Open-air preaching followed, and at the first attempt the clergyman was horrified to see a dozen ruffians of the most outrageous type right in front of his stand. But it proved that these had come to "see that the parson had fair play, as nobody had been kind to the little 'uns before." His lordship concluded by an earnest eulogy on the George-yard work; every day he lived, he rejoiced more and more in Mr. George Holland's friendship and co-operation.

City of London Abstainers' Union.

The annual meeting of this Union was held last week at the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association in Aldersgate-street. Mr. Benjamin Whitworth, M.P., presided, in the regretted absence of Mr. S. Morley. The report stated that during the past year the Union had enrolled ninety new members, making a total of nearly 600. Besides these 750 blue ribbons were distributed to those who had been influenced by the warehouse meetings, but who had not joined the Union.

The Chairman, in the course of his address, remarked that the doctors were the great stumbling block to total abstinence. He believed if we had not a single doctor in existence the average duration of life would be considerably increased. It was thought that people could not be made sober by Act of Parliament, but he was not sure of that. People had been made drunk by Act of Parliament, and the moment a Sunday Closing Bill was passed for England many people would be made sober by Act of Parliament. Mr. Hind Smith, Rev. Newman Hall, and Rev. W. R. Mowll also addressed the meeting.

Christian Evidence Society.

The annual meeting was held at the Mansion House on Tuesday, last week, the Lord Mayor in the chair.

The Treasurer gave a statement of the Society's position, and of its work in past years, showing how assiduously its labours had been carried on, through the medium of lectures, classes, open-air addresses, the circulation of literature, and the giving of prizes for proficiency in the evidences of Christianity. He pointed out that the Secularist propaganda was being carried on more vigorously than ever, and to meet it the Christian Evidence Society ought to do much more than the present state of their funds enabled them to do. They were also especially wishful to do more in the dissemination of evidential Christian literature in India and the East.

The Lord Mayor, Lord Carnarvon, Dr. Donald Fraser, Bishop of Bedford, and Rev. G. M. Murphy, testified to the importance of the Society's work.

South American Missions.

The annual meeting of the South American Missionary Society was held at Exeter Hall on Tuesday week, under the able presidency of Mr. F. Bevan. This is hardly the occasion to describe at any length the work of the society, so long associated with the name and the splendid efforts of the late Captain Allen Gardiner, R.N. Says a contemporary: "The general nature of the results which have been achieved within the past forty years is probably not unknown to our readers; but we may once again remind them that, thanks to the labours of the society, the inhabitants of Terra del Fuégo, who had an unenviable repute at one time of being lower in the scale of civilisation than any other people on the face of the earth, have been so far brought under the influence of Christianity that there is now in that region a church and regularly-organised district, with schools, orphanage, Bible and mothers' meetings, and, indeed, the whole machinery of a parish to be found in any town or village in England."

Rev. R. J. Simpson (clerical secretary) said that in order to extend and develop the Mission, and throw still more life into existing agencies, the committee have decided on substituting a new steamship for the present sailing yawl. The serious attention of the committee has been called to the importance of having additional missionary chaplains on the West Coast, and they are now taking steps with a view to one or two appointments. The committee hope at no distant date to appoint two suitable men to labour in the field of Paraguay.

Various speeches were delivered in support of the Society's operations.

Zenana Missions.

The usual "breakfast" anniversary of the work of Indian Zenana Missions of our Baptist brethren took place this year at Exeter Hall. Mr. A. H. Baynes' report stated that the Society has now thirty-eight lady missionaries and seventy-four native Bible-women at work, letting the light of the Gospel into the dark seclusion of Indian homes. Of these some 630 are regularly visited, and 1200 of the inmates are receiving instruction, having given up idol worship, and are reading the Scriptures in their homes.

Mr. George Williams, who presided, represented our Indian sisters as stretching out their hands and exclaiming, "Come over and teach us." Rev. D. Jones, of Agra, said a great wave of change was passing over India. The men now wanted their wives to be taught. The Calcutta Exhibition was visited by a large number of women, some of whom had been seen to weep as they looked at a picture of the Crucifixion. If Sutteeism was no longer allowed, widowhood had taken its place. There were 21,000,000 widows in India, but remarriage had begun. He earnestly appealed to Christian ladies to give themselves as well as their money to the work. Dr. Valentine, of Agra, said he did not believe that Mohammedanism was making the rapid progress which some said it was; but Christianity was certainly making great strides. Eighty years ago the burning of widows, the crushing of devotees under the wheels of Juggernaut, and swinging on hooks were common enough, but now they were to be no longer seen.

Rev. James Owen, of Swansea, followed with a powerful and eloquent speech. The voice of Christ was now heard, through the missionaries, asking the women of India, "Whom seekest thou?" As mothers, they would greatly influence the next generation, for Christians, when she left the City of Destruction, took her children with her. In France, Italy, and Spain, women were the mainstay of the system of Rome, and men, for the sake of domestic peace, kept their thoughts to themselves. If the women of a country were saved, its regeneration would be effected. The Zenana ladies were doing their work quietly, but was not the less effective.

Reformatory and Refuge Union.

The twenty-eighth annual meeting of this Institution was held on Wednesday afternoon last week, at St. James's Hall, the Earl of Shaftesbury in the chair. An admirable selection of songs and hymns was given by a choir of 500 children from various refuges and homes in London, under the direction of Mr. J. Proudman.

Mr. A. J. S. Maddison (Secretary) read the Report, which stated the Boys' beadle had aided 509 children, who required a friendly hand to prevent their drifting into a criminal career, and the Shoeblacks' beadle 333. The Council in May, 1883, appointed a rescue officer, who has in a period of eleven months taken fifty-three worse than orphan children from the horrible dens in which they were living, and placed them under legal training and protection. The work of the reclamation of fallen women has been considerably extended, and during the year 863 women have been assisted to lead new lives by the twenty-four agents of the Female Mission.

Rev. C. H. Grundy next delivered an address to the children on "Work," taking as his text: "I must work the works of Him that sent Me while it is day. The night cometh when no man can work." He divided his address into four parts, "Willing Work," "Obedient Work," "Rescue Work," and "Kind Work."

Sir Stafford Northcote, M.P., in commending the work, said: On looking back at the time when I first assisted at the founding of this institution, I remember how those engaged in reformatory work were looked on partly with pity, partly with astonishment, and also partly with dislike by those who were incredulous as to the result of the work. When we commenced, people shuddered at the idea of having a reformatory within a quarter of a mile, and asked how they could expect to keep fruit or fowls, or anything else under such circumstances. Now things are greatly changed under the blessing of God; but much remains to be done. Much advance has been made in intellectual education, but although that must have had its influence, the evil you aim at suppressing can only be remedied by personal and moral influence, by getting at the hearts of the children, and making them feel that you are their friends, giving them the idea wanting to outcast children—the idea of home.

Lord Shaftesbury said they had been told that it was utterly impossible to deal with the outcast classes, and that they would do well to leave them alone, to go their own way to destruction. What we see now is the strongest and most overwhelming refutation of all the fears then expressed, and the greatest encouragement to continue those efforts to cover this great Metropolis with institutions such as these. I was very glad to see that the report speaks of the aid we give the public. Look at the hundreds of thousands these good people have taken off the streets, taken from the dangerous classes, who would otherwise have led lives of crime, and turned them into good citizens. They were very right in speaking of the great aid we render the public, and we may fairly demand some assistance in return. Our duty is to train those children in the faith and fear and nurture of the Lord. In no other way can we hope to have a wise and understanding people, and if we have not a wise and understanding people we cannot have a wise and understanding Government. You are doing the greatest possible good in this way to the children, the Government, and the nation for the peace of those who come after you, and for the maintenance of the position Old England holds amongst civilised nations.

Moravian Missions.

Mr. George Williams presided at Exeter Hall on Thursday last over the annual meeting of the London Association in aid of these Missions—the oldest of organisations for Christianising the heathen. The sphere of the Brethren's work covers Greenland, North America, Labrador, British and Danish West Indies, South and Central America, South Africa, Australia, North-West India (Tibet), and the lepers in Jerusalem, and the number of converts, especially in South America, has recently largely increased, rendering further church accommodation very necessary. Interesting testimony to the value of the work and self-sacrifice of the workers was borne by the Bishop of Lahore, who especially mentioned the fact that the missionaries had even become lepers to take the Gospel to the lepers and slaves to teach the slaves.

Major Frobisher, as representing Waldensian Church Missions, expressed sympathy with the movement. The Revs. G. S. Karney, Sutcliffe, and Dr. S. C. Morgan, also spoke, urging the self-denying character of the Moravian Mission as a claim to increased support.

Missions to Seamen.

The annual meeting of the Missions to Seamen Society was held in the afternoon of the 1st inst., at Willis's Rooms, St. James's, the Archbishop of York in the chair.

The twenty-eight yearly report was read by the Secretary, Commander W. Dawson, R.N. Great efforts have been made during the last twelve months to promote a proper observance of the Lord's Day on board passenger and trading ships. Much success has crowned these endeavours. Temperance work is making rapid head-way among our blue jackets. Thousands of them are now pledged to abstinence from intoxicating drinks. In the higher domain of spiritual culture and Bible distribution, some progress is recorded. The chairman spoke warmly in support of the Society and its aims.

The usual resolutions were adopted, after addresses by the Archdeacon of Southwark; Admiral J. C. Prevost, C.B.; Mr. Joseph Moore; Mr. C. H. Wilson, M.P., and others. The income for 1883 exceeded £23,000.

The Opium Trade.

Last Thursday the annual meeting of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade was held at the Mansion House. The Lord Mayor, who presided, said it was now forty-one years since Lord Shaftesbury brought the opium question before the House of Commons. The Indian revenue from opium was now four times what it was then, and this was an instance of how much easier it was to do right in the first place, or to turn to the right as soon as possible. If the British public wanted the opium trade suppressed they must be prepared to make a sacrifice, and put their hands in their pockets, as they did in connection with the abolition of West Indian Slavery.

Rev. W. S. Swanson, a missionary of nearly a quarter of a century's experience at Amoy, protested against the inclination of people who knew nothing about the matter to minimise the evils of opium-smoking. The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol congratulated the meeting on the recent treaty between this country and Corea, securing to that kingdom a protection against the importation of opium. He was glad that the conscience of the nation was at length being aroused on the subject. Mr. William Fowler, M.P., complained strongly of the administrative subsidy for the growth of opium in India, between which and a similar policy towards the manufacture of gin in this country he saw no difference.

Cardinal Manning held that no time should be lost in deciding to utterly extinguish the traffic; and if the House of Commons took that step, he, for one, would promise to exercise all his Christian patience as to the how and the when, though his patience in this and the drink question was not much. Denouncing the traffic as a violation of the comity of nations and of Christian justice and charity, he reminded his hearers that this nation professed to teach Christianity and civilisation to China. "Heaven help us," he exclaimed, "for such hypocrisy!" There was such a thing, he went on to say, as retribution in international affairs, and in the corruption of youth in British Burmah by this vicious practice, political troubles for us in India might be hatching.

C.E.T.S. Women's Union.

The first public annual meeting of this organisation was celebrated last Thursday by a conference and a gathering at Exeter Hall. At the former the Bishop of Rochester presided; in the course of an address he said that women had to a great measure the influencing of public opinion, for they had the training of the children during an important part of their lives. It was in vain that they pressed for Sunday closing and the abolition of grocers' licences, and the like, unless they created a public opinion that would support those measures when they obtained them. Papers followed by Miss Meresia Nevill, on "How the Women's Union may be Helped by the Upper Classes;" by Mrs. Carus-Wilson, on "The Work of the Women's Union amongst Servants;" by Mrs. Philip Papillon on "The Women's Union in Laundries, Factories, and Large Shops." In the discussion which followed, Miss Gough referred to the work amongst barmaids in London, and spoke of their peculiar temptations. She asked the ladies to speak kindly to this class.

At the evening meeting Mr. C. E. Tritton said he hoped the Union might make a favourable impression on the public, and take its place beside the other larger and older societies doing so much for the Temperance cause. Addresses followed by Mrs. Ormiston Chant on "Drinking Facilities for Women and their Remedy;" by Mr. Oliver Leeson, M.D., on "Alcohol and its Effects;" and by Mrs. Gregson, on "Woman's Work 'for God and Home and Native Land.'"

Church Parochial Missions.

The annual meeting of this Society was held on Friday afternoon at Willis's Rooms. The Bishop of Rochester presided.

The Secretary, Rev. S. Darwin Fox, said that during the year the Society had sustained a loss in the death of Dr. Bickersteth. The Bishops of Manchester and Durham were heartily co-operating with them. The Society was now contemplating the appointment of a Missioner specially for children, and hoped ere long to meet with one duly qualified for that important branch of the work.

The Chairman, in the course of his address, expressed his conviction that the labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in London were producing results of a most satisfactory nature, and that nothing could be better than that they should be supplemented by the coming Advent and Lent Missions of the Parochial Society. He was hoping for great blessing on the approaching London Mission.

Rev. Dr. Morgan, Vicar of Swansea, said he had tried every sort of means to benefit his parish, but nothing had succeeded until the Church Army came among them. By these means some of the worst people had been reached. He had himself conducted forty Missions, and although it necessitated temporary absences from his flock, he was quite sure they were the better for it when he returned.

Rev. C. Keeling, of Manchester, said the whole face of his parish had been changed since the Church Army had been among them. They had now 200 converts, gathered mostly from the lowest class, some of them coming from streets out of which none had ever come before. These were now taking delight in Bible-reading and coming to church on Sundays.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken fully admitted that the novelty of Mission Services had passed away, but reminded them that the need still existed. He thought there was an extraordinary "swing" in Mr. Moody's meetings. With what readiness the choir gave their services, and seemed to feel it as incumbent on them to be there as Mr. Moody himself. They had seen evidently that God was blessing hundreds of souls through the use of music. Mr. Moody once said to him, "I can't preach a bit if they don't sing well." As to the coming Parochial Mission in London, he believed it would be a dead failure unless extraordinary efforts were put forth by the Church, and its responsibility realised. He would urge all Missioners to preach Christ as a Saviour from the power of sin. He had recently seen profound interest excited among boys at a school when the preacher dwelt on this topic.

Rev. J. Lester said he could point to 200 men and women in the potteries, many of whom were formerly drunkards, prizefighters, and wifebeaters, now coming to a Sunday morning prayer-meeting at seven o'clock, and most of them remaining to the Communion.

Church of England Purity Society.

From the evident tokens of earnestness of purpose and depth of enthusiasm which characterised the first anniversary proceedings of the Church of England Purity Society last week, says a correspondent of the Record, we are amply justified in prophesying for that body a place amongst such organisations commensurate with the gigantic nature of the evil it seeks to combat. Many of its members met at Henry VII.'s Chapel, Westminster Abbey, at noon. Rev. A. Butler preached from the familiar words, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven." Looking at facts around us he saw fruitful causes of impurity in the extreme poverty of the poor, which compelled them to herd together in rookeries in a way that was obviously incompatible with modesty; in the condition of the young men, who could not marry until they could afford to keep a wife in luxury; in the position of many others, away from home, amidst a thousand temptations, with enfeebled principles, and often without God. The movement by which the evil could be met must, he held, be a combined undertaking, for these were pre-eminently the days of scientific warfare. They wanted, therefore, workers and helpers of every kind, who might affect the laws of the land, together with public and medical opinion. Lastly, they needed a greater outpouring of Christ's spirit, and a more chivalrous bearing towards women.

After an interval of an hour and a half, most of the congregation, with many additions, assembled at the National Society's rooms in the Broad Sanctuary. Dr. Griffith read the First Annual Report, much of which was naturally taken up with a record of the proceedings connected with the Society's formation. Branches of the Society exist in Chichester, Liverpool, Manchester, and Rochester; whilst the White Cross Army of Durham has also incorporated itself with the wider organisation. Mr. J. G. Hubbard, M.P., entered an earnest protest against the practice of asking virtue from women whilst tolerating vice in men. Canon McNeile bore testimony to the fact that working men gave a ready response to any appeal made to them in this matter. It was, he thought, with them that the strength of the movement must lie. Among the other speakers was Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, who entered an impassioned appeal against modern incentives to vice in the form of literature, art, and female attire.

The Irish Society.

By the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Greer the anniversary meeting of the Irish Society was held in the drawing-room of Grove House, Regent's-park, on Tuesday week. The Earl of Shaftesbury occupied the chair. Rev. Thomas Keane (Secretary) read a letter from Miss Maria V. G. Havergal, expressing her regret at being unable to attend the meeting, and asking that a set of her sister's works might be accepted by the Chairman, their host, and each of the speakers. The Secretary summarised the Society's work. It was first and above all a Bible Society, seeking to place the Scriptures in the hands of the poorer Irish, and to teach them how to read with profit. It was thus also an educational agency. Lastly, he might describe it as a Peace Preservation Society, since during the recent troubles in Ireland not one of their many pupils had been brought up for sedition.

Rev. N. Foster, in a telling speech, occasionally interrupted by a relapse into the Irish tongue, described his own experience of the Society's work. He had been a voluntary worker for the Society since 1855, and there was no district in which its work went on which he had not visited on foot. He had been for some years rector of a parish in West Kerry, away on the Atlantic seaboard. He had three churches, and an Irish-speaking population, most of whom knew no English. At first there was no Protestantism, because no knowledge of the Bible, and accordingly no intelligence, no decency, no high-minded motives. But now, from the work of this Society, Protestantism had there been given a local habitation and a name. He gave some striking instances of the way in which the friends of converts who were at the point of death urged them to receive the priest. Their reply usually was, "I am not looking to any earthly priest, because I have the great High Priest to plead for me"; and then their friends had often solemnly cursed the dying for their allegiance to their new faith.

The Bishop of Derry, Lord Shaftesbury, and others pleaded the cause of the Mission.

MR. MOODY AND THE LIVERPOOL CONVERTS.

By Mrs. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

WE chanced to be in Liverpool at the close of the Mission which Messrs. Moody and Sankey held there a year ago, and were present at the last meeting when they made a collection for the purpose of enabling the committee to engage several earnest ladies for twelve months, to visit in their homes those who had in the after-meetings given in their names as inquirers. Mr. Moody told the people to look out for these friends, and promised, at the same time, to come and speak to them once more at the year's end.

Liverpool being a great port, many of our missionaries sail from it both for America and for Africa, and it so happened we were there again last week seeing off two parties, at the very time when this promise was fulfilled on the anniversary of the day on which it was made. "We know he'll come," the people used to say; "he said he would at the end of a year, and he'll never break his word." He came, and thousands of loving and grateful hearts had gathered to hear once more the well-remembered voice in Hengler's Circus, a place more hallowed to them than any cathedral in the country.

The plan so happily conceived has been heartily carried out during the year; every inquirer and convert has been cared for and visited again and again. The city had been divided into sections, and the cards of each section handed to one of the four workers. We gathered from a brief chat with one of these ladies some idea of her experience in the work. Eighteen hundred names were given to her, which, after the first three rounds, were reduced to fourteen hundred, the rest proving to be those of mere visitors from a distance, who had come up on purpose to attend the meetings, and who had returned, many of them rejoicing in Christ, to their homes.

In almost every case the visitor had met a hearty welcome. "You have been long coming; we were wearying to see you," was the greeting she received from not a few. Only in one instance did she meet with a rude reception, and that was from a "lady!" Her cards led her to courts and alleys, to respectable houses of all grades, to drawing-rooms in handsome mansions, and on one occasion, at any rate, into the minister's study at the vicarage!

Our informant's impression from all she had seen and heard during her twelve months' work was that the work was intensely real—a work not of the dear American evangelists, but of God by their means, a wonderful, widespread and thorough work of grace. She had met about 770 cases of clear, unquestionable conversion, many of them of a most remarkable character, besides very large numbers who had been restored from backsliding and otherwise blessed. She met also many who had been merely awakened, more or less impressed at the meetings, but who had not passed from darkness to light, and she was enabled to lead numbers of these to joy and peace in believing.

She also held drawing-room and cottage meetings, at the request of the converts, for their friends and neighbours, and saw about sixty cases of conversion, in and through these, of persons who had not been at Moody's meetings at all. The little book, "Grace and Truth," seemed to have been helpful to over 200 persons in leading them into clear, Gospel light; and there seems good ground to believe that between two and three thousand precious souls have been born again as the result of the Liverpool Mission of 1883. This is no vague general statement, but a tangible result remaining a year after the work.

Space would fail us to tell of the dear old Scotch washerwoman, who told the visitor how she was so tired she couldn't help going to sleep when "Maister Moody" preached, but when "Maister Sankey" sang how "Mary went forth in the beauty of heaven," it roused her attention, touched her heart, brought back all her long-forgotten knowledge of Gospel facts, broke her right down, and led her too, as well as her daughter, to the feet of Jesus; or of the lady who had the notion that she could not be saved unless Mr. Moody himself spoke to her, so tried to get a word with him, was offended because he called some other worker to speak to this "person," and went out in despair, to hear a voice all the way home saying to her, "Not Moody, but Christ;" or of the young man, of whom his landlady said to the visitor, "Poor fellow, he's quite off his head, ma'am, I'm sorry to say: keeps on singing and praising God, and even in the night sometimes; seems so full of joy—and all for nothing!"

Of course, the convert visited was often the solitary Christian in the family, and filled with a yearning desire for the salvation of parents, husband, or wife, as the case might be. In one case the wife had a sceptical husband, but ventured to gather in a few neighbours to hear the lady read. The lady, on her arrival, was rather startled to see a great, rough, fierce-looking man standing, arms akimbo and breast bare, in the middle of the room, with a defiant look, which seemed to say, "What business have you in my house?" She waited a few moments, hoping he would sit down; but, no! he only stared at her. She started a sweet hymn, and he listened; but when she began to pray, he marched off upstairs. On rising, she thought, "Now, I must not lose my chance," so sent his wife up with a message to say she could not think of holding in that house a meeting which its master did not sanction by his presence, so begged he would come down. He did so; she spoke of the blind man and the Lord's question, "Wilt thou be made whole?" She saw he was moved. Tears were in his eyes as they sang, "Take me as I am," on their knees; and before she left the house he was a changed man. He was a lamplighter, and had for twenty years been to no place of worship. Now he has a weekly meeting in his own house, and has been blessed to the conversion of a Roman Catholic.

The old Circus never looked brighter or better than when crowded with the converts and their friends, the Christian workers. It once more resounded with Mr. Moody's American accents on Monday, April 28, as he stimulated every heart by his simple, graphic sketch of the prophet Daniel, and drew from the story as he told it, the precious, practical lessons with which it is replete; from the lesson in holy consistency in the first chapter, to the shining "as the stars for ever and ever" in the last. Our dear missionary band were seated in front of the platform, and stood up by Mr. Moody's desire, while Mr. Guinness first, and Mr. Moody afterwards, commended them in prayer to God, the congregation very heartily saying Amen. The Congo boys, who were present, were also remembered, and the more tenderly, perhaps, because one of their number had but a few days before been laid in an early grave, after an hour's illness, consequent on the bursting of a blood-vessel.

And then we sang with full, though glad hearts, about "The crowning day that's coming by and by," and parted, probably to meet no more all together until it comes.

If God Himself is resolved to crown with the eternal brightness of starlike glory the man who turns many to righteousness, we cannot greatly err in very highly esteeming, and very gratefully loving, our dear and honoured friend, D. L. Moody!

OLD-STREET MISSION.—Over the entrance of this Mission Hall we find this inscription: "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God." While the lecturer at the Hall of Science opposite (Mr. Charles Bradlaugh) is well-known, the work of this Mission and the workers are in comparative obscurity. We venture therefore to ask for a small space in THE CHRISTIAN. This Mission is quite unsectarian, although originated by friends connected with the City-road Chapel. A fortnight's special services have just been held, with increasingly encouraging results night after night. The work has entailed much labour, and although every effort is being made to render it self-supporting, the financial resources are exhausted. It is especially on behalf of the extinction of the debt of £150, for the fitting up of this building, that this appeal is made, which it is hoped will be liberally responded to. C. G.

Death of Mr. Reade, of Blackgang.

WE learn with sorrow that our dear friend, Mr. Charles Reade, with whose name our readers are familiar, in connection with the Missions at Blackgang, I.W., and at Punrooty, fell asleep in Jesus on Sunday, April 27. He had been suffering from congestion of the lungs for some weeks, but it was thought the crisis was over.

When the doctor announced that fatal symptoms were manifest, he exclaimed: "No need for sorrow, only cause for rejoicing. Let us be glad and rejoice." Just before his departure a sudden foretaste of glory seemed to break on him, and he exclaimed with delight, "Amazing, amazing glory! I am having Paul's understanding," referring to 2 Cor. xii. 1—4, which had previously been a subject of conversation with a relative.

Major and Mrs. Poole in Bristol.

OWING to the great success of the work here the Mission was continued until Friday. On Thursday evening Major Evered Poole delivered a second address to men only, in the large Colston Hall. The deepest interest was evinced. The lesser hall was also full of women, addressed by Mrs. Spencer in the absence of Mrs. Evered Poole, who was indisposed.

On Friday afternoon Major and Mrs. Evered Poole gave an account of the work in the army by the Army Readers at Mrs. Briggs's, 46, Cornwallis-crescent; the drawing-room, staircase, and landings were crowded with visitors.

On Friday evening a large thanksgiving service was held. The testimony of three men, in two instances rescued from infidelity and drink, was given and much appreciated, and Major Poole read a touching letter from two navvies who had been brought to the knowledge of Christ during the Mission and desired to record their gratitude. After this, Major and Mrs. Poole each gave a stirring address. Mrs. Poole's address on "Looking unto Jesus," proved most helpful to those who during the Mission had begun the Christian life.

Precious souls have been garnered for eternity during this brief Mission; the testimony of many was very touching, as they bade good-bye to their friends. "I have got such a blessing;" "I bless God that Christ is mine!" "My soul is in the Lord's hands to-night, thanks to you," &c. There have been several remarkable cases of backsliders restored. One said, weeping bitterly: "I would cut my right hand off if I could but get back to Christ. I can neither eat, drink, nor sleep; I have thrown my business up, for I must get this matter settled before the Mission is over. I do not want peace, or joy; I would gladly mourn all my life if I could but see the loving face of Christ as I used to see it, and hear his voice saying once more, 'Thou art mine.'"

A touching incident was that of a young man, engaged as billiard marker at hotels. He was deeply impressed and gave his heart to the Lord. His whole life has been spent in hotel work and in the drink trade, which tells against his efforts to get occupation. Perhaps some Christian may feel led to take up his case, and open a way for him in other work.

Major and Mrs. Poole are at Cheltenham and Clevedon this week. As a result of the work in Bristol, it was announced that the prayer-meeting would be continued daily in two central places, and that centres would be immediately formed for carrying on vigorously the important work of the Purity Crusade.

FAKENHAM NURSES' HOME.—The Hon. Lady Sebright writes:—"I am anxious to state that the Fakenham Nurses' Home, where I am at present residing, and which is an active centre of Christian work, is now a most comfortable and roomy house, perfectly suited to its requirements, with a pleasant garden for exercise and recreation. Ladies requiring a quiet home under special circumstances would find every suitable arrangement, as a good staff of certified nurses is attached to the Home. Terms for the occupation of these apartments may be had on application to Miss S. Hamond, Nurses' Home, Fakenham, Norfolk."

GOD'S FAITHFULNESS ON THE SEA.

MANY readers who have laboured with us during the winter, will now praise God for his delivering mercies during an Atlantic storm. The young schoolmaster, extracts from whose journal I send you, had crossed many times, being one of our own dear Mission lads. He knew how to comfort the boys, and also to whom to cry during the time of trouble. We hope to sail in the same vessel, Circassian, May 15, with eighty, mostly little orphan girls under ten years. Mr. and Mrs. Merry and Mr. Thom are selecting Christian homes for them. We have had a full and blessed winter's service, but now feel very nerve-weary, and earnestly beseech prayer. ANNIE MACPHERSON.

"We left Moville about 6 p.m., Friday, April 4, steaming away to the West. Sea calm, and not much motion. As soon as we were fairly started, we assembled the boys below deck, and had a prayer-meeting. It was good to hear the boys pray. All at the Home were remembered, each boy praying for some particular portion of your work. . . .

"Sunday.—A fine day. Sun shining beautifully. Ship rolling fearfully. Number of sick ones increasing. We are strengthened by the knowledge that you are praying for us. The young man J—— is helping among the sick ones, willing to do anything. How good of God, who knows all we need, to send him to join the party.

"Tuesday.—Boys all well, except, B., who at present does not improve. The waves this morning were rolling over the deck, sweeping everything before them. The boys had to keep below. Later on the wind increased, and all the passengers were ordered off deck. The boys began to be a little afraid, but we were able to cheer them. They are now asleep in their hammocks, knowing nothing of the peril we are in. Captain S. says we are in great danger. He has 'hove to.' We are lying with our head homeward. Such a storm is raging, threatening every moment to break our vessel to pieces. Our trust is in the Lord, and we know you are praying for us.

"Wednesday.—No sleep last night. Went to see the boys five or six times, each time found them sleeping quietly. Was it not good of God thus to keep them calm? Ship still lying to, and rolling frightfully. Such a noise of water as it sweeps over the deck. The gale is increasing; the wind literally howling. Again some of the boys are sick, but we are proving that God's grace is sufficient for us. B. is much better, praise God.

"Thursday.—No sleep again last night. Went to the boys time after time, thankful to find them sleeping, unconscious of any danger. About nine o'clock this morning the captain put the ship again upon its course, and we are now proceeding at half-speed, the gale going down and our hearts becoming lighter; we are ready to sing, 'How good is the God we adore,' and 'Praise the Saviour.' No going on deck yet, but it is almost music to hear the working of the screw again. We are now moving at full speed. Have just come from a prayer-meeting amongst the boys; enjoyed it much, feel quite refreshed. B. much better. All in bed by eight o'clock, and soon asleep. I, too, am quite ready for my berth.

"Sunday.—A beautiful day, bright, clear Canadian weather; ship steady; had the boys on deck this morning, gave the Bible lesson from Luke xxiv., first part: An empty tomb, and a risen Saviour. The saloon was crowded this morning. Mr. S. preached an excellent sermon. In the afternoon Mr. S. gave a lecture on the 'Tabernacle,' illustrated by large diagrams; the saloon was again full. About 5 o'clock we passed the Sardinian homeward-bound, in full sail, whilst we are struggling against a head wind.

"Monday Morning.—All are full of hope in expectation of landing; have had a fine gathering on deck; a grand time; trust good was done. We sighted land about 5 o'clock this morning, and were alongside the dock between nine and ten. The boys in fine spirits; all landed safely.

"Tuesday.—Left Halifax at 3 o'clock this morning; reached Truro for breakfast; and now praising God for his goodness in bringing us thus far in safety. F. AUVACHE."

TRIALS IN SWITZERLAND.

SIR,—The epidemic which has reigned in Geneva for the past six weeks, carrying off at times twenty to thirty persons in a day, has now greatly abated. Among the deceased were five soldiers of our Geneoese corps. The departure of each and all for the world of light was remarkably triumphant, and has added another seal to the reality of this glorious salvation which so many in Geneva had vainly tried to confound with mesmerism (magnétisme).

One of the deceased who had been unconscious for several days seemed at the moment of death to be awakened by a heavenly vision. Opening her eyes, and pointing upwards with a radiant face, she cried: Maman, maman! regarde, regarde! (Mother, mother! look, look!) and fell back dead. Another, before dying, said: "I have something better than a religion now; I have a Saviour who has saved me for eternity." Just as she died she raised herself a little, and, pointing upwards, said: "Good-bye, I am going home to my almighty Saviour."

Simon Coombe, a fine, bright young man (son of a lady who, after the conversion of her whole family, had opened her house to our meetings), a few weeks before his death wrote: "For the past two months and a half I am perfectly happy. All is well when it is well with the soul." A large procession followed his remains to the grave, the crowd, which filled the street, standing with heads uncovered in respectful and sympathetic silence, as the coffin passed covered with the flag and a branch of palm.

At the same time that our five comrades in Geneva were thus called upon to glorify God in their death, five others in the canton of Neuchatel were called upon to glorify Him in suffering and publicly prove once again in that canton the reality of salvation. Returning quietly one night from a little meeting in the village of Montalchez a band of men who had been lying in ambush fell upon them suddenly with sticks and stones. Lieutenant Schimitz received a blow from an enormous stone, which tore the flesh of the forehead downwards over the eye, leaving the bone bare; she fell insensible in a pool of blood. Three men were frightfully cut in the head; one of them had a piece of his hat forced into the wound by the violence of the blow. An old man was so savagely beaten that he remained in bed for several weeks, his life being in danger. A little boy even did not escape, his piteous cries being heard afar off. This murderous attack was accompanied with a refinement of cruelties which one can scarcely relate.

In the midst of the terrible blows these dear sufferers have been visibly preserved. The Lord did not permit greater wounds than were necessary to touch many hearts, open many eyes, and destroy many prejudices and antipathies. From the first, and while a just indignation called loudly around the wounded Salvationists for the punishment of the aggressors, Miss S——, collecting her remaining strength, continually repeated the words, "Lord, bless them!" and her comrades in suffering all spoke in the same strain. Their patience, their gentleness, their love, their prayers for those who despitefully used them preached—louder than the words of the most edifying meeting—repentance, faith, salvation, and the love of Jesus. This sermon will have reached the ears of many of those who, alienated by prejudice, fear, or hatred, would have otherwise never heard anything.

The cry of indignation raised by these atrocities has stirred the authorities to action; but strange as it may seem to English readers the consequences have fallen not upon the aggressors but upon the victims. Not one of the five men who committed these all but murders, though no doubt well known in the neighbourhood, has been arrested; on the other hand, the severity of the authorities towards the Salvationists has redoubled. The decree forbidding the meetings has been re-issued. The Suisse Liberale of the 21st ult. describes the discovery by the police of a meeting of Salvationists. Finding the door shut one of them drew his sword and broke it open.

They forced entrance, passed the owner of the house, heedless of his protestations, and "with drawn swords" ordered the meeting to disperse. This the Salvationists declined to do. The police took their names and retired. The same scene took place at another meeting the same evening. The police forced entrance, and took the names of the seventy people in the meeting.

A candidate with good certificates from the Gymnase Cantonal was by a resolution of the Conseil d'Etat excluded from passing his examination for the post of teacher in a higher school because he attended Salvationist meetings, and the Swiss themselves are now threatened with imprisonment for even attending private meetings.

But all the difficulties seem only to fan the flame of salvation which is spreading on from village to village, hamlet to hamlet. A Swiss paper says that the persecution in one district is "owing chiefly to the good done by the Salvationists; it is generally reported that 130 to 140 people have been snatched from intemperance, converted, transformed through their action" in that single district.

It has been my privilege to take part in about twenty meetings during the past three weeks in thirteen different places in the north-eastern cantons, and the scenes of overflowing spiritual life and joy and power which I have witnessed almost defy description.

On one occasion there was a stream of living, clear, terse, joyous, testimony from about sixty people, speaking indeed out of "the fulness of their hearts." About the half are generally men, most of them strong, solid, sensible fellows. On one occasion five young men and two women, all brothers and sisters, all rose one after the other to testify their father and mother are also saved, and the family is now a shining light in the neighbourhood and much respected. My movements have been closely spied, and during the last ten days several plots were on foot in the cantons of Berne and Neuchatel to assommer me.

The blessing upon our meetings is in proportion to the difficulty of holding them. We have seen some wonderful scenes of conviction and salvation. The work is chiefly carried on in these two cantons by six Swiss officers, full of courage and devotion. Many others are rapidly ripening to become leaders. I thank God from my heart for the privilege of having a share in this hard but glorious fight.—Yours in salvation bonds, A. S. CLIBBORN.

P.S.—Allow me to take this opportunity to correct a misprint in my last letter which you were kind enough to insert. Our central address is 187, Quai de Valmy, Paris, not 127.

HULL.—Mr. Forbes has just concluded a very successful fortnight's Gospel Temperance Mission at Hull. He is prepared to accept invitations for similar work, or for evangelistic meetings only. His address is 71, Windsor-road, Holloway, N.

EXETER EASTER FAIR.—An excellent work was done by the friends engaged in the Exe Island Mission while this fair was going on. Open-air services were held, and in spite of counter attractions, large numbers of pleasure-seekers paid attention to the Gospel message. Some of the exhibitors too, being free on the Sunday, attended a service held in their midst, no kind of opposition being made. The Bible stall, hung with Gospel texts, was erected inside the field, at which, through the kindness of the Religious Tract Society and others, the workers distributed 16,000 tracts. A young gipsy, dying in one of the vans, desired to be prayed with, and for several visits he expressed his gratitude, saying that he was not afraid to die, as he was trusting in Jesus as his Saviour. A similar work will (D.V.) be held at the Agricultural Show to be held in Exeter shortly. Supplies of tracts, &c., may be sent to Mr. William Eccles, Mission-hall, Exeter.

GEMS FROM MR. SPURGEON'S MISSIONARY SERMON

At Exeter Hall, Wednesday, April 30.

I HAVE taken for a text this morning "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." It will be done. In one sense it always must be done. Yet will it cost us pain and sorrow and grief. Let us not only consent that it be so, but acquiesce and even rejoice in tribulations also if the will of the Lord be done.

When we are called to suffer bereavements personally, or when as a Society we see some of our best and most hopeful men taken away, let us bow in the same spirit as our Master did, and still say, "Thy will be done." God knows what is best for his own work. It does seem to us a great waste of human life that man after man should go to the malarious swamps to tell to the heathen the things of the Kingdom, only to die. Why not work a miracle, and cover their heads? It must not be so. We do not quite see the reason. God does not deign to give us reasons, else were there no scope for our faith.

See these great and huge stones brought from the quarry to the edge of the sea. They are thrown into it. Why so much labour? These great masses of masonry might surely have been built into a temple for the Lord. Here they come, still more, and still more, and still more for many a year, and all seems lost and thrown into the sea. It is the foundation of God's causeway through that sea, and blessed is that man that shall make the lowest block of it. Though he seem to be lost, lost only is he to our sight; he hath achieved his purpose, and that purpose shall rise above the waves of obscurity, till we shall see and wonder at what the Lord hath done.

Christ does not teach us to pray for impossibilities; he puts prayers into our mouths that can be heard and answered; but certainly this is a great prayer, a very big prayer. Can earth ever impinge on heaven? Is not it far off, a drifted planet, that has got out of place altogether? Is it not swathed in the dreariest mist? Can any of these swaddling bands be taken from it? Can thy will, O God, be done on earth as it is in heaven? It can be and it must be, for a right prayer is ever the shadow of a coming blessing.

It was so once; it will only be going back to the good old times which ended at the gate of Eden. There was a day when you could scarce know any difference between earth and heaven, for God was in Paradise with Adam, and Adam was in Paradise with God. All things were rightly ordered there, nor had the trail of the serpent as yet defiled anything; heaven and earth sang to the same tune, the hallelujah of the morning and of the evening. We are not going to institute a new order of things. We are only to bring back the old. History shall gloriously repeat herself, and there shall yet on earth be a perfect world with perfect omnipotence, and righteousness shall look down from heaven and behold it with complacency. It will be so at the last.

Verily, I ween that between here and heaven there is but a very slender division if we did but know it. Heaven is much nearer than we think. I question if "the land that is very far off" be a true name for heaven at all. Was it not Babylon that was referred to there? It can not be heaven, for heaven is not far off. We are taught to treat it as a place that is near. "Our Father which art in heaven." Where my Father is, the true spirit of adoption does not permit me to be far away.

They do God's will in heaven universally, without making a selection. Here men pick and choose—take this command to be obeyed, and lay that commandment by as non-essential. And we are all tinctured, more or less, with this odious gall. There is something that we like to do, and therefore we do it. There is some other duty that is hard, and therefore we try to forget it. Oh, it should not be so, but, constantly, from the first dawn of our spiritual being till we lay down our body and our charge, we should be doing everything which we see to be the will of the Lord.

Oh, to do what God bids us, as God bids us, on the spot, and in the moment!

"Ours not to reason why," or ask a single question, but to say with Esther, "If I perish, I perish, but I will go in unto the king." If it be for my country, for my God, I will sacrifice myself right readily without a moment's delay, even as they would do in heaven if such work were asked of them.

We catch ourselves at self-congratulation—oh, so often. We sit down and whisper, "I did that very well." We say to ourselves, "There was no self in that. I did really cast myself on God without desiring my own honour, or trusting in my own ability;" and, while we are laying that flattering unction to our souls, we are lying, as our self-congratulation proves. I do believe that there are some of us whom God might have allowed to do ten times as much, but He knew that it would not be safe. We must not stand on the pinnacle, for our heads are apt to grow dizzy. We must not be permitted to rule a great kingdom, for we should be tyrants if we had the opportunity.

There are two places mentioned in the text that are very dissimilar, are they not—Heaven and Earth? Is there not a likeness between them? I would answer that I think they are much more like each other to the sons of God than they are unlike. . . . "Heaven is a place of rest," says one; "there they rest from their labours." And what is the world but a place of rest? "Why, many other things," say you. "I know it is, because of our fretfulness and unbelief;" but "we that have believed do enter into rest."

Saith one, "But there is the place of perfect service; for 'his servants shall serve Him.'" And is not this the place, in some respects, of a more perfect service still? For there are some things which perfect saints in heaven and holy angels cannot do. If you are to have a choice of a sphere in which you can serve God, choose not heaven but choose earth. There are no back streets and slums in heaven; but there are plenty here. There are no jungles, there are no places where death speedily follows upon service, and therefore you cannot render to God self-sacrifice up yonder; you can render it here, I do believe there are some respects in which this world hath a preference above the heavenly state in this doing the will of God. Oh, that we were but better men, and we might make the saints above envy us! If we did but live as we should live, we might make Gabriel stoop from behind his throne and say, "I wish I were a man;" and make even the glorified wish that they could take part in that supreme conflict which is to-day carried on against the powers of death and darkness.

Do not be so eager to go to heaven. Nay, do not be eager at all. Set very loose by the things of earth; but count it a great privilege to have long life in which long to serve the Lord. It is but a little interval between the two eternities, and if we judged unselfishly and saw what can be done on earth that cannot be done in heaven, we might also say, "Give us back the antediluvian periods that we might serve the Lord in suffering and reproach for his dear sake who did hang upon the tree." But it will be very, very short at the best; therefore let us see to it that we do serve Him on earth as we shall serve Him in heaven.

God's will can never be done where it is not known; therefore in the first place it becomes us as a Missionary Society to pray that the will of the Lord may be known—that we may make known the Gospel in every place. Why is it not made known already? Is it not probably true that the selfishness of Christians is the main reason why Christ is not already known all the world over? If Christianity is to spread in the world at the rate at which it has done, and we are going to give to Christ's kingdom the percentage we have given, I suppose it will require about an eternity and a-half to convert the world, if such a thing can be.

We do not know how much money there is in the custody of God's stewards, and there are some of them not likely to let us know until we read it in the paper, and then we shall discover they died worth so much—that is, in the estimate of the world; but as one reads it with opened eyes, one reads they neither were worth much living nor dead, or else they would not have hoarded up all this when so much was wanted for the spread of the Gospel.

After all, the best rule of life is, what would Jesus do if he were here to-day, and the world still lying in the wicked one? If Jesus were in your trade, if he were in your business, if he had your money, how would he spend it? for that is how you ought to spend it—exactly so.

Brother, sister, you will be in heaven very soon. Since last year a great number have gone home; before next year a great many more will have gone home. Sitting up in those celestial seats, how shall we wish that we had lived below. Let us live a life that will bear the light eternal. Is it life to live otherwise? Is it not a sort of fainting fit, a coma, out of which life may not quite have gone, but all that is worth calling life has oozed away, unless we are every day doing that which will last, will outlive the last fires, and will appear before the judgment seat of God?

If I may have moved any person here to feel "I will live so," I have not spoken in vain. I have at least stirred myself with this intense desire to cast off all the parings, and outsides, and wastes, and husks of life, and just to let the real kernel be my one care. Thy will by me be done on earth, as yet, my Lord, I hope to do it in the skies. May I begin here what I can perpetuate into eternity.

Hopeful Signs in France.

SIR,—Not unfrequent mention is made in your columns of the absence of religious feeling in France, and I fear the statements are only too true. There is, however, a redeeming point which should, I think, be brought to the attention of your readers, namely, the eagerness with which women of the labouring and artisan classes and small shopkeepers receive the Bible. I have resided for the last two winters in a town in the south of France, containing some 30,000 inhabitants, and find that whilst amongst the men there is utter carelessness, it is not so with the women. A very considerable proportion of these feel strongly the emptiness of the Roman Catholic faith, the hollowness of its forms, and the absurdity of services of which they understand nothing.

Many of this class are very exact in the performance of the forms enjoined by their Church, such as masses, alms, fasting, &c., but they feel how unsatisfactory they are. One of them actually said, "Notre réligion n'est pas sérieuse;" another, who had attended a Protestant funeral, was perfectly astonished at the reality of the service, and to find that the prayers used were such as she could join in, and which enabled her to hold personal communion with God.

I find that confession is strongly disapproved of by many; that purgatory is believed by a large number to exist only in the imagination of the priests, to whom it is such a good friend. With all this, so wedded are the people to the faith in which they have been born, and their old associations, that but few break away.

My object in writing is to urge any of my fellow-countrymen who may be intending to travel in this country, to provide themselves with copies of the Gospels. I am not exaggerating when I say that these Gospels will be received with avidity, and in many cases read with great attention. Gospels can be bought for ½d. each; better ones for 1d. Children's tracts (with very nice pictures, taken from Chatterbox or Children's Friend) may be obtained from the Librarie Française et Etrangère, 204, Rue de Rivoli, Paris, and they are very welcome to the young people. Surely those who are about to visit this country will not grudge a corner of their portmanteau to convey to those who are in such darkness, but who are seeking for light, the Word of Life. S.

With the Army in Egypt.

WE subjoin a few extracts from the letter of Mr. S. Gillespie Prout, written from Suakin, referred to in our last. At the close of his communication he says that he will thankfully receive any help that Christian friends may send him for the expenses incurred in connection with his Mission in Egypt. Letters may be addressed to him at Northfield, Ilfracombe.

Having described his arrival in Egypt, Mr. Prout says he lost all chance of ambulance work through the delay in receiving his surgical appliances. He was also greatly hindered by officialism, that is not over fond of the presence of "free lances."

"At Suez I experienced much friendly and hospitable kindness from some of the P. and O. Company's officers. Obstruction was more rigid than ever. At every step I caught my foot in 'Red tape' of the most unyielding texture, my wish to be of service in any capacity being evidently regarded as conveying disparagement of the completeness of official arrangements and the zeal and devotion of all connected with the service. During a stay of a little over a week at Suez, in the hope of getting an opening for work, I visited the camp two or three times, but ascertained that no access to the hospital tents could be permitted to me. A Protestant chaplain belonging to the Wesleyan body, who had recently been appointed, evidently an earnest-minded young man, who cared more for soldiers' souls than for their salutes, gladly accepted from me for distribution several hundreds of the books which I might not myself give away to the sick and wounded men.

"A very interesting opportunity was permitted me during my six days voyage down the Red Sea from Suez. We had on board the crowded Egyptian steamer about eighteen men from the 10th Hussars, 65th, and 89th, who had been wounded in the affairs of Teb and Tamai; had been in hospital at Suez, and were returning to Suakin to join a home-bound troopship. We had a nice little deck service on the Sunday afternoon, and some pleasant talks together, and all were pleased to accept books. I came to Suakin in the full expectation of finding work among some 4000 of our men, having been assured that such a force would be retained here for some time, a then expected expedition towards Berber, in aid of Gordon being a strong added inducement. On our arrival, however, we got the news that nearly all the troops would be sent away, and that the others would shortly follow, all idea of further operations till the fall of the year having been abandoned."

Mr. Prout, however, found some weeks' quiet service at Suakin in visiting the troops, and holding services in his "Arab house."

"In the middle of one of them we had a fresh and most welcome arrival, the chaplain of H.M.S. Briton, who was delighted to come in for our little gathering of 60th men, joining heartily in the hymn. His frank, happy, earnest manner was a most refreshing contrast to my recent experiences. After this month there will, so far as I can at present see, be nothing here for me to do. My subsequent movements must be shaped by events and opportunities. I shall (D.V.) return home vid Malta, having left at Suez a considerable number of my books for distribution there and elsewhere. I have given away a good many Arabic Gospel picture cards and tracts, with a few entire Gospels, and have found them most willingly accepted. I was greatly struck by the eagerness with which they were received, indeed solicited, in the Bazaar of Jeddah, where I spent a day, a town which as the port of Meccah, is regarded as one of the most fanatical places in the East."

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.—The Canadian Government has shown its good sense by vetoing a measure recently passed by the British Columbia Legislature prohibiting Chinese immigration. On the announcement of this action by the Dominion Parliament the Premier of Columbia telegraphed to his provincial secretary to allow the 500 Chinese who had been kept on board their ship at Victoria to land.

St. Peter's Greenwich Church Mission.

REV. F. STORER CLARK writes that our correspondent who sent the second report of this Mission in our last was mistaken on various points. He speaks in high terms of the Missioner, Dr. Morris, of the Church Parochial Mission Society. Mr. Storer Clark thus concludes:—

"We must close with the expression of our deep thankfulness for the results of the able services of Dr. Morris, and also of the 'Mission lady' who conducted the women's meeting each afternoon, helped at the after-meetings, and visited the homes of those who through age or sickness were unable to attend. That God's blessing signally rested upon their labours was testified to by the eighty-eight who have applied for memorial cards. Several say that for the first time they have accepted Christ; others were restored from backsliding; many were raised out of doubts, inconsistencies, and negligence to a happier, holier, and more devoted life."

An Infidel's Prayer.

THE following incident has just been related by a minister, whose veracity will not be questioned by any one who knows him. It occurred under his personal observation, and hence it is not a story manufactured to illustrate a point. He has no objection to the use of his name, nor would he hesitate to give the name of the person who was most concerned. He is ready also to furnish the precise date and locality of an event in the history of a young man, that speaks in thunder tones to those who deliberately make light of God and of his Word.

This young man, just entering upon the practice of medicine, had become a scoffing infidel through the reading of Ingersoll's wretched books, and other vile productions of hell. He seized every opportunity to pour forth a tide of shocking blasphemy against Christ, and held up the Bible among his companions to coarse and obscene ridicule. At length he went so far in his desperate wickedness that he uttered a wilful lie, and perpetrated a monstrous fraud, in order to express his contempt for Christianity. He pretended to be converted, and asked permission in a meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association to confess the Lord Jesus publicly by leading in prayer.

Of course his request was gladly granted, but meanwhile he had prepared a prayer addressed to the Unknown God. It was filled with horrible irreverence and thoughtfully planned insult of the Saviour. Spreading the manuscript before him on a seat, he kneeled down, and commenced to read his ribaldry, when his voice was suddenly hushed, and his body was heard to fall upon the floor. The young men who were present hastened to him, but found that he was dead, and in unspeakable awe they carried forth the corpse, the ghastly pallor of the face and stony stare of the eyes haunting them, as they bore all that was left of the scoffer to his home.—The Truth.

MESSRS. F. AND T. E. MURPHY have been conducting Gospel Temperance meetings at Freeport, U.S. Mr. T. E. Murphy received a very cordial welcome on his return from this country, and his stirring addresses to the people of Freeport are highly spoken of by the local press. We wish a hearty Godspeed to father and son in their labours among their own people.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.—The friends of this Mission held their quarterly conference on Wednesday, April 30, at the Institution, St. George-street, London Docks. From statements made by Rev. G. J. Hill and a number of the workers, it appears that for extent of work and encouraging results, the past three months surpasses any like period in the Society's history. At three of the Society's Bethels and Sailors' Rests increased accommodation is needed, owing to improved attendance. Help is needed to carry on the work of this Mission. Bags, Bibles, books, and tracts will be acceptable, and can be sent to the offices, 237, Commercial-road, E.

Evangelistic Notes.

EXETER.—Many souls are being brought to Christ through the preaching of Rev. W. Richards, of Bedford Church. A united prayer-meeting is held every Tuesday in the Athenæum.

MOTHERWELL, N.B.—Mr. W. D. Dunn, evangelist, is here, conducting a series of meetings in the Home Mission Hall, which is filled, and the Lord is saving souls every night, and Christians receiving much blessing. As the meetings are to be continued, will your readers remember us specially in prayer? THOMAS MYSE.

HOCKLEY.—Mr. Harris, of the Evangelisation Society, has held a fortnight's services in the Wesleyan Chapel, which have been well attended and greatly blessed. Many souls have been saved, three of them over seventy years of age. Eight have already given in their names to join us in church membership.

ESSEX.—A ten days' Mission has been held at Thorp-le-Soken, by the Rev. A. R. D'Arcy, of the Church Parochial Mission Society. Large congregations assembled day after day to hear the message of salvation faithfully and lovingly declared to them, and we believe that the power of the Lord was present to heal. No effort made of late years for the spiritual good of the inhabitants has met with such results, and many have thankfully acknowledged the blessings they have received.
A. H. RUMBOLL, Vicar.

MR. OPIE RODWAY AT SYDENHAM.—The visit of this evangelist to the Gospel Hall on the last Sunday in April will long be remembered by many. Several came seeking the Saviour, and before they left rose and testified to the blessing received. A young man at the close of the afternoon meeting reminded Mr. Rodway of a service he had held ten years ago, where as a boy he had found peace under his preaching. "I was determined," he said, "to find you when I heard you were coming to Sydenham, and to cheer you on your work by telling you what a blessing I received." Mr. Rodway hopes to pay us a second visit at the end of May. D. BURTON.

PONTYPOOL, MONMOUTHSHIRE.—Mr. Opie Rodway's recent visit to Mount Pleasant Chapel in this town was much blessed. On Sunday evening, April 27, during a solemn and impressive service, the first batch of converts were publicly admitted to the church, numbering thirty-one adults, most of whom are in the prime of life and a few far advanced in years. Many more candidates for membership are waiting to be received. All hearts are rejoiced; Sunday-school teachers by seeing their scholars turn to God, parents by beholding a radical change in their children. One of those admitted has completely lost the taste for strong drink, though he has been its slave for thirty years. T. L. I.

GREENOCK, N.B.—A series of meetings have been held in the East-end of this town by Mr. James Moodie, which have been attended with great blessing, in the school-room of Rev. P. Thomson's Free Church. This was the first attempt which has been made to hold such services, but the large attendances showed the interest which was felt, and many souls professed to be born again. A foreman in one of the work-yards was heard to say, "I don't know what's come over my men; they do nothing but talk about finding Jesus, or wishing they had found Him." Many encouraging cases have come under the notice of the promoters of the work, who are filled with joy at such abundant answers to their prayers.

GOSPEL TENT WORK.—We are preparing to start on our eleventh year of Gospel-tent campaigning. A new marquee is being made, with wooden sides and canvas roof (extra strong for standing the gales), to be erected on the same site occupied for five summers, adjoining the New Esplanade, Weston-super-Mare. Another is preparing for the miners of the Welsh valleys, to be worked by our brother David Jones, who preaches in Welsh and English. We hope to have seven tents in constant use during the coming season, three large ones for the towns, and four smaller ones for the villages. Applications are daily coming in for tent services in spiritually dark and destitute neighbourhoods. I ask the prayers of your readers that all needful guidance, help, and blessing may be vouchsafed.

REV. DR. PARKER, of the City Temple, is suffering from overwork, and has taken a short sea trip in order to recuperate, before he fulfils his duties as Chairman of the coming meetings of the Congregational Union.

Notices of Books, &c.

Mr. Moody's Text, "I will trust and not be afraid," beautifully printed in five colours and gold (14 in. by 10½ in.), is issued by Mr. John G. Wheeler, 38, Maldmay Park, N. 6d.

Garlands for a Royal Grave. Hamilton, Adams & Co. Into this neat volume has been collected a number of sermons delivered by leading preachers on the death of the late Duke of Albany. It is no unworthy memorial of a young life, full of promise, but suddenly cut short.

Miss Graham's "Protegs." By John Strathesk. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. A clever piece of Scottish character sketching from the able pen that some years since delighted the reading world with "Bits from Blinkbonny." It ought to encourage Christian workers among the poor and the ignorant.

A Paper read before the London City Missionaries' Mutual Improvement Association, entitled Our Method in Visitation, has been sent us for notice. It contains many useful counsels to Christian workers, and may be had of the author, Mr. G. W. Morden, 34, Catlin-street, Rotherhithe-New-road, S.E.; price 3d.

Readers of The Quiver for May (6d., Messrs. Cassell & Co.) will be sure not to miss Rev. M. Guy Pearse's short paper on "How to use the Bible." The same number contains an excellent and well-illustrated sketch of Miss Hastings' Whitecross-street Mission, from the pen of Annie Beale.

From Loom to Lawyer's Gown (S. W. Partridge & Co.) is an outline of the eventful career of Mr. Mark Knowles, the well-known barrister and Temperance advocate. It reads like a fairy tale, and shows what can be done in the way of worldly advancement, in spite of exceptional difficulties, by means of integrity, self-reliance, and perseverance, crowned with a simple trust in God.

Sunday Talk. Edited by Rev. W. W. Tulloch. Dunn & Wright, Glasgow. A magazine of general reading, and marvellously cheap at twopence. But we are greatly puzzled about the title. In our young days, the introduction of such light literature into a Scottish Christian home circle on the sacred day of rest would not have been dreamt of.

In the Slums. By Rev. D. Rice Jones. The author of these graphic and veritable sketches of low life in St. Giles' has earned the best possible right to be heard on this burning topic of the time, by himself living and labouring in the heart of the dens and rookeries he describes. He makes a distinct addition to the growing literature of the subject; if many other consecrated workers were to follow his self-denying example there would probably soon be less to write about.

Eastward Ho (H. G. Davies, 73, Ludgate-hill, E.C.), 6d., is a new monthly, designed, says the introduction, "to be a medium of thought between East and West." The articles in the first number are by well-known and able writers, and mainly deal with social questions that have lately come to the front in the discussions about "Outcast London." On the whole, the serial seems to us much more likely to minister to the leisure hours of the West than to the crying needs of the East.

All on the Altar: Memoir of Rowland Lambert. By Rev. R. Leitch, Newcastle. 1s. J. Nisbet & Co. Rowland Lambert, of Newcastle, well known to all evangelical Christians in the North as an earnest and successful winner of souls, was taken to his rest in the end of July last, and many mourned his loss. In these interesting pages a fellow disciple and servant has recorded something of Mr. Lambert's busy and beneficent life. His active labours in the Temperance reform would alone entitle him to the most grateful recollections of the community in which he lived. It could be truly said of him, "his all was on the altar."

The series of admirable lectures delivered to young men at Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. by Dr. Sinclair Paterson several years ago, and published in three vols., are now issued by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, in one handsome and tastefully bound volume, entitled, Life, Function, Health, 3s. 6d. We know not where else there can be found, within the same compass, and in an equally popular and attractive setting, such a body of valuable information and teaching on the physical aspects of our complex human life. Cheap editions of the separate volumes, "Studies in Life;" "The Human Body and its Functions;" "Health Studies;" can also be had (1s. each).

The A.B.C. Church and Chapel Directory, 2d.; Banks, Racquet-court, Fleet-street. We welcome another edition of this most comprehensive and useful compilation. Besides containing a complete catalogue of the May meetings, it gives lists of clergymen and ministers throughout London, thus rendering it of permanent value.

We have also received the following:—

Mission and other Appeals.

The Seaside Orphans' Rests at Dover are in want of funds to carry on their work, which aims "to provide change of air for the inmates of orphanages and homes in and around London."—Mr. Thomas Blackman, 8 Biggin-street, Dover.

Longacre Mission, Aberdeen.—Funds are required to aid this work, which is unsectarian, and seeks by Sunday-schools and other evangelistic work to bring the Gospel to all classes. Secretary: Mr. John Cairnie, 26, Hill-street, Aberdeen, N.B.

Bohemia, St. Leonards.—In this difficult neighbourhood the Lower-road Mission puts forth earnest endeavours to reach the people by means of Gospel and Temperance services. Donations and tracts will be gratefully received by Mr. J. H. Meredith, 19, South-road, St. Leonards.

The Cornwall Home, Falmouth, provides for destitute little girls who, through the misconduct or poverty of their parents, are thrown early on the streets. Articles of food and clothing, or any other assistance, will be gladly received by Mrs. Hugoe, 1, Claremont-terrace, Falmouth.

Gospel Hall, Sydenham.—This Mission embraces open-air and in-door services, temperance meetings, a coffee tavern, and benefit clubs for sick men and women. All these cause expense, and friends willing to help in defraying it may communicate with Mr. J. Haine, Acton Villa, Devonshire-road, Forest-hill.

Holloway Evangelistic and Open-Air Mission.—For twenty-one years Mr. H. Puiterill has devoted his time to visiting the sick and dying, holding Gospel and Temperance meetings in and out of doors, and visiting regularly the common lodging-houses. During the winter months free breakfasts have been given to the poor and destitute, to whom also the Gospel was preached. The Mission owes £25, for which amount, together with the regular expenses, outside help is needed, the members being poor working people, many of whom are quite unable to give any pecuniary help.—301, Holloway-road.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on a series of special evangelistic services at Mornington Hall, Hampstead-road, N.W., during the month of May.——For a three weeks' tent Mission at Warninglid, Sussex.——For blessing on a Mission at Carlinghow, in Yorkshire, May 10 to 23, by Rev. R. D. Monro.——For blessing on evangelistic meetings at Stornoway, conducted by Rev. George Campbell.——For a Mission at Gloucester to May 18, by Mr. John Elliott, of the Evangelisation Society.——For blessing on special services from May 24, in a tent and Trinity Hall, Stewart's-road, Battersea, by local ministers and known evangelists.——For blessing on Exeter, and specially that the Athenæum may be filled every Tuesday with a praying and believing people.——For full and rich grace to be bestowed during the Conference at Newport, May 14—16.——For a three weeks' Mission conducted by Mr. Cooper at Coatbridge, N.B.——For Mission week services in United Presbyterian Church, Airdrie, N.B., beginning on the 12th inst.

SECOND ADVENT CONFERENCE.—We remind our readers of the Conference on the Second Advent, in the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, S.W., next week, Wednesday to Friday May, 14, 15, and 16.

TENT WORK AT SOUTHSEA.—The winter months leave behind them many rich tokens of Divine blessing in this neighbourhood in leading many souls to Jesus; as the summer approaches we are reminded of happy service in our tent-work during the past three years. We hope to go forth again in this important work on Southsea Common, where large numbers flock every evening for exercise and pleasure. Many will often come into the tent who probably do not hear the Gospel elsewhere, and permission having been kindly granted us again by the authorities, we feel it an opportunity not to be lost. I have been often thanked by strangers in the streets, and by others in house-to-house visitation, who by these services have been brought to their Saviour. Soldiers and sailors, too, have in this way received blessing, and are, we hope, receiving testimony in distant lands. Our tent last year was spoiled by the strong gales, and rendered unfit for the exposure of Southsea Common. We have now a much stronger one, capable of seating about 400 people. We hope to commence on the 18th inst., and to continue through the summer, preaching every week evening, and twice on Sundays. John Denning.

Inglis-road, Haverlock-park, Southsea.

THE ANCHORAGE MISSION.

THE ANCHORAGE HOUSE, Regent's Park, N.W. THE MISSION HALL, Queen Anne's Gate, Westminster.

Committee—George Hanbury, Esq.; Rev. H. E. Fox; Colonel Stuart Wortley.

GOSPEL MISSION AND PREVENTIVE WORK.

In addition to the Sunday and Week-day Services, Sunday Schools, Mothers' Meetings, &c., in the Mission Hall, Classes are now held for the instruction of young girls of various ages in the truths of the Gospel, and for teaching them sewing, cutting out, mending, and other such things as may be useful to them in their various positions in life.

Bible Classes for domestic servants, young women in houses of business, and others, are being arranged. All classes are conducted by Ladies.

RESCUE WORK.

The Anchorage House meets a great and acknowledged want, in sheltering respectable young women who have been led astray. Many and many a poor creature, now sunk in the sinful life of our great cities, might have been saved had such an opportunity come before her in the early days of her sin.

Special Mission Services are held from time to time for women living in sin.

The whole work of the Mission is directed towards producing a clear and definite change of heart, through simple belief and trust in the Atoning Blood of the Lord Jesus Christ. The work accomplished during past years shows that the blessing of God rests on what is done with that view only.

The expenses are necessarily heavy, and an earnest appeal for assistance is made to those who sympathise with work carried on on the lines indicated above. No debt will be incurred, and the work done can therefore only be in accordance with the funds sent in from outside sources, in aid of that found by the Members of the Committee and their friends.

Papers, containing a full account of the work of the Anchorage Mission, including suggestions as to the way found wisest by experience to overcome certain difficulties found in dealing with young women about to become mothers, and rules for admission to the Anchorage House, will be sent on application by letter (not post-cards), to Mrs. H. Stuart Wortley, President of the Ladies' Committee, Rosslyn House, Grove End Road, N.W., to whom, to any Member of Committee, or Messrs. Morgan & Scott, subscriptions, which are much wanted now, may be sent.

This Society was established in 1860 for the reception of the less degraded class of penitent young women. Young women are admitted on any day, and coming from any quarter whatsoever, if there be room and funds. Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied. A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women before they become mothers, as are unfitted from their previous good character and position to mix with others. The applications for admission are painfully urgent. Funds are greatly needed.

Letters to the Editor.

THE GOSPEL AND THE SECOND ADVENT.

Dear Sir,—The difficulty felt by your correspondent "S. B.," and noted by you as "A Query," arises out of the unauthorised putting together of two passages. There is no one passage where it is said, (1) "Proclaim the Gospel in all the world, for (2) until that is done the end cannot come." (1) The command is given at the close of Matthew and Mark; "Go ye, therefore, and teach [make disciples of] all the nations" (Matt. xxviii. 19). "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel in all the creation" (Greek). "He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved" (Mark xvi. 15, 16). "The Christ must suffer, and rise from the dead the third day, and repentance and pardon must be preached in his name among all the nations" (Luke xxiv. 47). (1) Here is the command. But there is no prophecy, or promise, or command that this shall be done before the end comes. (2) The note of time belongs to our Lord's prophecy on Olivet (Matt. xxiv.). Four of his disciples had asked him when the buildings of the temple should be thrown down, and what should be the sign of his coming [presence], and of the end of the age (αιων).

The Saviour tells them, after several other signs: "This Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached (heralded) in all the world, for a witness unto all the nations, and then shall the end come" (Matt. xxiv. 14). (2) Here is a promise, but no command.

Moreover (1), the command is addressed to one of God's two peoples, and (2) the promise to another.

For God has two peoples now on the earth. (1) Jesus' Jewish disciples are to be on the earth when Christ comes, and "to see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven" (Matt. xxiv. 30; Mark xiii. 26; Rev. i. 7).

But the other people are to be "caught up in clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so to be ever with the Lord" (1 Thess. iv. 17). Instead of seeing the Lord in heaven while they are on the earth, we are assured that when Christ appears in his glory in heaven, they are to appear in heaven in glory beside Him (Col. iii. 4).

Signs, then, are given to the earthly people, before the fulfilment of which Jesus will not be seen by those on earth.

But the other people are to be ready at any moment; and no previous signs are to be given. Aknowledge of times and seasons—such as "the end of the age," was not needed by the Church (1 Thess. v. 1). The Saviour is coming as the thief; and the thief purposely abstains from giving notice (Rev. iii. 3, xvi. 15). Believers, under Paul's preaching, "turned from idols to serve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from heaven" (1 Thess. i. 9, 10). They were not to know the time of the Saviour's advent, not even what watch of the night the Master would come (Mark xiii. 32—37; Tit. ii. 11—13). To all his Church—without any previous sign given, it is commanded, Watch! They were to be as servants expecting their Lord's return from the wedding, ready to open to Him immediately as soon as he should knock (Luke xii. 36).

Please to observe also, that there is a difference between "the Gospel of the grace of God," or salvation through faith in Christ, which is now being proclaimed, and "this Gospel of the Kingdom," which is to be proclaimed in that day (Matt. xxiv. 14).* The Gospel of the grace is accepted now by multitudes, who believe not in the coming Kingdom, or the millennial glory of Christ.

There is also a difference between 'the return and coming of the Lord Jesus,' and "the end of the age."

If we do not distinguish between the Lord's two peoples, and the different positions they hold now, and will hold in the coming kingdom, we shall get into much confusion. May we distinguish things that differ (Phil. i. 10—margin).—Yours truly in Christ, R. Govett.

To the query of S. B. in our issue of April 17, we have received several replies, which are substantially summed up in the following extracts, and the letter by Mr. Govett.

"Eboracum" says: "The Scripture testimony is that 'the Gospel must first be published among all nations,' or, as St. Matthew has it, 'This Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a testimony unto all nations, and then shall the end come.' What constitutes a sufficient testimony we know not, for 'of that day and hour knoweth no man.' This we do know, that the Apostles, 'filled with the Holy Ghost,' regarded it as a possible event in their day."

J. W. Tait, also quoting the above passage, asks: "Where is there a nation in the whole world to which the Gospel has not been preached for a testimony? Let the meetings at Exeter Hall during the next few weeks supply the answer."

[Communications have also reached us from Thomas Newberry, H. M., and W. Cyril Andrews, for which we regret we have not space.]

[* This distinction we believe to be unsupported by Scripture. In Acts viii. the preaching is described under six various terms: "The Word" (ver. 4), "Christ" (5), "the things concerning the Kingdom of God" (12), "the Word of the Lord"—"the Gospel" (25), "Jesus" (35). In Acts xx. 24, 25, Paul speaks of his ministry "to testify the Gospel of the grace of God" as having been fulfilled by his "preaching the Kingdom of God." In the fundamental parable of the Sower (Matt. xiii. 19) the seed is expressly defined to be "the Word of the Kingdom." There is only one Gospel, and that is the Gospel of the Kingdom of God, which is a term inclusive of all other definitions of the Gospel.—Ed.

REVIEWS.

"These simple and strong writings hold into the most vivid light especially the following truths; viz. the sphere and power of faith; the certain prevalence of prayer; the particular providence of God; the proposition that nothing is secular which is sacred enough to be mentioned to God in prayer; the necessity of continual labour for Christ; the vital importance of seizing opportunities to do good, and to illustrate in the life the difficult and Christly graces of forbearance, forgiveness, and that charity, or love, which literally 'beareth all things.' By various arguments, by numberless touching and startling incidents, these truths are brought to view. There is something in the revelation of such implicit confidence in God and His writter word that staggers the philosophy of materialism, and does mightily brace the faith of believers."
The Christian at Work.

"Those readers especially, who by sorrow or suffering are 'shut in' from active service for Christ, and who often lament that they can do so little for Jesus, will find in these books much

SLEEP AND DIGESTION.

How numerous is the class of persons who confess they do not awake refreshed and invigorated, proving that something has impaired or even destroyed the quality and effect of natural sleep! Tested by this rule, healthy refreshing repose is the exception. It is wrong to presume that when sleep is sought as a relief from worry of mind, or pain of body, these conditions necessarily and totally cease to affect the sleeper.

Dyspepsia is a common cause of disquietude. The brain and stomach are in intimate connection with one another through the medium of the sympathetic system of nerves: when any undue irritation is set up in either of these organs it is transmitted from one to the other. Any disturbance in the stomach, such as may result from overloading, or from indigestible food, causes irritation, which is reflected thence to the brain, stimulating the vessels. Anything which excites the cerebral circulation is antagonistic to healthy repose.

Everyone now believes that digestion is performed in its integrity during the day; the reflex action of an overloaded stomach on the brain at night may be just that desirable stimulus which is legitimate during the day, but which acts as an excitant when the brain should be soothed to rest at night. Work and nutrition for body and mind by day; rest and refreshment, both physical and mental, by night: these processes should be as far as possible carried on simultaneously. Such harmony of the system constitutes health. The state of rest called natural sleep is not, therefore, so much one of repair as a state in which chemical and vital changes are produced, and the worn-out materials eliminated from the system generally, both in the brain and cerebro-spinal system.

All natural processes are more effective than any artificial means of man's contriving. We have noticed some—and admitted that there are many — imperceptible causes of mental and physical unrest; and we think it is not beyond our power to conceive the possibility that a remedy of like undefinable and impalpable character may possess a power to cope effectually with these unseen causes; such gentle and invigorating influences—silent and beneficent—continually surround us. Where diseases have been induced by an abnormal condition of the nerves, no medical compound or agent—together or separate—can so potentially affect the restorative powers towards an equilibrium, or harmony of the physical economy, as the unseen and imperceptible influence of the Odo-Magnetic force. It supplies the surest, simplest, and most effective method of preparing the nervous system for refreshment at night.

"I have much pleasure in testifying to the benefit I have derived from your treatment. For two years, previous to my adoption of it, I had suffered severely from indigestion; night after night intense pains in my chest and stomach, preventing me from sleeping, and compelling me to rise from my bed and walk the room for hours. I have now been under your treatment nine months, and I am happy to state that I enjoy refreshing sleep, and am free from aches or pains of any kind. I may add that I am now in the 62nd year of my age."

On receipt of particulars of any case, in which advice is sought, the fullest information will be given, and the required treatment suggested, gratuitously, by Mr. B. COPSON GARRATT, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-sq., London, E.C.

Mission Work in South-East London.

OUR FREE TEA FUND.

Thanks to many kind friends, the Free Tea on Easter Monday was such a grand success, we intend giving another on Whit-Monday, if the many readers of The Christian, who have not yet sent us 6d., will do so for this object. Some of the subscribers were present, and expressed great joy at the sight. I only ask a visit, and I am sure of the help I need. The work is of God. Sixty-one new members have joined the Mission since Jan. 1. Surely the Lord is with us—to Him be all the glory. Thirteen children out of the Sunday-school have also joined the Mission Church.

For the Free Tea on Whit-Monday I ask every reader to send 6d. I shall invite 300 persons, the cost will be £7 10s. Please give me your kind assistance. I often wish I had the money without asking you to give it, but that is only pride, "Ask, and it shall be given you."

I want to thank very heartily the friend who sent me £10, Y. Z. A. God bless you. Also J. C. for £5 off our debt. These gifts reduce the debt to £475. How I wish the Lord would inspire those who read this to do the same; it would strengthen me in this up-hill fight. But we shall get all we need; the promise is that of God. I am not afraid. I make known our wants, and the Lord will provide.

SUNDAY SCHOOL EXCURSION.

Our next struggle will be for a day in the country for the poor. This, I think, is the great day of the year. I enjoy it myself as much as the children and the poor. To see other people so happy, and the dear children shouting and singing in the green fields, after the continual gloom of their lives, must be a boon to all. Bear in mind, kind readers, that it is more blessed to give than to receive. Between £25 and £30 will enable this humble outing to take place.

BAZAAR, BAZAAR, BAZAAR.

Dear Lady Friends, please to remember the 30th June, my birthday, and try and send a Parcel, if ever so small, to cheer me. We have been trying to get the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon to open this year's Bazaar, but he cannot undertake the task, so we must try again. It is hard work to obtain a distinguished man to find time to devote himself to so humble a cause, yet Mr. Spurgeon has been a good friend to us, for he gave us £40 on a previous occasion. I often laugh in reading about weddings; if a young lady worth a thousand a year gets married she gets a gold watch, but a poor girl is lucky to get anything. So with Mission work. We hear much about the Bitter Cry of London, but many that cry fail to help; and yet we shall gain the day, for the Lord is on our side. Aprons and Underlinen always sell well.

COLLECTING CARDS FOR 1884—OR, DAY IN THE COUNTRY CARDS,

Will gladly be sent to any who will undertake to collect for our Mission. Come or send any Sunday or Tuesday, as this is the best time. Sunday services, 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. Open-air service, 6. Prayer-meeting, 8.15. Tuesday, Band of Hope, 6. Service, 8. We have other meetings nearly every night, but always on days stated.

LEFT-OFF CLOTHING FOR THE POOR.

Please turn out your boxes, the cold Easterly winds will soon be gone, and send us all your cast-off clothing. Our poor people will be so glad, and God will bless you for considering the poor. Remember, "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord."

EXTRACT FROM ONE OF MR. SPURGEON'S REPORTS.

"In Gordon-road, Peckham, our student, Mr. Linnecar, an earnest Evangelist, fresh from the sea, has gathered a people together, fitted up an arch with his own hands, and formed a Church. Here is the nucleus of a hopeful community, which may the Lord multiply exceedingly. We confess that our joy is great when we see the working people drawn to attend the means of grace, and to take an interest in extending the Redeemer's kingdom. Men like Mr. Linnecar seem to gather a congregation better than some of those who are more refined, but have less energy. A railway-arch is a poor makeshift, but if the Lord will give his blessing, though the beginning be small, the latter end will greatly increase. Mr. Linnecar does a great deal of open-air work."

This report was written by one of the best friends I ever had, for Mr. Spurgeon gave me two years in the College and £40 when we opened this Mission after leaving the Railway-Arch.

Thanks to all those who have helped us with Money and Parcels of Clothing.—Yours gratefully,

HOW TO USE THE BIBLE.

By Rev. Dr. MONRO GIBSON.

AN ADDRESS TO YOUNG CONVERTS, AT FLEET-ROAD HALL, HAMPSTEAD.

I HAVE been asked to speak to-night to those who have taken the first step in the Christian life—who have come to Christ and accepted his gift of life. This is the first and most important step of all; if there are any here who have not yet taken that step, I call upon you to take it now. The Lord Jesus is waiting to bestow upon you his gift of eternal life. Will you not have it now?

Next in importance to life comes something to eat. Everything that lives eats; and, though life is more than meat, it is not much without it. When our Lord said, "Is not the life more than meat?" He did not mean us to think little of meat, but He meant to assure us that, having given the life, He would also give that which supports it. God does this for all his creatures in nature. He does it also for his children in the Kingdom of Grace. He has provided plenty for us to eat. Here it is (holding up the Bible), and right good food it is. Jeremiah said: "Thy words were found, and I did eat them; and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart."

There are other books besides the Bible that have spiritual food in them; but this is the great Storehouse. This is the original joint, and it is a great deal better to do your own carving than to take any number of made-up dishes, however good they may be. The Bible itself, then, ought to be the main support of your spiritual life; therefore, I hope nothing more is necessary in order to show the immense importance of using it rightly. Your growth, your comfort, your vigour, your health, your very life itself, depend on the use you make of it. May God teach us all how to feed upon his Word, so as to grow steadily, and become glad and strong and useful Christians.

The first advice I have to give is this:—

BE SURE YOU KEEP UP YOUR APPETITE.

A good appetite for breakfast is a grand thing. How it sets you up for the day! It is just as grand a thing to have a good spiritual appetite. "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness." Make sure of that blessedness, for you can make sure of it. You cannot always make sure of the other appetite, but you can make sure of this. First, by prayer; for it is God who gave the appetite, and He must keep it up. But, then, we must be in earnest ourselves, or else we shall soon stop praying as well as reading. So the great thing is how to keep up our earnestness.

Your appetite for the Bible will not keep up unless you find it interesting. You may read a chapter day by day as a matter of duty for a while, but that will not continue long. You will never get the good of it, nor will you keep at it unless you find it interesting. Well, when is a book interesting? Sometimes because of its subject. See how everybody keeps reading about General Gordon. Why? Because of the interest of the subject. Now, the subjects of the Bible are the most interesting of all subjects. There is a whole gallery of heroes in it, more or less like General Gordon, and in the centre of it there is the life of the great Hero of all history, with whom no one can be compared—"Jesus of Nazareth."

Sometimes it is the style which makes a book interesting, not so much what is said as how it is said; and we like to read it for the same reason that we like to look at beautiful pictures, because they are works of art. Here, too, the Bible is not one whit behind. Its general style is a model of beautiful, straightforward simplicity, and then, all through it, you will find passages of exceeding beauty and grandeur; so much so, that if they were in any other book than the Bible, our literary men would never be done admiring them.

Other books, again, are read for the interest of the object. Here, for example, is a medical book. There is no interest in the subject except for a professional man. It is very dry; there is nothing attractive in the style. But if you have some terrible disease, and you believe that by reading this book you will find the way to get rid of it, nothing could be more interesting to you. Or, to take a commoner illustration, a bill of fare is very poor reading—very poor reading for the subject or for the style, especially if it be in French; but it is very interesting, notwithstanding, when you are hungry and waiting for dinner. That is the interest of the object.

Now, it is this last interest that we have mainly to depend upon. I do hope you will all get more and more interested in the different subjects of the Bible. I hope you will all see more and more of its grandeur and beauty. But what we have to depend upon to bring us back and back to it is the interest of the object, our longing to get good from it, to get healing for our spiritual diseases, comfort in our troubles, help in our difficulties, and grace to go on from strength to strength, until at last we appear before God perfect in the heavenly Zion. And, remember, if we seek we find, and when we find we are eager to seek again. That is the way to keep up the interest. If ever your appetite begins to fail, be alarmed. Betake yourself at once to earnest prayer, and give yourself no rest until it come back as keen as ever. May God give us each day not only our daily bread, but a great hunger for it!

The next advice I would give you is—

CHOOSE THAT WHICH AGREES WITH YOU.

We do it for our bodies, if we have sense; and why not for our souls? There is "milk" for babes, and "strong meat" for men, in the Word. If you were to feed a baby with beefsteak, and keep at it, the baby would die. But that would not prove that beefsteak was not good to eat. Do not be astonished, then, if you find a good deal in Scripture that you cannot yet digest.

There are hard things in the Bible, but why should you seek them out? That is what the infidels are always doing. They know the hard, dark parts, and nothing else. What would you think of the man who had a good sole or haddock set before him for his breakfast; instead of eating that which was good for him, he insisted upon choking himself with the bones, and then said, "That fish is not good to eat"? Show these sceptics a fine ripe peach hanging on the Bible tree; they stick their fingers into it, and scatter all the juices, until they get at the stone; and then they say to you, "There, is that good to eat?" Never you mind them. Eat you the peach and let the stone alone. You may depend upon it, it is of some use, or it would not be there. The great Pascal, in his "Thoughts," says: "There is as much light in the Scriptures as will satisfy those who love the light; and there is as much darkness as will satisfy those who love the darkness." See that you love the light, and you will get plenty of it. Begin with that which you can digest, and by and by you will be ready for the rest.

Then, there is plain fare in the Bible, and there is what may be called fancy fare.

MAKE SURE OF THE SUBSTANTIALS.

Do not go into very minute details about the Tabernacle and its types, nor dive into the mysteries of the Song of Solomon, until you are well acquainted with Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. Necessaries first, luxuries afterwards. It is all good; but plain, substantial fare—good bread and butter—is what we need first.

This brings up the order of reading. What shall it be? Some people have no order at all. They open the Bible just where it will open, and take any passage that turns up; which is just as if a man were to blindfold himself when he sat down to dinner, and help himself to whatever came first, a spoonful of salt, perhaps, or a mouthful of vinegar. No, no; we must have some order.

Shall it be, then, right on from Genesis to Revelation? That is a very good way to study the Bible; but not the best way to feed on it. Some people think that it does not matter where you are reading so long as it is the Bible. They think a chapter of names in Chronicles is as good as the fifth or twenty-fifth of Matthew. But you may be sure they are mistaken. It is perfectly true that you may sometimes get very sweet picking off a bone; and you may learn very beautiful lessons in some of these chapters of names; but then they are somewhat hard to discover, and certainly you cannot get in such a place what the Americans call "a good square meal," and that is what we want.

Shall it be what is called the "topical" method, taking some topic, such as Faith, Righteousness, and so forth, and searching out, by means of a Concordance, the passages that bear on it! That is a very good way for preparing a Bible reading, and for studying particular subjects, but it requires one well versed in the Scriptures to do it safely. It is very apt to mislead those who do not know much about the Bible. One day my boy came home from school in great glee, saying to me, 'Papa, I have got into 'Miscellaneous.'" "What does that mean?" I said; "I do not understand it." So he brought his book to me, and he showed me how he had gone through addition, substraction, multiplication, and division, and had got into "Miscellaneous," a mixture of them all. Now that was all very well, but supposing the teacher had pitched him right into "Miscellaneous" before he had gone through the others, what a mess he would have made of it!

I hope you will all be able to study the Bible topically, but you cannot do it safely or to advantage unless you are careful to study whole books, especially the more important ones, and know not only the passages that the Concordance finds out for you, but the whole setting of them, what goes before and what comes after, and the bearing they have on the object the writer has in view.

I come back, then, to what I said before, that for those who wish to feed upon the Bible, the best thing is to take first that which is simple, necessary, and substantial; and, happily, what is necessary is also simple and substantial, just as it is in our every-day food. And on this principle the first place must be given to the Gospels in the New Testament and the Psalms in the Old, though we must not, of course, neglect the biographies and histories, the letters and prophecies, of the Old and New Testaments, taking in each case the simpler parts first, and then those that are more difficult.

(To be concluded.)

PAUL'S PARADOX.—1.

By Rev. G. F. PENTECOST, D.D.

"As poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things."—2 COR. vi. 10.

I THINK you will all agree that, except to a Christian, this saying of the Apostle must seem to be an inexplicable paradox. How a man could be "poor yet making many rich;" how he could have nothing and yet boldly declare himself to be the possessor of all things, is a proposition which no unconverted man, I think, could expect to understand. But it is a declaration which every man, who has come into possession of the unspeakable wealth which the Apostle had in his mind when he declared himself to be the possessor of all things, will clearly apprehend.

Of course the Apostle had a very different standpoint from the worldling. The man who lives for this world only, whose back is toward God, and whose vision is bounded by the horizon of time, cannot see how there can be any possessions outside of those things which men ordinarily call property, or of those things which enter into the mere pleasures of the life that now is. Deprive him of these, and he cannot see how there can be anything outside of the things which he has not.

But Paul, as I have said, had a different standpoint. We will suppose him to have been, at this time, a prisoner in Rome: to have been destitute of all those things which the world counts worth having. Yet standing with his feet upon the Mount of Olives, from which the risen Lord ascended into heaven, he could look into the world to come and say, "Though in the world behind I have nothing, yet with reference to myself and to the world to come, I am still the possessor of all things."

Now, we must judge of the value of things by our relation to them. A life-preserver to a man in Oxford-street would not be worth a great deal; but if he were in mid-ocean, on a sinking ship, it might be of unspeakable worth to him. A bag of gold in the hands of a man on a sinking ship, in mid-ocean, would not be worth anything to him, though it might be very valuable in London. We must, therefore, estimate the value of things by the crisis we happen to be in, and by our capacity and our necessity for the things at the time that crisis is upon us. And it is in this direction that we are to explain the text.

What would a palace full of pictures and marble be to a man lying upon a dying bed? What would the most beautiful things in the world of art be to a man who is stone blind? It is the capacity to see that gives a value to things in that case. If the man has no capacity to see, the things which otherwise might be of value are of no account.

What are some of the things which Paul did not have? "As having nothing," he says. We assume that he owned no "real estate." Of course he had no bank stock or railway shares, or any other of those assets of which men of property are possessed in this world. He used to fill a very high position in the State, but he lost that when he confessed Christ as his Saviour. At one time he stood very high in the Jewish Church, but he was cast out from that. In former days he had a good social position, but he was now accounted as the offscouring of all things. He used to be a man of good property, but now he declares that oftentimes he was hungry and in want. In fact, looking at the Apostle as he is presented to us in the New Testament, and as he gives a little sketch of his life in these Epistles, it would be difficult to think of a poorer man in every particular. An outcast from the Church, thrust out of society, a poor preacher, one of a sect everywhere spoken against, oftentimes in prison, frequently having his back raw with the stripes of the Roman lictor, in perils by land and by sea, amongst false brethren, the Apostle's life after he became a Christian seems to have been one accumulation of what we call misfortune, affliction, trial, suffering, persecution, beggary.

Let us go back for a moment to the thought I have already suggested, that the test of possession must after all come to this: What are my supremest needs, and what is my capacity for possession? Man is a very complex being. He has great needs, and a great capacity for possession. One of your English poets says:—

> "Man wants but little here below,
> Nor wants that little long."

It seems to me the grand distinguishing characteristic of man is that he needs so much, and that he has a capacity for so much.

In the first place, see what he needs for the body. Looking at the way in which men, and women too, care for their bodies, you would say the man has almost unlimited capacity for possession in this respect. He can hardly get enough, it would appear, to satisfy his appetite. I do not mean to say that man cannot live on a few very simple bits of food; but, judging from the facts, there seems no end to the capacity of his palate. About the most popular profession in the world is that of a cook. The man or woman who can concoct the greatest number of new and palatable dishes will command about the highest price for their services.

Then take the capacity of man for clothing his body. I suppose, next to the cook, the dressmaker and tailor are most in request. There seems no end to what a man needs in the way of covering his body. Think of how much time is taken up in considering these questions: What shall I eat? What shall I drink? Wherewith shall I be clothed? What shall enter into the mere outside life of man? I suppose if you should go into the homes of the people in this country with fair incomes, you would find that about seven-tenths of the conversation in these families would be about the things that pertain to the mere outside life—eating, drinking, wearing, equipage, furniture, surroundings—that which goes to make up the comfort and pleasure of these bodies of ours.

When you compare man in this respect with other living creatures, you at once see that he belongs to another order of creation. The little bird sits upon the branch of a tree, in the spring time, and sings its song while its mate is building a nest up yonder, in which to lay a few eggs and hatch its young. That is all it wants. I suppose the bird builds the same kind of nest that the same kind of bird built a thousand years ago. But our sons are not contented to live in the same sort of house that their fathers lived in. They want larger and better houses. They cannot begin to be satisfied with the surroundings that their fathers had. So there is a constant pressing on, an enlarged intensity of desire to have newer, better, greater things all the time.

But man is more than an animal. He is an intellectual being. Who can estimate the capacity in the human mind for more knowledge? Look back a few generations and see what our forefathers were possessed of; a few books, a few simple discoveries in science, a very limited range of knowledge, summed up the measure of their intellectual possessions. Our children to-day know about as much, if not more, than the wisest men of science did a few hundred years ago.

And yet man is never satisfied, he has such a capacity for knowledge. "Of making books there is no end," and no cessation; and of the demand for books there is no end and no cessation. Man is not contented with the knowledge that comes in through his unaided vision, with the acquisition of things at hand. He must explore the heavens as well as the earth. When he has looked into the heavens as far as he can, he must call to his aid instruments that will enable him to see beyond the first range of stars. When he has reached the extent of his powers of observation with the help of the telescope, he will sit down and carefully begin to make calculations as to the worlds that are far beyond.

That is not enough. He sees the sunlight streaming down upon the earth, filling it with light and life; he must needs analyse every ray of that light. He is not content to know the position and mutual relation of the planets; he must go to work and weigh every planet. So with the telescope looking upward, and the microscope looking downward, man shows such a capacity for possession on the side of his intellectual nature as we are simply amazed and astonished at.

But man is more than an intellectual being. We have got another nature—a nature largely overlooked by many of us, but one the possession of which cannot be successfully denied by any of us. Man is a spiritual being. He has a capacity for spiritual things and a need for spiritual things. I know there are a great many people now-a-days who deny that there is a distinct nature in man, which we call his spiritual nature; I mean distinct from his intellectual nature. But if a man should know every star by name; if he could analyse every ray of light that proceeds primarily from the sun and secondarily from every planet that reflects it: if man had all knowledge of all things in the universe, it would not give him peace of conscience. There is another nature, beyond his intellectual nature, that cries out for possession. There is a possession needed by man that he has never been able to attain to by his intellect. It is the capacity for forgiveness, for reconciliation, for life, for immortality—for all those things that are brought to view in the Word of God. We cannot resist the conviction that man has a capacity for something else besides that which comes from the feeding and the clothing of his body, and from the adornment of his house, or from books, from the discoveries of all the scientists, and from all the uttermost range of his intellectual powers.

Do you mean to say that never in yourself you have discovered a need which cries out for what we call the forgiveness of sins? Do you mean to say you have never discovered in yourselves a need for being at peace with God? That in all the thoughts you have had about yourself—the involuntary as well as voluntary thoughts—you have never come across, in yourself, a capacity for God Himself? Do you mean to say that in all your life you have never been brought face to face with the thought that when this life is over another life confronts you beyond this life? Why, my friend, these capacities are in us just as really as hunger is in us, as thirst is in us, as a sense of the beautiful is in us, as a consciousness of the capacity to grapple with world problems is in us. We cannot escape from the fact that there is in us something else than physical and intellectual need.

By PASTOR FUNCKE.

A FRIEND of mine, who had thoroughly studied religious life in England, as well as in Germany, once made the following remark: "Many English Christians excite themselves and others into conversion, and are in danger of forgetting the spiritual idea thereof, confining it to certain sacrifices and works, certain forms of conduct and manner. The Germans, on the other hand, often fall into the error of dwelling solely on the development and progress of the inner life, without ascertaining whether conversion really has taken place; and thus they never get to the beginning."

There is undoubtedly some truth in this. At the meetings of the Salvation Army, and at other religious meetings in London which I frequented, I was amazed to hear people speaking from the platform, saying, in quite a matter-of-fact way, "This day fortnight I was saved," just as if we would say, "Yesterday I took a bath, and had a good wash." I know very well, however, that we find the same thing in certain parts of Germany. Thus, a milkmaid from Wrepperthal will tell us, with a face radiant with joy, "Yesterday, while milking the red cow, I became a Christian;" and a lad can tell to the minute how he was converted by Mr. M.'s prayer at the missionary meeting.

But even supposing that something really has been wrought in their hearts, and that it has not been only a delusion of the senses, it still remains a great and fatal error for those dear people to speak as if everything now had been accomplished. For, at the best, the seed out of which the whole thing is to grow has but just been received into the soil. What English dissenters (not to speak of the Salvation Army), and those Germans who have been influenced by Methodistic agencies lack, is insight into the organic nature of the Christian life, and how it is developed by gradual growth—a fact that was always strongly accentuated by our Saviour himself.

It is a great deal worse, however, when good people take it necessarily for granted that they have been converted. Not even ministers—nay, not even the most orthodox clergymen—are to consider this a matter of course. To be sure, when I was a child, I never questioned but that every clergyman was a true Christian. But this was a childish supposition, and "when I became a man, I put away childish things." Conversion is never a matter of course. The unconverted state is so, seeing that conversion never is effected through, but against, the old nature. A man may be converted without being able to state the time and the place, without having passed through a strongly-marked inner crisis; but the great change of the new birth must have taken place in his life in some way or other, or he cannot be truly converted.

At the time of the Apostles the conversion of any man was no doubt a much more apparent thing than is generally the case with us. The changed lives of those who became Christians from having been Jews or heathens, was so evident that the most shortsighted could not help seeing it. But even to-day it is true of the converted, "Ye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned to the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls." We must personally experience the transforming power of grace. The axis of our life, our entire way of thinking, our disposition, our views in all worldly matters, must become altered; and above all we must live for eternity. We must separate from the spirit of the time and the world. This separation may be brought about gradually, perhaps by slow degrees in the course of a long period, but it must take place.

And it makes no difference whether you belong to "the good" or to the "bad characters," whether you have been a respectable man all your life, or have sunk down to the level of the criminal. Peter and John had to repent as well as the thief on the cross; Mary of Bethany no less than Mary Magdalen. In those who have formerly been leading a life of notorious wickedness, the change wrought by their conversion will of course become a palpable thing to all the world. The soldiers of the Salvation Army who, perhaps, a fortnight ago were drunkards, thieves, and whoremongers, will have no difficulty in proving that they have been "converted." But even those in whom the eyes of the world see nothing but what is praiseworthy, and more especially those who have a very favourable opinion of themselves, will have to experience an entire revolution, a thorough renewal of their old selves.

No man has peace unless he has received it from above, for no one brings it with him into the world. Hence the great questions: "Have I peace? Have I been converted and born again?" will again and again be brought home to every heart that has not been hardened against the truth. When you ask a man "Have you been converted?" you throw a firebrand into his soul, and he will not easily get rid of it again, even though he may turn round upon his questioner with an air of offended dignity.

On the other hand, I admit that this question is often thrust upon people unwarrantably, and with great want of tact. I recollect how a blacksmith in K——, where I had to preach a sermon on trial, examined me thus, in a pharisaic manner: "Well, Mr. Funcke, you propose preaching at our church tomorrow, but allow me to ask you whether you have brought your certificate of baptism?" That is to say, in other words: "Can you produce proofs of your conversion before the congregation?" And more than once I have been asked across the table at large parties: "Is all well with your soul? Have your sins been forgiven?" It is unwise and indelicate thus with rude hands to penetrate into the sanctuary of the heart, and everyone ought well to consider if he is really called upon thus to interrogate another. But let each and all amongst us put this question, above all questions, to themselves all the more frequently, inexorably, and earnestly.

The power and right of Methodism consists in its ever bringing this question to the front. The weakness of the [German] State Church is in no small measure owing to its having only too frequently placed this great question second to that of orthodoxy. The question of conversion is not an outcome of Methodism, but of the Bible, and strikes down into the very depths of man's conscience. It expresses what is, consciously or unconsciously, the inmost desire of man. But Methodism has too often distorted it, and made it one-sided. Losing sight of the varied and manifold ways and dealings of God in his relations with the soul, it has made conversion of one type or character.

Still, this error must not keep us from recognising the truth that is embodied in it. And this truth has great need of being put prominently forward in our time, when the majority of the educated classes in matters of religion suffer themselves to accept a "liberalism" which does not believe in revelation, and thus runs the risk of falling into a modern pantheistic heathenism, while the bulk of the lower classes, especially in the towns, are sinking into sensual materialism.

It remains a fact that those preachers who paint in vivid colours the great contrast between sin and grace, and most strongly emphasize the word "conversion" and the way to conversion, the necessary difference between the lost and the saved condition, between the world and the Church of Christ, as a rule make the most impression and exercise the greatest influence. And not only amongst the lower classes of society. No; it is written even in the consciences of learned professors and titled men that they are dead as long as they have not passed from death unto life. "From death unto life"—that is the superscription of every life that is deserving of the name.

And this is what all our preaching should aim at bringing about. What we want is a general and thorough-going revival. Alas for the church, if it be true what a noted dissenter once said to me: "Most of the church clergy do not desire a revival. It would give them too much trouble." I will not believe this to be true of the majority of them, but it is sad enough that a really good and clever man should even fancy such a thing.

Let us not warn our people against Methodism before we have appropriated unto ourselves the deep truths it represents. The Church of England was roused from a state of deadness a hundred and fifty years ago by John Wesley, the founder of Methodism. Hence the monument of this once derided and persecuted man has found a place in Westminster Abbey in the midst of memorials erected to the honour of the greatest men of the nation. God grant that he may be acknowledged even amongst us, in spite of what was foolish and extravagant in his doctrines; or rather say (to name a greater man): God grant that we would rightly listen to the Apostle Paul when he puts to us this mighty question, "Have ye also received the Holy Ghost?"

Evangelistic Work in Germany.

THE prayers of all interested in the spread of Gospel truth in Germany are requested for evangelical meetings to be held by Dr. Ziemann, during the latter part of this month, in a remote village of the Prussian Province of Saxony, Branderoda, near Merseburg.

The population, a poor, hardworking people, is entirely Protestant, but, owing to the deadness of the church to which they outwardly belong, they live in complete indifference to spiritual matters. A small work was begun amongst them about ten years ago by the founding of a nursery-school, which, being conducted on Christian principles, has been the means of at least shedding a ray of Gospel light into these poor homes. The parents have, in some cases, acknowledged having learnt to pray by hearing their children repeat the prayers and hymns they learn at the nursery-school. Classes for grown-up girls are also well attended, whilst a Sunday-school, to which the entire youthful population flocked, was put a stop to by the clergyman of the parish, who objects to such "religious innovations" being introduced among his parishioners.

In many parts of Germany, thank God, a change is taking place with regard to evangelistic work. Meetings held by Dr. Ziemann and others in Westphalia and on the Rhine have been largely attended and much blest.

CLIFTON, BRISTOL.—We are asked to state that a meeting for the promotion of holiness and prayer for the sick is held every Friday evening at 7.30 at 1, Cornwallis-crescent, Clifton.

IS EVANGELICAL TRUTH DECAYING?

Reply to "The Spectator,"

By Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES.

IN a speech at the annual meeting of the Baptist Missionary Society, Mr. Hughes said:—

On a recent Saturday I bought a copy of The Spectator—my favourite paper, although I often have to bear much with it on account of its ecclesiastical narrowness and bigotry in its references to Nonconformity. My eye was caught by a remarkable article in this paper, entitled, "The Decay of Evangelicalism in the Church," in which the writer assumed that the Evangelical party was dwindling away. It is no part of our duty to discuss that question to-night; I will only venture to say that that is a statement often made, but which I have never seen proved. It is the popular caprice to disparage the Evangelical party in the Church of England, and to represent the Ritualists as being saints of the first water; but I believe there is exaggeration on both sides. The Evangelical party is not so feeble as some hope, and I am certain the Ritualists are not doing half the marvels with which they are credited. Evangelical churches at Oxford are far more numerous than they were thirty years ago, and the Ritualists have lost their ancient ascendency in the University. I leave that, however, to Churchmen; but there is one point in this remarkable article which concerns you and me.

The writer states the chief reason for the supposed decay in the Evangelicalism of the Church of England is "in the stress which Evangelicals have laid on the doctrine of conscious conversion." Just before I bought that newspaper I had come to the conclusion that this very doctrine of conscious conversion was both your great strength and ours, but I read there that it was the weakness of the Church. If that be a fact, the sooner we reconsider our position the better. The Baptist Missionary Society and the Wesleyan Missionary Society are straining every nerve (and I adopt the language of your own communion, which has been quoted to-night) for the diffusion of the knowledge of Jesus Christ throughout the world—"the conscious knowledge of Jesus Christ as my own personal Saviour"—and if that is a source of weakness, we must alter our tactics altogether.

The writer of that article, indeed, goes on to assume that we, who believe in personal and conscious salvation, hold it also as a necessary article of faith that every man should know the precise time and the precise place of his conversion. What can we say to such astounding ignorance? I stand here to-day as the representative of twenty-five millions of Methodists in all parts of the world, all of whom believe in conscious conversion, and not one of whom believes (to use the language of The Spectator) in the necessity of a conscious conversion at a specifiable date. All that we contend for—you and we in common—is the necessity of conversion, of which, in due time, the really converted man must become conscious. All we care for is that a man should really and unmistakably know that Christ is now his own personal Saviour. Whether he can point to the precise time and place of his first conscious trust in Christ is a very subordinate matter which does not trouble us. Evangelical Christians have never asserted that to know the time and place of conversion is essential to salvation, and yet there are a great many Christians who do know, and can point both to the time and place.

Unless I have been misinformed, about the time I was born, a youth somewhere in Northamptonshire was very much oppressed with the sense of sin, and he went to every chapel in the town, and he found no relief. One day he adopted the very excellent plan of going to the Primitive Methodist chapel, and just as he was entering, the preacher was announcing as his text, "Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else." That boy, whose name was Spurgeon, afterwards said, in the presence of a friend of mine, "I looked, and I was saved." Could The Spectator represent Mr. Spurgeon as a Christian failure because he knew the time and place of his conversion? I will mention another man, a little more to the liking of The Spectator, perhaps—John Wesley, an Oxford fellow, and a clergyman of the Church of England. He knew the time and place of his conversion; it was in this city, in a little meeting at Aldersgate-street, where his heart was strangely warmed within him, and he realised Christ was his Saviour. He went home in a very noisy manner, something like the way in which a member of the Salvation Army would in the present day. Before John Wesley was consciously converted he was a Ritualistic failure, and after his conversion he became the great success that the whole world knows he was. I wish that so eminent a paper, disputing the very fundamental and vital doctrines we maintain before men in all ages, would simply lift up its head out of the heap of speculative sand in which it is hiding it.

There is a very illustrious man of our own day whom The Spectator is never tired of praising—Cardinal Newman, the author of the "Apologia pro Vita Sua," in which he maintains that he was consciously converted. He is also the author of a most remarkable book—an essay "In Aid of a Grammar of Assent"—in which his long contention was that vital Christianity was personal trust in a personal Saviour. We very much regret that Cardinal Newman's teaching is mixed up with so much else that we know to be unnecessary, but the secret of his power is his own conversion; that taken from him, he would be like Samson shorn of his strength. In the Church of England itself when was this doctrine so prominently taught in many pulpits as it is to-day? What is the success of a man like Canon Body? And I wonder whether The Spectator has ever heard of the honoured name of Hay Aitken, who preaches personal conversion? And if, indeed, our Evangelical friends have lost ground at all, it has been because they have allowed Sacerdotalists to snatch out of their hands this mighty weapon of personal conversion which, by God's help, we should for ever wield. The truth is they have succeeded in our own time because they preach, though amid much that is superfluous, the very doctrines which their fathers derided when those doctrines were preached by Robert Hall, and which their fathers persecuted when they were preached by John Bunyan?

Which is the mightiest pulpit—in Europe—in the world—to-day? Whose sermons are more widely read than those of any other man? To what does Mr. Spurgeon owe his astounding pre-eminence except to the unmistakable plainness, the courageous emphasis, and the glowing enthusiasm with which he preaches the necessity of personal conversion and the blessedness of conscious conversion? The Metropolitan Tabernacle is our answer to the strange contention that we have made too much of personal conversion, and if it were necessary to produce any further witnesses I could put my twenty-five millions of Methodists in the box.

It is not necessary to pursue this inquiry further, but, if it were, we might call our friend Mr. Moody, who preaches personal conversion everywhere; and also the Salvation Army, which is a wonderful illustration of what may be done with this weapon. More than two millions of men, chiefly of the working classes, have been brought together in this country by that organisation, and last year alone they raised out of their comparative poverty, nearly £400,000. I should like to see any priest do that with any sacramental doctrine of his. It is evident that the doctrine of grace abounding to the chief of sinners is securing their conscious conversion, and is still the smooth pebble from the brook of truth with which we shall fell Goliath. I think the house is now ready to divide, and go into committee on this bill, and vote ample supplies. Millions of facts are ready to go with us into our lobby, and The Spectator must be left in a hopeless minority.

At Work in the Drome Valley.

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly allow me through THE CHRISTIAN to tell our friends that our present address is Montclar and no longer Verchény? After two years' residence there we believed it best to leave. Verchény has been too hard for us. For the few Christians there we feel deeply, but they believe we are right to leave. An impression that we were agents, if not of the Salvation Army, of another society which paid us some fabulous salary for doing little or nothing, shut up our way, and no denial on our part was believed.

Thank God for faithful friends who have suffered what is hardest for the French to endure—ridicule and contempt—for the sake of the Gospel. Thank God, too, for the little girls and their teacher who have kept close to their Sunday-school, and who, we trust, will still keep it up when we are no longer there.

All looks dark, humanly speaking, for the poor, dark village. A young evangelical pasteur, who would gladly come, and who had won the hearts of most of the inhabitants, has been rejected by the Conseil Presbyteral, by order of the President of Consistory; and a young "liberal" pasteur is to be placed there at the command of the same gentleman. So strong is the objection to the liberal pasteur, that it is possible that he may find only the walls and benches of the temple when he comes. As yet there is delay, and prayer is made continually that a true pasteur, who will feed the flock, may be chosen, but there seems little hope at present—only God is mighty and answers the prayers of his people.

So with doors closing at Verchény and open elsewhere, with pleading calls for help from another valley in sight of Verchény, we decided to change our field of labour, leaving the seed sown to the care of the great Husbandman. This valley is midway between Brest and Saillans, producing many fabriques of silk and paper along the banks of the Gervane, with hamlets and "granges" on the upland slopes and mountain sides. Most of the inhabitants are Protestant, but very few attend worship. We were in the temple at "Paques." It was thronged, but it was sad to hear the pasteur say bitterly, in urging his congregation to stay for the communion, "With far the greater part of you it is the only time in the year you are here."

Our dwelling is about equally distant from several of the hamlets. We did not expect very many at the meeting, but last Sunday we could only thank God for sending so many to hear the word. One widow had walked two hours in order to be present, for, as she remarked to a friend, "if one really wants something and knows where to get it, one does not mind the distance." From all sides come invitations for visits and meetings. Suze, Gigors, Vangelas, Montclar, Mirabel, Beaufort, are all asking for meetings, and if health and strength continue it will be a great joy to carry the Master's message to those who will receive it. Pray that we may speak his words in simplicity and power; pray also for the lonely, timid women who are praying and often weeping at Verchény.—Yours very sincerely, SARAH R. GELDARD.

HOMES FOR THE AGED POOR.—The committee of these Homes recently opened a new Home, No. 9, Minford-gardens, West Kensington-park, which, when filled (as it will be immediately), will contain sixteen new inmates, thus materially decreasing the long list of seventy applicants who have been patiently waiting their turn for admission. Most of those now entering the home have been candidates since 1882. The committee are greatly in need of help to carry on their work of housing 120 inmates, and also to free the seven permanent Homes from mortgage. The hon. secretary is Miss S. A. Harrison, 5, Grandacre-terrace, Anerley, S.E.

OUR SOLDIERS IN EGYPT.

DEAR SIR,—Knowing that many of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN have been praying for our work among the soldiers in Cairo, I ask you if you will kindly find space for a short report of the work and the need.

We arrived in Cairo on March 6, and with the sanction of the General commanding the forces, and the colonels of regiments, began our Mission. We were heartily welcomed by old friends and new, officers and men. Every evening in the different barracks, Gospel and Gospel Temperance meetings were held. The soldiers gathered willingly to hear, and we have to praise God for much blessing. Backsliders were restored; weary, heavy-laden ones found rest. The American Mission, with Dr. Lansing at its head, is a source of great blessing and comfort to our soldiers. Every night the drawing-room of one of those noble missionaries is thrown open to men of all ranks. The lady workers devote all the time they can spare from their own work, to the sick in body and in soul. They visit the hospitals, and night after night try to lead into the right way those who long for better things.

Dr. Lansing has let to the United Temperance Association a place which is open every evening as a Temperance coffee-room. They also give their schoolroom for a Temperance meeting on Saturday night. On Tuesday night a Bible-class is held in it by a Christian officer, when the young believers who have recently been gathered, and those who love the Lord, from all the barracks, come together, to be helped and taught the way of God more perfectly. Will our friends specially remember this class? We found many were out of the way because they had no one to guide them.

There are about 8000 soldiers of all ranks in Cairo. Tempted and lonely, they need help and sympathy. Drink is cheap; the adjutant of a Highland regiment told us a soldier could get dead drunk for a penny farthing. The great curse of our soldiers is drink. The Greeks who keep the low drinking places know, too, women's power over men; they have gaily dressed painted girls, who sit at the doors and cry to the soldiers, "Come in, Johnnie," as they pass by, and often, almost against their will, draw the men by the hand into the houses, where we were told they are "drugged and robbed."

Officers and men ask for workers and help. "Are you going to leave us all to ourselves?" one said, a fine manly fellow, who after many years in the service had found he needed a Saviour. "You do not know how happy it makes one to see a friendly face in the streets of Cairo, and to meet an English lady who will speak to you," said another; while a third bowed his head and nearly if not altogether wept, and when we asked him why, said, "We do not know what we will do when you go away."

One Sunday afternoon we found a soldier amid a crowd of Arabs, Greeks, &c. It was early—about three o'clock—but he had been in one of the shops, and was so drunk he could not stand. The crowd laughed and jeered at his efforts to regain his feet. He was our countryman, and we shared in his shame. As we lifted him to his feet and asked him to let us take him to a cab and drive him to his barracks, his first question was, "Are you a good woman?" "We came from home to tell the soldiers about Jesus," we said. "Then I'll go with you," was his reply.

Army Scripture-readers are wanted. Everybody, anybody, will not do. The soldiers will not listen to one whose life is not becoming the Gospel, but they will give heed to the words that a real, true-hearted servant of God speaks to them. Lady workers are needed. Women have power over soldiers and sailors, a God-given power; they will come to hear her speak, while she can say things to them they would not receive from a man. Her very weakness is her strength and power. A Mission-hall is needed, or Christian home, not a mere Temperance institute. All success to those who open them for the soldiers, but a house is wanted where the tempted and tried will find comfort and shelter, counsel and encouragement, and where hundreds of anxious souls may be led to the Lord Jesus.

In one regiment there were over 300 pledged abstainers, but they had no one to help them and tell them of the Saviour who saves to the very uttermost. So they fell before the cholera epidemic and other trials, and very few have been steadfast. Houses are plentiful enough, but rents are high. A thousand pounds would be needed to take and furnish a house as a Mission-hall or Home. Workers are offering themselves who will gladly spend and be spent for Christ's sake, but money is needed.

Who will come to the help of the Lord against the mighty, and to the help of our gallant soldiers who hold in a far-off land their lives in their hand in the interest of our country or at the bidding of our Queen?

A few people or a few hundreds are shut up in some garrison in the Soudan, and the British soldiers dye the sand with their life's blood to rescue and help them; but Satan is destroying our soldiers' bodies, and is there no one to stand in the gap to help them? The priests, aided by other Chaplains, have shut Christ out of the hospitals, except so far as they tell the soldiers what their duty is.

A missionary who has lived for long years in Cairo, told us there were streets filled with women such as Proverbs vii. warns us of, and "houses that are the way to hell." And strong men have been, and are, being slain by them. The Lord has laid it upon us to help and deliver them. "If thou forbear to deliver them that are appointed to die, doth not He that pondereth the heart consider it?"

REV. E. P. HAMMOND AT WORK.

A VERY successful series of Gospel meetings has been conducted by this well-known evangelist at Dansville, New York. The local paper reports them at some length, and in terms of the warmest appreciation. On one occasion, it says, "Mr. J. F. Tuller, of Hornellsville, added the strength of his influence and voice to the movement. Mr. Tuller a few months ago was a confirmed atheist, working with free-thinkers and unbelievers against Christianity; but made a change at the revival under Mr. Hammond at Hornellsville. In well-considered words and easy address he told the story of his conversion, and the joys and revelations it brought—a story as marvellous as it was irrefutable."

Three meetings per day were held, besides open-air efforts when the weather was favourable. Short visits were also paid to some of the neighbouring places. Mr. Hammond seems to have the faculty, so largely developed by Mr. Moody, of gathering around him a goodly band of willing and earnest helpers.

The following testimony to the value of the work is from the pen of Dr. James C. Jackson, Consulting Physician of the Dansville Sanatorium:—

"I have attended every meeting he has held but one, and have not 'taken a nap' at one. With eyes wide open, with ears on the alert, and with mind keen and active and perceptions clear and precise, I have studied the effects of his 'sayings and doings' upon the large numbers who have gathered day and night to hear him, and I submit the following:

"(1) Upon the clergymen who have attended his meetings, and who are pastors of churches in Dansville. Considered from a physically constitutional view, not one of them has as yet lived half as long as he is entitled to live. So he has coiled up in his body life-force to stretch out into years of labour for Christ; and wisdom and grace are needed to enable him to do the best he can for the Master. What effect has Mr. Hammond's talk, and prayers and songs, and stories and sermons, and conversations, had upon these able, well-educated, cultured, devoted, pious, Christian men?

"Their intuitive or spiritual powers have been greatly quickened. They have come to understand and appreciate the Divine scheme for saving men, to take in the largeness of it, the aptness of it, and the wisdom of it, together with the inherent strength of it, and the sure, ultimate success of it, as they never did before. I say this, because I hold it to be impossible that clear, insighted men, as they are, can listen for days and nights as they have, to Mr. Hammond's graphic delineations of 'the way of salvation,' and not have it unfold itself before them in larger and richer splendour than they had before conceived it to have.

"Their affectional qualities have been awakened and made active. Take our churches: what do their members know of the Divine art of loving? They know hardly anything about it; or, if they do, they have no skill, nor genius nor culture in showing it. Love lies as dead to all living expression in them as the grain of wheat did which Belzoni took from between the envelopments of a mummy in Thebes, which had been entombed for three thousand years. These clergymen are learning not only how to love each other, but how to love Christians, and not only these, but sinners; and what they are learning to do, every Christian who has attended these meetings is learning to do.

"(2) The effect of his work upon the Lay-Christians who have steadily attended his meetings:

"(a) Their enlightenment. I confess to surprise at the imperfect spiritual conception of 'The Way of Salvation' which numbers of church members belonging to the different churches have told me they held up to the time Mr. Hammond began to preach here. When Mr. Hammond preached it to them, not intellectually but spiritually—enabled thereto by the Holy Spirit—and their spiritual faculties apprehended the truth of it, and their hearts took it home and appropriated it, they were overcome with joy. Their faces became radiant with heavenly light. I make bold to say to you, sir, that I have seen some wonderful sights in the Baptist meeting-house in this village in the last few days,—sights which I think no person desirous to see what God's Spirit can do and is doing through this minister of his can have missed without suffering great loss in failing to understand what the Lord Jesus might do for him.

"(b) Their personal consecration. Our churches have a large proportion of their membership who are religious Christians, but are not spiritual Christians. Under Mr. Hammond's labours, a hundred men and women—church members and non-church members—I venture to say have passed from a pious observance of a religion of forms and ceremonies, and types and symbols, to that religion which centres in Jesus Christ, and finds its resting-place always in the heart of whoever has it, and makes itself manifest in newness of life of its possessor.

"(3) The effect on the children who attended the meetings. This I think crowns his work. The results are wonderful. What is done, demonstrates as unreliable and unsatisfactory all hitherto accepted philosophies of what human nature is and how it should be regarded, no matter whether the philosophy be metaphysical or scientific. I hesitate not to say that no one can account for the manifestations of the children who have steadily been present, on any operation of laws of mind or matter heretofore known to scientific men.

"I believe not one of my Dansville friends who does not approve of Mr. Hammond's work in our village, can tell what makes fifty to seventy-five children give, in language quite their own, as intelligent answers as to the fact of a change of heart and in what it consists, as the same number of men and women can. It is a secret which God hides from the wise and prudent and reveals unto babes, out of whose mouth He ordains praise."

NATIONAL REFUGE HARBOURS.—Rev. Canon Prothero recently preached a very eloquent and vigorous sermon at Westminster Abbey on the necessity and duty of saving the lives of our sailors and fishermen. He advocates as the best means of doing so the providing of Refuge Harbours or ports of shelter from storm or danger. The sermon can be had gratuitously on application to the Hon. Sec. of the National Refuge Harbours Society, 17, Parliament-street, S.W. It is the first of a number of sermons to be preached by clergymen in almost every part of the kingdom.

May Meetings.

National Temperance League.

THE annual meeting of the National Temperance League was held on Monday week in Exeter Hall. There was a representative gathering, but not so large as at former anniversaries. The addresses, says The Temperance Record, were all that could have been desired, and embraced almost every phase of the question.

The Chairman, Mr. George J. Howard, M.P., is a recent adherent, who is nobly "redeeming the time" by giving much of his valuable aid to the advocacy of the Temperance cause. Canon Leigh, who owes his first leanings to Total Abstinence to the Christian advocacy of the late President, Samuel Bowly, was originally moved in this direction at the breakfast given at Leamington some years ago to the members of the Sanitary Congress, on which occasion he was present in his capacity as vicar of that town. Mr. William Barber, Q.C., has thrown his whole soul into the movement, and has the honour of being the founder and proprietor of the first village coffee-tavern ever established within these isles. Four leading reasons why a man should be a total abstainer were well set forth by Rev. Dr. Murphy, and, though it may be true that the Temperance subject is exhausted, and that nothing new can be said upon it, yet this speaker put some old truths in a way that they have not often been, if ever, presented before. The address by Dr. Howie may be read with advantage by abstainers as well as by those who are in the habit of relying upon alcohol to give them that repose of the nervous system which should rather be sought in a diminution of work, and in a larger share of rest and quiet. The speech by the Rev. W. F. Clarkson, B.A., was an effective appeal to young men, while that of Surgeon-General Gunn was chiefly valuable for the personal experience of total abstinence under the varied circumstances which it set forth.

On the preceding Sunday Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, M.A., preached the annual sermon of the League in the Metropolitan Tabernacle. There was an enormous congregation, notwithstanding the showery weather that prevailed. The preacher was eloquent and earnest. Wasting no words, he clearly indicated in regard to the Temperance reformation the path of Christian duty, and cast upon those who heard him a responsibility from which they can scarcely escape if "the love of Christ constrain them," and if they have any wish to obey the apostolic injunction of "Bearing one another's burdens."

London City Mission.

The Lord Mayor, in presiding at the annual gathering of this Mission in Exeter Hall, said: You may increase the number of churches and chapels, and the number of those who preach in them, but the great mass of the people never go inside these places, so that they are just as badly off as if the Gospel were not preached within a thousand miles of their doors. You must go and search them out. This Society is eminently calculated to do the work. Its agents go into every house, and as far as they can into every room, up and down the poorer parts of the Metropolis, bearing the glad tidings of the Gospel of peace. We must feel that this work gives the society a high claim on the prayers and benevolence of Christian people in London. I believe the missionaries of this society are received in places where even the police are afraid to go. The wise way in which they carry their message, and the truths they go to teach must produce great results, and we cannot doubt that a great blessing attends their work. Another thing connected with this Society ought to give it a great claim upon us: it is unsectarian. The missionaries go forth and tell the people a plain, simple Gospel, and that is a message we can all unite in sending to the masses of our City population.

Rev. T. S. Hutchinson, Secretary, read an abstract of the Report, which gave some very encouraging instances of the good effected amongst the people by the missionaries. The visitation of workshops and factories is a work of the utmost importance, and for many years the committee have turned their attention to this special field of labour. At first it was difficult for the missionaries to obtain access to many of the factories, but prayer, perseverance, and patience have met with their due reward, and every year new doors of usefulness have been thrown open. Illustrations were given of the marvellous change which often takes place in the outward conduct of the men in a factory after faithful visitation. With regard to public-house visitation, the report stated that a grander field for Mission work than the public-house could hardly be imagined. The labours and successes of the past year supply ample encouragement for future effort. Landlords, their wives and children, barmen, barmaids, and customers have all been greatly influenced by the faithful witness of the eighteen missionaries who have been at work. Not a few have been truly converted to God, and several have given up the business from conscientious convictions. Some have thus incurred considerable pecuniary loss. There are now more than seventy missionaries daily engaged in the visitation of the police, the employés in the post-office, the cabmen, omnibusmen, tramcar men, coachmen, grooms and ostlers, canal-men, railway-men, bakers, butchers, cattle-drovers, fish-salesmen, labourers in the docks, gipsies, and others. The committee have for many years past appointed special missionaries, able to speak the various languages, to visit the foreigners in London—representatives of almost every nation under heaven, and encouraging reports have been received. With regard to the new fields of labour which had recently been occupied, viz., the servants in hotels and clubs, the employés at theatres, and the fire brigade, the committee state that in each of these fields tokens of Divine favour have been granted to the missionaries employed, and the blessing already vouchsafed to these new enterprises in the days of their infancy, inspires the hope of still greater success in times to come. A missionary had visited the Fisheries Exhibition once a week for nearly four months. Copies of the Gospels in foreign languages were given to exhibitors who came from other lands.

In advocating the claims of the Mission, Canon Spence said there was throughout Europe at this moment a breath of revolution, a breath of socialism, and of infidelity. The only way of dealing with this spirit of infidelity, the outcome of which was dynamite and petroleum, was to exorcise it. They were trying to do that in London, and the City Mission was doing a noble work in keeping infidelity at some distance from us. He appealed to all who loved their country, to every true patriot, to strengthen the hands of the great religious societies, among which, by its close and intimate dealings with the people, this Society stood pre-eminent. If they desired to see England free, great, and strong, then they would hold up the hands of a Society like this, and do all in their power to enable it to increase its work.

Addresses followed from Rev. A. Mearns (who gave some harrowing details as to the condition of the very poor), and Mr. C. E. Tritton.

Foreign Aid Society.

This Society held its annual meeting at the Mansion House. Mr. Joseph Hoare, who presided, said it had greatly promoted spiritual religion in France and Belgium, and to some extent in Spain. As far as it had gone it had met a want that was greatly felt on the Continent. He believed that at this time there was on the Continent a great yearning for spiritual truth, especially in France, and how was that to be supplied? The masses of the people did nothing to help on the work; the politicians did what they could to hinder it, while the Protestant community was feeble, and not able to do all that was required. This Society had no agents of its own; its plan being to subsidise the large Protestant institutions that were at work, and to aid them as far as possible by collecting funds for them.

One of the speakers was Pastor Theodore Monod, who said there was plenty to do in France at this moment, but in spite of all, he must say that the state of things was encouraging. Atheism was rampant and very bold, but he could see signs of encouragement; he had himself a large parish among working people, and in the church work itself there were missionary meetings among them. He went by invitation, with Mr. Fisch, to the General Congress of Freethinkers, who were very amiable to them at first, but less amiable afterwards. He found that but few went. He thought the working people were getting tired of all this, and if for themselves they did not believe anything, or thought that they did not, they began to understand that for the children, at any rate, perhaps it would be better to turn to another kind of education, and not to leave them altogether to themselves, and their sense of dignity, and so on. There were symptoms of this, and one must hope for a reaction by and bye, but not just yet. In view of that reaction, Protestants ought to be up and doing and making everything ready, for they would see for themselves that if there were to be a real, serious reaction now, there was every chance of its being a Roman Catholic reaction. When the people recoiled from atheism and its corruption—and they could not imagine the corruption that went along with it—they must be ready for them with the pure Gospel of Christ, with an organisation of pure and thoroughly good Christian men, and with church life. He had spoken of unbelief and immorality. Well, the immorality was something fearful. Of things that were played in the theatres one could not mention the subjects, but the newspapers, of course, gave an account of them and analysed them; books having the greatest circulation were of the vilest kind, and in what was printed for families, they frequently found that which ought not to be looked at. Now, it was for evangelical Protestants to lift up the standard of righteousness and truth together. It was only the Gospel that could help France out of her troubles. Every Christian should be a missionary; it was not enough to have societies. That had been said before, but "to say" and "to do" were not found on the same page of the dictionary. The new Society had not intended to have any agents, but that Christians should unite and themselves evangelise their neighbourhoods.

British and Foreign Bible Society.

At the close of the eightieth year of this Society's beneficent history, the Secretary was able to report to a large gathering in Exeter Hall, that its income for the past year (£233,309) was over £22,000 in advance of any previous year. During the year no less than 3,118,304 copies, or portions of the Scriptures, had been put in circulation. In the eighty years of its existence it had scattered abroad more than a hundred million copies. Among many other deeply interesting items mentioned was a fact of a most important kind. Steps have been taken by the committee to extend the circulation of God's Word among the girls and women of the East, and more especially among those who, through Hindu caste or Mohammedan custom, are rendered inaccessible to any Christian agency except such as can be carried on by female workers. Grants have been made to eight societies in aid of Bible women to labour in this field. The Committee are now preparing to issue a New Testament in good type and form to be sold at a penny. This will be a large drain on their funds, but they believe the deficiency will be supplied by the generous help of Christians.

Addresses were given by the noble Chairman (Lord Shaftesbury), Bishop of Saskatchewan, Mr. A. Pease, M.P., and others. In a very able and telling speech, Dr. Monro Gibson, after referring to prognostications by so-called scientists, that Bible truth is fast dying out, said: The fact is, all this talk about the Bible being out of date as a matter of science is so much nonsense. Let us have done with it, and let us know how the Bible stands on its own ground. How does it accomplish the object which is set before it? Is it out of date as a book upon Sin, upon Righteousness, upon Salvation? All other books that have been, attempted on these subjects, except those which have taken their inspiration directly or indirectly from the Scriptures, were out of date at the time they were produced, or became out-dated in a very few years. The ethical and religious productions of those who made the researches and recorded results, apart from the Scriptures, where are they? Where are the moralists and philosophers of Greece and Rome? Their works, indeed, are on the shelves, or on the shelf of every scholar in Christendom; but in what capacity? As authorities? Not at all; simply as monuments of genius and chapters of intellectual history. Is there a single Greek or Roman classic on the subject of man's condition and prospects that would be of the slightest use to a soul burdened with sin, or pressed with the weight of this most solemn of all questions, "How shall a man be just with God?" They are all out of date—cold monuments of genius, dead relics of antiquity, almost forgotten attempts to sound the mysteries of life and death. And does any one suppose that the new "Data of Ethics," by Mr. Herbert Spencer, or the more recent "Science of Ethics," by Mr. Leslie Stephens, is likely to be the Sunday-school book of the next generation—say one hundred years hence, or to require the money of this Society to supply an exhaustless demand for it?

If those who are trying their hand in helping the Bible to work along the same lines get so soon out of date, what shall we say of those who fight against it? A still swifter and darker oblivion awaits them. Where is the sceptical writer of 2000 years ago, or 1000, or 500, or 100, or 50? I am almost tempted to come down to ten years ago, and to ask, "Where is one of them that our sceptical friends will stand by, as we stand by Moses, David, Matthew, and Paul?" They are all out of date, and their works are to be found—if found at all—amidst the dusty, decaying, moth-eaten relics of the past in the British Museum, or on the antiquary's bookshelf. But who will venture to predict the time when you will have to ransack the antiquary's library to find a copy of the writings of Moses, David, Solomon, Isaiah, Daniel, Matthew, Paul, or John? These authors are all old, but they are always new. Old as they are, their words are as weighty, as powerful, and as confidently appealed to now as ever, and they are far more widely read to-day than at any previous time. The path of the Bible is not like the path of the infidel production—a steep descent to dark oblivion—but it is like the path of those who are justified by faith, which is as "the shining light which shineth more and more unto the perfect day." "All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away; but the Word of the Lord endureth for ever." The Spirit of God may use, has used, other books; but He identifies Himself with the Bible. He makes it the vehicle of his loving voice, and vital with his living power. He breathes through it on the living soul, and thus communicates life eternal. And so the work of this Society is not a work of a mere publishing firm. It is a great missionary work. This Society is called of God to the grandest missionary work—called of God to send forth his light and his truth, his Word of ever-fresh and living power, to the ends of the earth.

The Religious Tract Society.

The eighty-fifth anniversary of this society was held in Exeter Hall, on Friday evening last, under the presidency of Sir W. McArthur, M.P. The meeting having been opened, Rev. Dr. Green presented an abstract of the report. It appeared that the number of new works published during the year had reached 707, of which 209 were tracts. The issues from the depot had been 75,721,360, including 30,197,350 tracts. The Committee were thankful that at a time of great mental activity, and in the face of largely increasing competition, there was a greater demand than ever for publications which, like those of the Religious Tract Society, adhere without deviation or compromise to the evangelical verities of Scripture, enforcing them upon all classes and ages, and allying them with every form of literature. The Committee earnestly asked their friends to relax no effort that may aid the task of circulating throughout the world a literature which in every form shall be true to the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and adapted to the deepest needs of mankind. Reference was made to the efforts of the Committee in connection with the Luther Commemoration, and with some important exhibitions which had been held, in connection with which the Committee had found appropriate opportunities of bringing their works under public notice. An interesting item mentioned in the foreign missionary work of the Society was a reference to the publication in the Ojibbeway language of the "Peep of Day," and of the "Pilgrim's Progress" in Cree, for the use of the Indians in that remote region. A grant in aid of publishing these well-known works was made on the application of the Right Rev. Bishop Horden. The first of these works has already been completed, and sent out to the bishop.

The meeting was addressed by Archdeacon Bardsley, the Rev. Professor Elmslie, Mr. George Williams, the Rev. J. Ossian Davies, the Rev. Canon Hurst, and other gentlemen.

British Syrian Schools.

A meeting on behalf of this Mission took place on Tuesday 6th inst. at Exeter Hall. Rev. E. H. Birkersteth, who presided, read a letter from the lady in charge of the schools at Baalbec, telling of the recent wonderful increase in the number of Moslem pupils, all of whom are learning the holy Scriptures.

Canon Tristram spoke of his intimate acquaintance with this Mission, and pleaded for the completion of new school buildings at Tyre. Nearly 300 pupils are gathered there in a tumble-down old house, and it was most desirable to provide better accommodation for this the only Protestant Mission in that interesting old city.

Rev. Chalil Jamal, native pastor of Es Salt, spoke of the need of more schools. Dr. Craig said the social influence of the girls educated in these schools was incalculable; it was most encouraging to see education and Christianity advancing steadily by their instrumentality. Rev. W. Allan, of Bermondsey, having recently visited nearly all the stations of this Mission, fully endorsed this opinion. Rev. G. S. Flint, of Bayswater, since visiting Syria a few years ago, said he too had been a warm supporter of this work. He hoped Dr. Tristram's suggestion would be responded to and the £600 required would be soon forthcoming.

Sunday School Union.

Last week the annual meeting of the Sunday School Union took place in Exeter Hall. There was a crowded attendance. The Right Hon. A. J. Mundella, M.P., presided. He believed that one of the most important factors in the moral and religious development of the English people had been Sunday-schools. When he first became a teacher in the Sunday-school, what a laborious work it was! They had to teach the boys and girls then to read, and it was a matter of great difficulty to get them to put two or three letters together, or to approach their intellect with anything like religious truth. Happily, all that was fast disappearing. The Secretary, Mr. Hartley, had recently published some statistics of the most startling character, and which had gone largely beyond his (the speaker's) computations. A year or two ago Mr. Hartley maintained that, so far as he could judge, about four millions of children attended the Sunday-schools of England and Wales. That was more than they had at that time in all the day schools, notwithstanding their compulsory powers, and notwithstanding that 600,000 children in infant schools were too young for Sunday-school. That set him to work to inquire, and he asked himself what were the facts. Was it true that the working people of England were so inclined by tradition, by early training, by conviction, to give their children a religious education that they would send them more freely to the Sunday-school than to the day-school? He had arrived at the conclusion from facts that were beyond question that they were so inclined. He took for his test certain towns that he was best acquainted with, and he found that in every case the number on the Sunday-school rolls exceeded the number on the rolls of the day-school. In Sheffield the Society of Friends had a Sunday-school for men attended by 2000 persons, and in Birmingham 12,000 to 14,000 working men assembled every Sunday morning at a Bible class. These were not indications that they were about to become a godless people, or that the Sunday-school was going to become effete. It had done more than any other agency to get rid of the war of classes in this country, and bring out the sympathy of the rich for the poor, and the respect of the poor for the rich. It brought up the youth of the nation in habits of temperance, order, and morality with respect for all the decencies and conventionalities of life, and with receptive minds for receiving the truths of religion. He hoped God would enable the Sunday-school Union to rise to the importance of its duties, and to discharge them to the satisfaction of their conscience and to the honour of God.

Addresses followed on various aspects of the Sunday-school—by Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson, on the Sunday-school as an educational factor; by Mr. H. H. Fowler, M.P., on its social value; by Rev. R. Glover, on the conditions of successful teaching; by Rev. J. Brierley, B.A., on its place in our national life; and by Rev. Charles Clark, on the teachers' work and wages.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—May 18, Psalm cviii. 1—13; May 19, Joel ii. 1—14; May 20, Joel ii. 21—32; May 21, Joel iii. 9—21; May 22, Acts i. 1—14; May 23, Acts i. 15—26; May 24, Acts ii. 1—13.

"Sit Down."

"MAKE them sit down," the Master said;
"I want to bless and to break the bread."
So the crowd sat down in ordered ranks,
Bowing the head as the Lord gave thanks.

And the Master still delights to bless,
Providing bread in the wilderness;
Spreading a feast on the desert brown—
But He bids us first "Sit down, sit down!"

Sit down, O soul, if thou wouldst eat,
For the "House of Bread" is at his feet;
Angels fly low, and they pass us by
If the heart be cold or the head be high.

Sit down, O soul, He will give thee peace
When thou hast learned from thy works to cease;
'Tis not our "doing" makes us blest,
But ceasing to do, He gives us rest.

Sit down, O soul, sit down, and be still,
For He longs thy emptiness to fill;
But the hand that struggles cannot hold
The broken bread or the shining gold.

Sit down from pride and from cumbering care—
Down at his feet, for heaven is there;
He makes the desert his "house of wine"—
"Only believe," and all is thine!

High Beech, Acton, W. HENRY BURTON.

Obituary.

REV. H. E. SHAWE.

THE Moravian Missions have sustained a great loss in the death of their valued Secretary, the Rev. H. E. Shawe, who had held that post for twenty years past. He died at Fairfield, near Manchester, in the fifty-second year of his age.

REV. JOHN STOCK.

A well-known and highly-respected minister of the Baptist denomination has just died—Rev. John Stock, of Huddersfield. He was present at the recent meetings of the Baptist Union, and died suddenly at the Mill Hill Railway Station. He was a ripe scholar, a faithful preacher of the Gospel, and an author of no mean repute. His "Handbook to Revealed Theology" is his best known work, and has wide circulation, being much used as a College Manual. He was in his sixty-seventh year.

Freiburg in Baden.

A WEEK'S Gospel services in this town, by Inspector Rappard, of St. Crischona, and Pastor Stockmayer, have just been concluded. Spiritual life has been deepened in believers, and some who had hitherto attended the regular meetings have been brought to a decision. Since the awakening that took place here just a year ago, the work of the Lord has gone on steadily, though silently. Various establishments, such as an infant school on Christian principles, an orphanage and servants' home, form a convenient centre for work.

Connected with these is a Pension, conducted on Christian principles, combining quietness, comfort, and cleanliness, with cheapness, where Christians from all countries meet with a hearty welcome and Christian society. The climate is healthy, and the beautiful neighbourhood offers a number and variety of excursions rarely met with. Freiburg is situated at the foot of the Black Forest, and surrounded by woods. For particulars, apply in English to Fräulein Inez, Evangelisches Stift, Freiburg in Baden.

M. RÖMMELE.

OUR SAILORS.—Rev. Archibald G. Brown preached on Thursday evening last at the East London Tabernacle, on behalf of the Seamen's Christian Friendly Society, to a very large congregation, of which several hundred were seamen. Mr. Brown's address was founded upon Mark iv. 36, "They took him even as he was in the ship." Christ was faithfully and lovingly pressed upon the acceptance of all, and it is believed that many received Him. The evangelistic choir sang several of Sankey's hymns very sweetly, and at the close of the service a liberal collection was taken for the Society.

Notes and Comments.

ON behalf of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Evangelistic Mission, Temple Gardens Hall, Thames Embankment, special meetings for prayer will be held at 3, Bridewell-place, New Bridge-street, E.C., from May 19 to 23, at five p.m. Christians are earnestly invited to attend any of these meetings.

We extract the following paragraph from the Daily News :—

"We understand that Miss Emily Faithfull will lecture in June in Prince's Hall, Piccadilly, about her visit to the Mormons, and that some startling disclosures may be expected respecting a system she describes as the worst form of slavery ever invented and justified on Biblical grounds, involving crimes against nature, and the utter degradation of the women, allured by special representations from England, Scotland, and Wales, by the emissaries of the Latter Day Saints."

In our issue of April 17 we noted a case of restriction in religious freedom at the Leicester Infirmary, in which a "sister" deprived a patient of a copy of Mr. Haslam's "From Death into Life." This was contradicted in a letter from the Secretary of the Infirmary, which appeared May 1. The matter has since been discussed in the local Press, and, so far as we are able to judge, the right is all on the visitor's side, and against those in authority at the infirmary.

One of the most glorious facts of modern times is the rapidity with which the Word of God is being translated into every known language of men. The whole Bible is now published in the Zulu tongue, and the work of revising the Kafir translation is advancing toward completion. The Board of Revisers is composed of seven members, representing seven branches of the Church of Christ labouring in Kafirland. Thus South Africa bids fair to be speedily in full possession of that seed of the Kingdom from which rich harvests of blessing must spring.

We have received a communication detailing the conversion to Christianity of a Mr. Samuel Davidsohn (a German by birth and a Rabbi in Wintersburgh, a small town in Holland), and his subsequent mysterious disappearance. Foul play, or at any rate harsh conduct on the part of some relatives, is suspected; it is asserted that Mr. Davidsohn has been improperly conveyed to a lunatic asylum in order to remove him from Christian influences. Any information with respect to his condition and whereabouts will be gladly received by Rev. A. H. Gezelle, Meerburg, at Baarn, Netherlands.

Dr. Xenophon P. Moschou, at present in Edinburgh, is anxious to prevent the idea being entertained that the pure Gospel is not preached in Greece. He says that there is an evangelical ministry not only in Athens, but also in Thessalonica, at Volos (Thessaly), and at Jannina (Epirus), led by evangelists who two years ago formed themselves into a Presbytery of the Greek Evangelical Church. The preaching hall at Athens is situated at the south-eastern extremity of the city, facing Hadrian's Porch, and Dr. Kalopothakés, acting as an American missionary, usually preaches there. It is very gratifying to learn that in these classic scenes of early Christian labour, the Gospel of Christ is still proclaimed, and testimonies to its power are being realised.

Any of our readers who can help in getting up petitions on behalf of the Sunday closing of public-houses are requested to communicate with Rev. W. H. Perkins, Sunday Closing Association, 14, Brown-street, Manchester.

From an article which appeared in the Medical Press and Circular, we cull the statement that insanity is nearly thrice as prevalent in the United Kingdom as it was forty years ago. The number of scrofulous and tuberculous patients has also largely increased in our hospitals. The same authority says that in both instances the increase appears to be, to a considerable extent, due to the great and increasing prevalence of alcoholism in all classes, in both sexes, and at all ages. The spread of intemperance among children is one of the saddest and most alarming signs of the times. The writer of the article already referred to, says:—

"Very recently we saw three children, the age of the eldest of whom did not exceed ten or eleven years, in different states of intoxication, reeling out of a public-house in one of our principal thoroughfares on a Sunday afternoon; one was unable to stand without the assistance of his companions, another was vomiting at the door of the gin palace, and all were uttering filthy imprecations, which under sad circumstances and in the voice of childhood, were to us not only the most pitiable of sounds, but also the strongest appeal we had ever heard for some legal interference with that unholy traffic of which such were the results."

Mrs. Fenn, the wife of a devoted missionary in Madrid, says: "The great spiritual blessings God has showered of late upon England, both by means of his servants from America and by other agencies, suggest the inquiry, Why is England so specially favoured? Is it only for its own sake, or is it not rather that an army of workers may be raised up to go forth and occupy the many fields open to Gospel effort, and white already to the harvest? The labourers are indeed few as compared with the harvest to be ingathered, and many things betoken that 'the night cometh, when no man can work.' Surely it behoves all whose hearts are filled with blessing to ask whether, instead of sitting under their own vine and fig-tree, they ought not to be 'going forth bearing precious seed,' and labouring to preach the Gospel to every creature, and so hasten the return of our long-absent Lord."

We have received from San Francisco copies of lectures delivered by Mr. Henry S. Highton, as Grand Orator of the Fraternity of F. and A.M., and of the Garfield Association, and have read with pleasure the distinct recognition they make of the Christian idea as the only true foundation of society and government. That on Garfield is of special interest, attributing his success in life, and influence as a statesman, to four cardinal points in his character. These were, faith in God, confidence in the people, obedience to law, and a deep sense of the dignity of labour. That these principles lie at the foundation of all good government there can be no doubt, and failure to act in accordance with them is the source of most of the political and social perils which threaten the welfare of mankind. Mr. Highton argues that one of the greatest dangers of modern society is found in the waste of energy to which agnosticism, hasty legislation, and false principles of action are leading multitudes of men all over the globe. Rest, such as is found in balanced activity, he rightly argues, is the world's great need. For this, faith in God, such as tranquillises and harmonises the mind amid all earth's conflicts, is absolutely essential.

Mr. Charles Carter (evangelist), who has just returned from Australia in the Lusitania (Orient Line), says he was crediby informed that whereas five years ago they used to take from £1000 to £1500 at the drinking bar on the voyage from London to Sydney, on the last voyage they only took £200.

The spread of Atheism of the Herbert Spencer type among young people is a fact of ominous portent. The Bishop of Manchester uttered a bold and timely warning on the subject in an address given at Bolton last week. He said:—

"They saw it plainly in the fashionable young people to be met in the parks of London. What did they care whether religion was being taught in schools or not? They were occupied with other things. If they had an average number of balls, dinner parties, picnics, and games of lawn-tennis they were satisfied, for they had no higher aims. Were they the people who would keep up the religious education of the generation coming on? Unless those believing in God and religion looked to it that families were brought up in truer lives of faith and duty he confessed he looked forward with no great hopefulness to what England might become."

It is in the indifference of the multitude of professing Christians that the chief danger is found; only let this be changed into earnest individual effort to uphold the cause of truth, and to train the young in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and the aspect of things would soon change.

The name of Henry Martyn is redolent of truest sanctity and deepest devotion to our great Master and Lord. The perpetuation of it by the erection of a hall at Cambridge for the use of the various religious societies there, is a step in which many will feel interested. The recall to memory of the spirit which animated such men as Martyn, McCheyne, and others of a similar type, is eminently calculated to waken desire and excite emulation to follow their faith. Such names are as "ointment poured forth."

The Thames Embankment has received another adornment, and by no means its least, in the statue of William Tyndale, which has just been unveiled by the Earl of Shaftesbury. As a work of art the statue is well worthy of admiration, and as a memorial of a man whom his lordship spoke of as "one of the greatest men that God in his mercy had sent upon the earth," it possesses a permanent interest and significance. It was stated in the course of the proceedings connected with the unveiling, that the Bible Society was about to issue a copy of the New Testament in clear and legible type at a cost of one penny, a monument in itself most fitting, and, as has been said, "one after Tyndale's own heart."

A great amount of energy is being thrown into the preparations for celebrating the Wycliffe quincentenary. The Committee are appealing earnestly for funds to help them in wide circulation of books, &c., bearing on the life, work, and principles of the great reformer, and a plan is set on foot for publishing a complete set of all Wycliffe's writings. The British Museum authorities are also arranging for a special exhibition of MSS., prints, &c., connected with his life and times. England's debt to Wycliffe is sufficiently great to make such tributes warrantable and wise. But it is of great importance to preserve such commemorations from all that savours of hero worship, and to see that all the glory is given to God rather than to men.

We learn with much pleasure that the Queen of Sweden has sent a substantial donation towards the special fund of £2000 now being raised by The Children's Special Service Mission for translating, printing, and distributing Gospel tracts among the children of different lands. Her Majesty has been pleased to accept of 10,000 Swedish Leaflets, for distribution amongst the children of the schools in Stockholm. We trust the practical sympathy thus expressed by Her Majesty may suggest to others the privilege of helping on this excellent project. The office of the Mission is 48, Paternoster-row, E.C.

The Hon. and Rev. Canon Leigh, at the annual meeting of the National Temperance League last week, advocated a closer unity among the several Temperance Societies of the metropolis. If this were brought about it would add great strength to the cause that all have at heart. The National Temperance Congress, to be held at St. George's Hall, Liverpool, in June, may perhaps tend to promote this desirable union of forces. The Congress is supported, we observe, by leading men of all the great institutions, and comprises in its programme four distinct aspects of the subject:—

(1) The Scientific Phases of Temperance.
(2) Its Social and Educational Aspects.
(3) Temperance Economics and Statistics.
(4) Legislative Remedies for Intemperance.

The appeals which are being made by various Mission Agencies for help to give poor and destitute children of London a day in the country are eminently worthy of liberal response. Only those who know the facts, and witness the results of such outings to those who are fortunate enough to get them, can understand the need there is for such benevolence, and the benefits accruing from it. To many thousands of juveniles in our metropolis sunny skies and green fields are wholly unknown, and the song of birds a sound they have never heard. The season has come when those more favoured may in this respect consider the poor.

A correspondent cites a case where the clergyman, in reading the lesson for the day—Matt. v.—left out verses 27 to 32, as though afraid of offending ears polite by its use. We have indeed fallen on bad times if God's pure word recorded in our Saviour's own language may not be publicly read for fear of human censure. Well may our correspondent say the Christianity of a congregation with such a leader and teacher is not likely to be of a very robust kind. These are no times for withholding moral truth, or hesitating to reprove social vice, and no minister who fails to lift up his voice against abounding immorality can be said to be faithful to the stewardship he has received. (See Ezek. iii. 17—21.)

To buy cheap, if not to sell dear, is commonly regarded as a duty inculcated alike by the laws of economy and prudence. But in a lecture delivered the other day in Edinburgh, Dr. Macleod showed beyond dispute that it often becomes a sin, and one productive of evils of no slight magnitude. In order to meet the demand for cheap articles, hundreds of thousands of men, women, and children are made to toil for wages altogether inadequate for their support, and fraud and deceit are encouraged on every hand. We have no right to aim at obtaining goods at less than their fair value. Conscience—even in many who take Christian principle as their rule—needs awakening on questions of this class.

Part of the site of old Horsemonger Lane Gaol has become a playground for the children of crowded Southwark. Mrs. Gladstone publicly opened the enclosure for that purpose last week. The movement for providing recreation grounds for the many thousands in our great metropolis who have hitherto had no facilities for getting fresh air and healthy exercise is one deserving of all praise. Rev. Newman Hall said truly at the opening ceremony, that the greater the opportunities of healthy recreation the less need there would be for punishment. It is painful to think in how large a number of cases child-life is being crushed and distorted for want of room to develop its proper spirit.

Confessions of faith seem to carry with them separating rather than uniting elements all the world over, as though to prove that it is not in perfect uniformity of thought that Christian union consists. The Free Church of Geneva has divided into two parts, the Independent Church of the Pelisserie, preserving the ancient confession of faith intact, and the Evangelical Church of Geneva adopting a revised and abbreviated form of it. The differences rather relate to methods of worship, and forms of Church government than to matters of doctrine; so that it seems a pity any severance should have to be made. It is gratifying, however, to learn that no bitterness attends the rupture, and that the two communities preserve fraternal feeling and relations.

An interesting incident in the history of Burmese Missions has just occurred. Rev. Cephas Bennett, of the American Baptist Mission, in Burmah, having attained his eightieth year of age, and the fifty-fourth of missionary service in that country, has received the special congratulations of the Chief Commissioner of Rangoon, together with those of the missionaries of the province and ministers of the city. Mr. Bennett and his wife for more than half a century have laboured indefatigably in the cause of Burmese evangelisation. He has had the joy of printing the first edition of the Bible in that language, and numerous portions of the Scriptures in other dialects, as well as millions of tracts and other Christian literature. He was the friend and colleague of the great Dr. Judson, and after all these years of usefulness he and his devoted wife are still in good health, and actively engaged in valuable work.

The Flemish Training School at Brussels is an institution which exists for the purpose of seeking to evangelise the Flemish people by the agency of Flemings. The Flemish language being that of Belgium, naturally appeals to the hearts and sympathies of the people as no other language can, it is therefore highly desirable that the Gospel should be given to them in their own tongue rather than in French or Dutch, which to the common people are unintelligible. The school is thoroughly evangelical, and has at present eight pupils, three others having already gone from it to work as evangelists and teachers. The supervision of the school is in the hands of Mr. J. Mathysen, a Flemish gentleman who acts as treasurer, and the Rev. N. de Gouge, pastor of the Reformed Dutch Church in Brussels, who is the secretary. Though but little known, this effort to subserve the Master's cause has received much blessing, and is worthy of the sympathy and help it just now requires.

The Jubilee Testimonial Fund for celebrating Mr. Spurgeon's fiftieth birthday has been inaugurated by a private meeting, at which a thousand guineas were subscribed as a nucleus, Messrs. T. H. Olney and W. C. Murrell being appointed treasurers. Resolutions of concurrence in the movement have been passed by leading friends in the United States, the editor of the National Baptist truly remarking that Mr. Spurgeon is not the property of any one continent; he belongs, under God, to Christendom and to the age. No doubt the desire to express in tangible form the loving respect in which the Tabernacle pastor is held, will be as world-wide as the influence for good which God has honoured him to exert.

In a letter written to the Greenock Liberal Association, Mr. Chamberlain thus refers to his Shipping Bill:—"I wish I could get the shipowners to acknowledge that no trade can be in a healthy condition which is carried on with so vast a sacrifice of human life as theirs, and that they would show themselves ready to promote the reforms which are necessary to bring about a better state of things. The main contention on which my Bill is founded has been universally admitted—namely, that a man ought not to be allowed to make a profit by the loss of his ship and of her crew; but while all shipowners accept the principle the bulk of them seem unwilling to discuss seriously any practical attempt to give effect to it." The soundness of this reasoning is so obvious that it is passing strange any body of intelligent men should object to legislation enforcing its principle.

The recent attempts to suppress the Salvationists in Switzerland have led to the formation of a National Swiss Association, having for its title the League du Droit Commun (for the defence of personal rights under the common law). A central provisional committee, composed of three representatives from each of the cantons which joins the League, has been formed, and active steps taken to enlist widespread sympathy with the objects in view. The cantons of Vaud, Geneva, and Neuchatel have already joined, and M. Aimé Humbert has been elected president. The attacks on personal freedom and religious liberty have been so violent, and the apathy of the Government in dealing with the matter so great, that it was high time for some action to be taken, and the efforts of the new League will be watched with profound interest by the lovers of justice and partisans of freedom in all the countries of Europe.

In a recent paper on the effects of the present educational system on the physical condition of children, Dr. Rabagliati, of the Bradford Infirmary, most wisely says: "It is of the utmost importance that we require of young children only such tasks as they can perform well, and that we then insist that these be thoroughly done. To set them tasks beyond their strength or to attempt to compel attention when their limited power of attention is exhausted, can only result in inducing habits of working in a slovenly and careless manner, and must inevitably tend to increase the number of men and women, already so large, who live to 'scamp' their work, rather than to do their duty." What is worth doing at all is worth doing well. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might," is an old-world injunction, but divinely wise in its application to the world of to-day.

THE REVIVAL IN LONDON.

A Glance at the Great Work.—4.

By LADY HOPE.

THE last meeting that our friends had the opportunity of attending together at this particular time was a specially solemn one. The Spirit of God seemed to rest on the vast assembly with wondrous power. Everything was still and quiet; even the very breaths of that mighty gathering of people seemed to hush themselves beneath the words of the speaker.

The subject dealt with was "Separation." "WHOM will ye serve?" "To WHOM will ye go?" And the people who listened so breathlessly were urged that very night to decide. Yes! they were to decide "now, in the accepted time;" on that decision their present as well as their future would depend. Mr. Moody's words were solemn, his manner as of one desperately, tremendously in earnest. It was no studied discourse, no rhetorical appeal, nor even a fervid harangue interspersed with the thunders of the law and the melting strains of eloquent persuasion. We have all heard these at times, and perhaps for the moment have been moved, perhaps hardened, perhaps amused. But they were merely human, they could reach the ear but not the heart.

The address to which this multitude were listening, as though it dare not lose one syllable, was none of these. It was the simple, burning conversation of a man who talked with his fellow men, and talked to them—not at them! He spoke from God to men, and he meant what he said. You could see this fact reflected in the thousands of upturned faces that gazed upon him while he spoke, like a vast mirror that catches the lights and shades, and returns them again.

Ah! but was this all? No, indeed. These words were sinking deep, deep down into many hearts, and soon, very soon, they would "bring forth fruit, some thirty, some sixty, some an hundred-fold." That some "fell among thorns," some were "choked," and "withered," we know too well, alas! but not that there were results, solid, lasting, eternal—divinely-promised and divinely-given results—this also we know.

At the close of the address, Mr. Sankey sang

"Over the Line."

If any of our readers have not seen this hymn, we would beg them to look at the words in Sacred Songs and Solos, No. 383; and, better still, let them hear it sung, and then use their voices in echoing it forth to those who cannot have the possibility of reaching these meetings for themselves.

It was an hour of decision with many. Our friends slip quietly into the inquiry-room, and take their seats, the one praying earnestly, though silently, that the right worker may be directed to them; and in a few minutes a clergyman is seated by their side, and is inquiring their difficulties.

Then the truth comes out. Our stranger-friend expresses the change that has been taking place in her views, her feelings, and even her life, during the past week. She "could not have imagined such a thing possible," and a few other sentences to the same effect; but now she wants to know,— wants to know,— and her words seem to fail her at the critical point.

"I understand!" says the clergyman. "I think I understand what you would like to learn. You wish to see what part you must take in reaping the advantages of Christ's death and resurrection. You would like truly to be saved. You want to know the Lord Jesus Christ as your Saviour."

"I want to have my sins put away; I want to be cleansed, and forgiven," she answers, bursting into tears. "Oh! my sins are such a burden. I don't think I can bear them any longer. The load is too great for me; I cannot sleep....and altogether I am perfectly miserable. Yet I cannot help coming here, and every time I come it makes me worse."

"Then I have good news for you." This is his answer. "You need not bear the burden of your sins; Jesus Christ has borne it for you."

"I don't think so," she says, shaking her head, "or I should be at peace. I feel that my sins are ruining me. They are destroying me. And my friend here is the only one I know who understands me. She says she has felt the same herself."

"Don't let us turn to feelings; let us rather keep to facts," he answers, and turns over the leaves of his Bible, until he reaches the fifty-third chapter of the Book of Isaiah. This he reads to her very slowly, verse by verse, until he reaches the eighth verse. This he asks her to read for herself. Clause by clause she follows him.

Presently she raises her eyes, and looks him in the face.

"Is this true?" she asks, "or is it not?" Neither of them speaks. The Bible is in her hands. She reads it again and again, and still her eyes seem rivetted to that verse. Then she studies its context; and in the stillness of that moment God speaks. Yes! He speaks to her soul. The light shines in, and she sees it all. The death-stone has been rolled away, and she sees that for her there is life—Life Eternal.

"Show me one or two verses more," she asks, as though afraid that a word, a movement, may disperse the sweet new joy that has filled her soul, and yet she longs to have this fresh and most blessed hope confirmed. But it must not be in human words. DIVINE syllables are the ones she craves. It is upon the truth of God alone that she can rest her soul.

There seems to be no hurry in this place. All is quiet. Many others like herself are being similarly dealt with; but she heeds them not. She is drinking in salvation to her soul from the precious Word of God.

At length, when she finds that passage after passage confirms the same glorious teaching, and that her very Bible is radiant with the Holy Spirit's light, she asks for prayer, and the little group kneels together. A very bright smile has now taken the place of that load of fear; and as she leaves the inquiry-room her friend whispers to her, "It is hard to leave this place, is it not? But we have JESUS with us! He has said, 'I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee.'"

And the promise has been truly fulfilled to them both. Each in her own little sphere, they are living now for their heavenly Master. His Word is their delight, and his work their joy. They are learning after the "whosoevers" the "whatsoevers" of the Bible. It is a delight to them both to remember that "whether they eat or drink, or whatsoever they do," they may "do it all to the glory of God."

But they have both also found it necessary for their own spiritual welfare, as well their bounden debt of gratitude to God and man, that they should have some definite spiritual work, and they are quite right. It will also do more to keep them in health and vigour than any diary-keeping or introspection. Our two friends are now living out the 8th chap. of Nehemiah.

They tell us plainly enough by their lives; yes, and by their words too, that they love the Lord, they love his word, they love his people, and they love his work. And oh, how they bless and praise his name for the means He has so graciously used in bringing them to THIS NEW LIFE!

Young Converts at Hampstead.

The days glide by so swiftly that it is difficult, in a brief weekly chronicle of this work, to keep pace with it. The Hampstead farewell gathering of converts on Monday week already seems to have receded into the far past; but we should judge the memories of it will long abide with the thousands who were crowded into the hall in Fleet-road.

Mr. Moody takes care to provide a full and varied programme for these occasions, while he seizes the opportunity of becoming a listener himself for the time. The hall was crammed to its utmost capacity; many of those present of course were not "young converts"; there were veterans in abundance who had come to mingle their prayers with those of their juniors, and share in the feast of fat things provided.

What with Mr. McGranahan's Male Choir, and the united talents of himself, his wife, Mr. Sankey, Mr. Stebbins, and others, there were ample attractions in the song department. Among the pieces sung was the anthem, "I am the Resurrection and the Life," rendered in a most thrilling fashion.

The first address, by Dr. MONRO GIBSON, on Bible study, was one so full of useful and timely advice to the young believers that we have given it a prominent place in this issue.

A second address by Rev. J. STEPHENS, of Highgate, was brief, but it was weighty and to the point. The speaker's first admonition to the young believers was: "Be ready to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you." You will be asked, he said, why you presume to cherish the hope of acceptance with God. It will not be enough to say that you feel happy; let your reason be one that will stand the test of God's Word. Next, let me urge you to "continue stedfastly in the apostle's doctrine and fellowship." This was said of 3000 converts that were gathered together on one occasion in the days of the apostles. Whatever else the phrase may mean, it means this: that they kept company with the most pronounced and earnest workers for Christ in that day. I would say to every convert here: Get associated with those who are truly in earnest; make companions of those who truly love and fear the Lord. Take up the Cross, if need be, in identifying yourselves with those who earnestly avow themselves for Christ. One who is now a well-known minister had in his early days wandered far from God. He was converted in his native town. When walking in the street the next day, with two evangelists, he met some of those who had been his boon companions. There came the temptation to hide his colours; but he was enabled to cast it aside. He boldly put his arms in the arms of the two evangelists, in order to show that he had identified himself with those who were out and out for Christ. This is an important matter in all the relations of life. There was a great revival some thirty years ago in a northern city, under the preaching of William Burns. Some friends kept the names of the converts for twenty years. When Mr. Moody was in that part of the country ten years ago people were asking if the converts would stand. One who had these names wrote and said that they could trace nearly all the converts who were still alive. As a rule, they stood well for Christ; the exceptions were those who had not married "in the Lord."

Another thing to remember is: "One is your Master, even Christ." If you are converted you have got a new Master, and there is plenty of service to do for Him. There is not a convert here to whom God will not give something to do in working, or praying, or weeping for another. Finally, hear the word of the Apostle: "Know ye not that your bodies are temples of the Holy Ghost which dwelleth in you. Ye are not your own; ye are bought with a price." As you rise morning by morning remember that you are not your own. If we say to Christ "Thou art mine," we must also say to Him "I am thine." He establishes his claim to us by putting his Holy Spirit within us. Let the temple of God be kept for God; let us not grieve the blessed Spirit who dwells in our hearts.

Dr. PENTECOST completed the trio of practical exhortations. By and bye, he said, you will feel discouraged because you think your faith and love are not what they ought to be. This will come of looking at your own faith and your own love instead of at the Object of faith and love. You will be saying to yourself, perhaps, "I am afraid I am not a Christian, because I do not love God as I ought to." If there is one thing we all may be sure of, it is that none of us love God as we ought to. But nowhere in the New Testament are we, as the children of God, commanded to love Him. You say that Christ certainly told one who came to Him to love the Lord with all his heart and strength and mind. But Christ said that was one of the greatest commandments of the Law. And that is just where man has failed from the beginning. The Gospel is something very different: it says, "Keep yourselves in the love of God." It is not my poor love to God, but his great love to me that brings me comfort. God's love to me is like the mighty torrent of Niagara pouring forth in one measureless, ceaseless, thundering torrent. My love to God is like the spray that rises up from the falls—a little of his own love going back to Him. Keep in the sunshine of God's love. A lady who had been afflicted with rheumatism had some remnants of it lingering in one shoulder. A physician advised her to sit some hours every day in the south window, where her shoulder would be exposed to the rays of the sun. She did so, and the pain was entirely removed, but she said to one who questioned her, "It is so delicious to sit in the sunshine that I am keeping at it." Let me exhort you to get into the south window, and bathe yourself in the love of God, as it pours down upon you. Your doubts and fears will soon disappear, and it will be so delicious that you will want to keep there as long as you live."

Before the meeting closed Mr. Moody announced that there would be another réunion of the same kind at Croydon, three weeks from that date. The proceedings did not terminate till about half-past ten. A great proportion of those present must have been in their seats for about five hours, yet all seemed loth to leave a spot hallowed by so many blessed scenes and memories.

Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan.

On the last Saturday evening of the Evangelists' stay at Woolwich a very interesting meeting was held in the large and comfortable hall of the Soldiers' Home. It presented a most brilliant and sociable appearance. Refreshments over, the chair was taken by Colonel Stirling. After prayer the hymn 402 was sung to the tune of the National Anthem, after which Major WHITTLE was asked to address the meeting.

He first directed attention to the American flag, which hung from one side of the platform, opposite to where was suspended the Union Jack. He said that Mr. McGranahan and himself desired to leave behind them a little memento of their visit, and they thought that this flag might serve for that purpose. He hoped it might be accepted, and allowed to decorate the hall where they had met, so as to remind them of their kin across the sea. He hoped the two flags would always thus hang together as emblems of two governments which would continue until He came whose right it is to rule. The two countries had a flag in common, the Banner of the Cross. Ten millions of his countrymen joined with the Christians of England in acknowledging its sway. Missionaries from each continent worked side by side in foreign lands to spread its power, and the children were being trained to continue the glorious work.

Major OWEN HAY, being called upon, said it was his pleasant duty, on behalf of the soldiers who frequented the Soldiers' Home, to thank Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan for this memento of their visit to Woolwich. He and they would never look at it without remembering the happy time of Christian fellowship and work they had together. Better than that, there were among those for whom he spoke some who thanked God that these friends had come, and that the Gospel, so winningly proclaimed, had found an entrance into their hearts.

Mr. MCGRANAHAN then said that in honour of the occasion, a hymn had been composed, which he had set to music. It was entitled "The Banner of the Cross." Copies of it would be distributed, and he would like all to learn to sing it. Then he called first on the Male Choir, and then upon all present, and a very creditable rehearsal was gone through. The song will probably appear in a future edition of THE CHRISTIAN CHOIR.

There were yet thirty minutes before the men were due at roll-call, and these were devoted to uplifting "The Banner of the Cross" to this company of British soldiers by Major Whittle. He earnestly called for decision to enlist, and promised, in the name of The Captain, victory to all its soldiers. All his illustrations pertained to the army, and a more responsive congregation we never saw. At the close an opportunity was given to any who would enlist that night under the banner of the Cross to rise in indication of the wish. Seven men avowed the power of Jesus' Name, by rising before their comrades. "God bless you men!" said Major Whittle, and with prayer and the benediction, he brought to a close perhaps the most remarkable and interesting meeting held in Woolwich during the Mission.

These evangelists have been busy during the past week at the Rink Hall, Blackheath, where the meetings are continued throughout the present week. We are obliged from pressure on our space to defer a report till our next issue.

Messrs. Pentecost and Stebbins.

CONFERENCE HALL, MILDMAY.

We have, with much regret, come to the close of a month of deep spiritual teaching and much blessing at Mildmay, through the labours of our beloved brethren, Dr. Pentecost and Mr. Stebbins. This last week has been a specially solemn one. The evening addresses were well calculated to arouse the unbeliever and sceptic; also to awaken the careless. Numerous petitions for prayer have gone up to the Lord for the conversion of fathers, mothers, relatives, and friends. Many believers have had their burdens removed by the great Hearer and Answerer of prayer, so that notes of thanksgiving have ascended, encouraging the confidence of his children to "trust Him at all times."

On Sunday Dr. Pentecost spoke both morning and evening on "The Precious Blood." The hall was crowded, and overflow meetings held, reminding us of Conference times. The preacher's clear and powerful addresses were such that the most unlettered could understand the great fact of God's salvation, through the power of the precious blood. At the after-meetings many souls gathered into the inquiry-room, and there confessed their belief and trust to the saving of their souls.

On Tuesday morning Dr. Pentecost resumed his Bible-readings for Christians, the subject being "Election." Wednesday morning, "Predestination, or conformity to the likeness of Jesus Christ." Thursday morning (Matt. xvii.), "The Transfiguration and Spiritual Recognition in Heaven." Friday morning, the last of these most valuable addresses was on "The Second Coming of our Lord, and in Him the consummation of all the promises of God seen." The Readings have been most helpful, especially to Christian workers, enabling many to understand truths which hitherto had been difficult, and making God's Word increasingly precious.

The evening addresses have been listened to by crowds, solemnised by the subjects spoken on. The peculiarly graphic illustrations and clear, distinct way of putting forth truth impresses it deeply on all, and seldom have we experienced a time of fuller blessing than on Tuesday evening, when the subject was "What men do not believe." From many of the Mildmay outlying Missions men and women were brought up by the workers.

We may mention one case: A man and wife, nominally Roman Catholics, living in one of the darkest spots of this great City, were induced to come to the meeting. No words could express the brutal character of the man—his poor wife blind from his ill-treatment. He listened to Dr. Pentecost with intense astonishment. The conviction of sin was deepened, and his conscience more and more aroused. On being asked if he and his wife would like to have the question of sin settled, he was shown into the inquiry-room, holding by the hand his sightless wife. It was touching to see his anxiety for her now. On leaving the inquiry-room she remarked, "True my sight is gone, but the Lord has given me back my husband, for it was the drink made him do it." We believe from this memorable night they have both turned their faces Zionward. This is only one of the many results of this Pentecostal time.

The subject on Wednesday night was "Eternal punishment as revealed in the Word of God." The reception of this awful but important truth was evident from the many men who went into the inquiry-room to find out "whether these things be so." On Thursday night Dr. Pentecost spoke on "The Judgment." The hall was thronged, and the meeting was more solemn, if possible, than on the previous night. The apparent results were not so numerous, but we believe hundreds left awed under the reality of the coming judgment for the ungodly. A tea to 150 of the London City Missionaries was held during the afternoon, seats in the centre of the hall being reserved for them.

Friday was the last night. "Who, then, can be saved"? was taken as a key-note to gather many Scriptural answers in order to make the way of salvation plain. We can scarcely give a more adequate idea of this powerful address than that it was "line upon line" and "precept upon precept," proving to all except those who determinately shut their hearts to the truth, that God is able and willing to save "unto the uttermost." We can truly say the Living Water flowed freely. This Mission has been to all the workers connected with Mildmay "times of refreshing," and our earnest prayers follow these devoted labonrers in the vineyard as they open a new field of service in Belgravia. CONFERENCE HALL, ECCLESTON-STREET, S.W.

The services began here as announced, last Lord's Day. In the afternoon the Hall was full, and in the evening it was crowded. The gates had to be closed at seven o'clock, and many were unable to get in. God's presence was very manifest at both meetings. The evening service was followed by an after-meeting to which nearly all remained and many went away rejoicing.

These services will be continued throughout the week—every afternoon at 3.30 (except Monday and Saturday), and every evening at 8 (except Saturday).

Messrs. Moody and Sankey in Croydon.

Croydon is the tenth district in which the evangelists have pitched their iron tents since the beginning of last November. In none of the previous Missions—east, west, north, or south—was there a more auspicious opening than that of Tuesday week in Fairfield Hall, which stands close to the East Croydon Station. It was one of the loveliest days of the season; the sun shone out with a power and brilliance to which we have been strangers for many months past. We had a foretaste of the temperature that might be expected, if the meetings were continued through the sultry months that are close upon us.

Mr. Moody spoke on the hindrances that are thrown in the way of Gospel work by the prejudices and prepossessions of Christians. He showed very forcibly that in all ages of the world God had revived his work by the employment of special agencies, and that every prominent church in Christendom to-day, sprang out of a time of revival. We do not know that there has been any unusual opposition to the movement in ecclesiastical circles at Croydon, but these exhortations to sink individual prejudices are never unneeded. The principal difficulty in the matter is that those who need them most are not there to hear them. Those who come to the meetings are presumed to be, with few exceptions, friendly to the work.

At the close of the opening address there was the usual prayer-meeting. Nothing could have more completely proved Mr. Moody's case than what took place on this occasion. Though his words were in no sense addressed to the unconverted or the anxious, there was a most remarkable response to his call that those who desired to be prayed for should rise. The inquiry-room was better filled than we have seen it at any opening meeting throughout the campaign, and real earnest soul dealing went on for some time. No better or more conclusive proof of the need of such special efforts could have been found than the fact that so many were inquiring about saleation even before a word had been spoken that could have awakened such solicitude.

Strenuous efforts have been made to reach the poorer classes, and with marked success, as the district visitors often recognise the faces of many they have invited. A word may well be said about these "visitors," whose earnest endeavours do not come directly under public notice in the hall. There is in Croydon a very flourishing infidel club, which meets every Sunday evening in a room in the same theatre in which evangelistic services are held. Numbers of boys, too, from fourteen to sixteen years of age, are brought under this pernicious influence. A Christian lady went to this place and distributed tickets of invitation for the meetings. "Well, ma'am," said one man, "there's nothing like bearding the lion in his den." "So I thought," she replied; and with the exception of one who used foul and abusive language she was courteously received and the tickets accepted. Then, again, the public-houses have not been overlooked, several ladies having undertaken even the difficult work of visiting them, and with equally encouraging results. One was begged by a woman to come into her lodging-house, which she did, though not without some misgivings. There she found about thirty individuals indulging in various meals of too nondescript a character to bear specific names. She then offered to sing a hymn for them, which they said they should be proud to listen to, and after a few words about the Saviour, and a short prayer, she left amidst many expressions of thanks, the tears standing in the eyes of several.

The most difficult places to reach have been the churches! True, some have shown sympathy, but several others have raised strong opposition. One parish has been thoroughly visited with a warning to the people not to go to the meetings, for "to enter that hall is to put themselves without the pale of the Church of God." It is hard to conceive the existence of such deplorable ignorance and bigotry, but this does not injure the cause but rather the reverse, as it induces people to go and see wherein the iniquity lies!

A prayer-meeting is held at noon every day in the School of Art, which is well attended, and great blessing has been poured out in answer to the prayers of the Lord's people.

Mr. Moody has certainly won the hearts of the mothers who have been attending the services. As often happens, in the midst of his discourse on one occasion a baby added its tuneful note of appreciation, which somewhat disconcerted some of the audience, but not the speaker. With his ready tact he reminded them that they need not pay any attention to it, as they could hear a baby cry any time when they could not hear him preach, and asked them to bear even this little discomfort for the sake of the mothers, who, unless they brought their little ones, could not come to the meetings at all; and if anyone desired to quiet them they could relieve the mothers by taking and nursing the baby outside. Then with a few words upon a mother's love he gradually resumed the thread of his discourse. Special permission has been granted by the authorities of the Union, to allow the inmates to attend the meetings, and accordingly nearly every afternoon there has been quite a number of them, both men and women, sitting immediately in front of the speaker.

On Friday, by special request, Mr. Moody lectured on "Assurance," the subject of the prayer-meeting being "Our Children," and many were the requests which anxious parents poured forth. The absence of Mr. Sankey through indisposition has been a source of great disappointment to many, but his duties have been kindly undertaken by Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan on one occasion, and upon several others by Mr. Stebbins. The way in which Mr. Moody has held out in this arduous and incessant work cannot be considered as otherwise than providential.

LAST SUNDAY'S MEETINGS.

Mr. Moody's first Sunday in Croydon was a memorable one. Mr. Sankey's regretted absence robbed the meetings of much of the charm that he throws into them, and it is fervently hoped that he will be speedily restored to fill his important place in the great work.

The early address to Christian workers was indeed a treat, and seemed in full harmony with Nature's "Smiling Morn," which gladdened all around. Mr. Moody's subject was taken from Daniel xiii. 3. In his own hearty and forcible manner, he told out the Bible truth that those who live for God shall shine brightly after all earthly splendours have passed away; that nothing done for Him is small, if love be the motive power.

The eleven o'clock service was well attended, the large building being nearly full. A great number, evidently, were from the ranks of those for whom the service was specially held, "Non-church and chapel-goers." Mr. Moody's discourse on "The Compassion of Christ," one of his favourite themes, was listened to with eager attention. As the preacher told out some of the many Bible records of Christ's tenderness and compassion the Spirit was evidently drawing the hearts of many of the audience towards Him.

At the afternoon meeting advertised for women only the building was crowded. It was a sight new to Croydon, though often witnessed in London during the present series of Missions, to see a vast throng of wives, mothers, and daughters listening attentively to the evangelist's heart-moving appeals to cast their burdens upon the Lord. A large number stood up at the after-meeting to be prayed for. The men's service in the evening was another time of searching power. The preacher's subject was "Sowing and Reaping." Many went into the inquiry-room during the day to seek further counsel and help.

Miss Macpherson's Bairns.

THE noon-day prayer-meeting at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, was of an extremely interesting and novel character last Monday. Lord Shaftesbury presided, and said that his attendance was largely to express his deep personal respect towards Miss Annie Macpherson. With over sixty children she had come there that day to say good-bye, and on the morrow they were to embark for Canada. His whole heart was in the work in which Miss Macpherson was engaged, and he thought no more noble and patriotic work could be found than sending out the "waifs and strays" of London to new life, hope, and industry in Canadian homes. He pleasantly turned to the dear little children and addressed them in the most agreeable style, giving them his own motto: "Do your duty in the sphere to which God has called you."

We are sorry we cannot give at length our notes of Miss Macpherson's address. For the thirty-first time she was to sail with a precious cargo of little folk. Twenty-five of those present had no father, twenty-three no mother, and fifteen had neither. But her experience was that in the new homes her girls had gone to, taken in at first in love and pity, they had twined themselves round the hearts of their new parents and were the joy and light of their homes.

Many and fervent were the petitions at the throne of grace, that Miss Macpherson and the little folk should be carefully guarded by the Father's hand over the ocean and the greater sea of life.

Friends of the Temperance movement are asked to help in supporting the King's Heath Coffee Tavern. It has been of great service, and has nearly paid its way, but £40 are needed to meet expenses incurred in furnishing. Communications may be sent to Mr. B. Impey, King's Heath, near Birmingham.

The French in Madagascar.

THE French seem to be coming round to reason at last. They have made several desperate attempts to break up the Hova camp outside Tamatave, but have failed. As many of their men are ill with malarial fever, and numbers of them dying of it, they seem to be getting tired of the whole affair, and are thus being brought to their senses. They have altogether mistaken the people they had to deal with. Up to a certain point the Malagasy are a most patient people, but beyond that they are the perfect incarnations of obstinacy. It has been truly said of them: "Dealt with kindly and courteously, the Hova are a pliant race; but when thoroughly driven to bay they no longer know reason or self-advantage; they die, but do not yield."

We have had very little excitement on the whole, and a stranger visiting the capital now would never suspect for a moment that the country was at war. Our Sabbath services have all gone on as usual, and Antananarivo is the quietest and best conducted city on the Sabbath Day that I know of in the world. The monthly missionary meeting of the nine city churches has been held every month, and also the weekly prayer-meeting by the city churches.

The new Queen, the Prime Minister, and the Chief Officers of State, have worshipped at the palace church as usual every Sabbath since the late Queen's death. I preached in the Palace Church a few weeks ago. Apart from a shade of anxiety on the countenance of the Prime Minister, and the mention of the fact in the prayers of the native deacons, there was nothing to indicate that the country was at war, or that we were not at peace with all the world, and all the world with us. The native deacons prayed for the French, and asked that God would give them other hearts, and lead them to see how wrong it was to take that which belonged to others, and take them back with safety and peace as honest men.

All through this trying time the Malagasy have been somewhat like Israel of old in one respect, at least, for "quietness and confidence" in the justness of their cause "have been their strength," and they have possessed their souls in a patience that has been perfectly surprising. Of course it may be quite true that but few of them have really understood the seriousness of the situation, still their conduct from the first has been very surprising and most praiseworthy.

The French have sent out a flag of truce to the Hova camp from Tamatave, seeking an interview with the Hova commander, to see if they can come to terms, which they can, if the French will be satisfied with their money instead of their land. When they met with the French last October they were prepared to pay them a million sterling if they would only go away and leave them. If they now come to terms, and peace is proclaimed, then it is prayer and patience that have conquered this time, and not powder and shot.

We are most hopeful here, from all we know, and from the fact that advances have come from the French, that they will be able to make some settlement. We fancy they must have had telegrams from home with very positive orders on the point, as they treated the Hova officers, who went to try and settle with them last October, with a very high hand; but the hearts of all men are in his hands, "by whom kings reign and princes decree justice."—Yours sincerely.

FOREIGN MISSONS.—The substance of the recent address on "Apostolic Methods in Foreign Mission Work," delivered by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, which a short time since appeared in our columns, with others on the same subject by Rev. Dr. Nevius and Rev. Prof. Kellogg, D.D., have been published in pamphlet form by the Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C. (price 2d.), and will well repay attentive perusal. The first annual meeting of this Society will be held on Friday, May 28, in the lecture hall of the Y.M.C.A., chair to be taken at 8 o'clock, by Mr. G. Williams. Brief addresses will be given by missionaries attached to several of the leading societies.

Rev. J. Mountain in South Africa.

WRITING from Port Elizabeth, South Africa, on April 10, Mr. Mountain says:—I am glad to say that I am again at work, and that last evening we concluded our second Mission since my illness. God has blessed both our evangelistic and Blue Ribbon meetings. Our congregations at Tarkastad and Queenstown have been very good, and in each place there have been hopeful cases of conversion to God, while many have donned the Blue Ribbon.

The prominence we give to the Temperance part of our work provokes great and often unscrupulous opposition. I do not hesitate to say that of all the evils afflicting this colony, drink is the greatest. Yet there is not one paid agent in the whole colony to attack it. Meanwhile it is slaying its tens of thousands. I would ask the prayers of your readers in this lonely and hand-to-hand fight.

We are starting on a three months' tour to Dordritch, Jamestown, Alewal North, after which we hope to visit a few places in the southern parts of the colony, and, if possible, then to spend two months in Natal preparatory to our visiting New Zealand.

We rejoice to hear of the glorious work in London. God bless Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Their names and their hymns are almost as well known here as in England.

Glasgow Prison-Gate Mission.

THIS interesting work has been carried on with increased vigour for more than two years under the superintendence of the committee of the House of Shelter, and the efficient management of the matron, Miss MacDonald. The Mission pays the women daily or weekly wages, not keeping a locked door, and giving a considerable amount of liberty, thereby testing them the more readily; and after nearly six years' trial of this plan we do not feel inclined to alter it. Above 300 disappointed women have been received during the past year, but the largest number of these only stayed a day or two, being unable to stand the test of work, and also for having too little laundry accommodation. A few found work for themselves, but most, we fear, returned to their old life. On the other hand, many have worked on steadily for many months, even bearing the severe test of passing eleven public-houses on their way to our dormitory in Young-street. Forty-five is our daily average number (though fifty-five were crowded in during the winter).

The behaviour of the women is remarkably good, and some have, we trust, yielded their hearts to the Lord. We still have satisfactory accounts from a number who have gone out to situations. Several of these have shown their gratitude for kindness received by subscribing to the funds of the Mission or by giving the women a treat.

The financial statement speaks well for their industry, £776 17s. having been received for work done last year; but we have not yet been able to make the Mission self-supporting. There is a balance on the wrong side for last year of nearly £100.

The work has now quite outgrown our present premises, and we are thankful to say that we have now come into possession of premises in Whitevale-street, which will give accommodation for a good many more inmates. About £3000 will be required for this purpose exclusive of the price of the property, £2500. The latter is converted into a ground rent of £100 until we are able to redeem it. Of the first sum a considerable portion has already been contributed, and we hope to open the new premises in a short time free of debt.

AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND WOMEN.—A very urgent appeal is made on behalf of the Home for Aged Christian Blind Women, late of 90, Junction-road, Holloway. The general maintenance fund is quite exhausted. Several very deserving and distressing cases are waiting admission, so soon as funds and vacancies permit. Help will be thankfully received by Rev. and Mrs. BRIGHT, at the Home, Mansion House, Hauley-road, London, N.

Alone with God.

"Nevertheless, I am continually with thee."—Ps. lxxiii. 23.
"Fear thou not, for I am with thee."—Is. xli. 10.

"ALONE with God!" O sacred loneliness,
Sweeter than all society, to be
In blissful fellowship alone with Thee;
To hear Thee say, when earthly friends are far,
"Lo, I am ever with thee!" Saviour mine,
And dost Thou condescend to speak such words
To me who oft have left Thee, wandering wide
From my soul's centre, seeking peace and joy
In other love and "lovers"? Vain the quest:
For Thou alone canst give me perfect rest,
And with Thee, Thee alone, "I shall be satisfied."

A. LLEWELLYN.

New Seamen's Bethel, Glasgow.

THE handsome new Bethel for Seamen which has been erected in Eaglesham-street, Govan-road, by the Glasgow Seamen's Friend Society was opened on Friday last. The buildings and the ground on which they have been erected have cost about £6000, and it must be highly gratifying to the Seamen's Friend Society that of this sum £5775 have already been subscribed. At the opening ceremony there was a large attendance of ladies and gentlemen. Lord Provost M'Onie, who presided, expressed his deep sympathy with the work.

Mr. ALEX. ALLAN, Chairman of the Seamen's Friend Society, said the Society was an institution of old standing. It was formed on May 13, 1822, nearly sixty-two years ago. The increase in the tonnage of the port had, of course, brought a corresponding increase in the number of sailors coming to Glasgow, but he doubted very much if the provision made for their spiritual welfare had been at all in proportion to the numbers who now annually came to this port. It was with the view of providing to some extent for this want that the Seamen's Institute at the Broomielaw was acquired some years ago, and that the premises in which they were assembled had been erected. They had there on the upper floor a seamen's chapel, and on the ground floor there were free reading, recreation, and coffee rooms. These rooms would be open daily, from ten o'clock in the morning till ten at night, and he thought they would prove very suitable for the purposes intended. He was sure it was the earnest wish and prayer of all that the work might greatly prosper, and that by the blessing of God many of our sailors might be brought to the knowledge of the truth as it was in Jesus.

Provost M'Lean, of Partick, Bailie M'Pherson, Rev. Robert Thomson, Mr. George Macfarlane, Mr. R. H. Hunter (Hon. Sec. of the Society), Mr. Galloway, ex-Provost Thompson, Mr. Hatfield, Rev. Mr. Griffiths (Bristol), and Rev. Mr. Renfrew also spoke.

YOUNG WOMEN'S INSTITUTE, BRIGHTON.—Feeling the necessity for a place where young women could assemble in the evening and on Sundays, for religious and social instruction, Mr. G. T. Congreve built and furnished, at his own expense, in November, 1882, a temporary iron structure, where, amongst other attractions, an extensive library was formed, and the scheme has proved a great success, the number of members at the close of 1883 being 163. It has been found necessary, however, to secure a more permanent building, and on May 1 two memorial stones were laid by Lady Cardross, of Holmes, and the Earl of Chichester, of a house to contain thirteen rooms. The Earl said that he considered it a great privilege to take a share in this truly Christian work, as he believed it to be. From a long knowledge of Brighton, he could say that for young women, especially those who were away from their homes and the control of their parents, there could not be a more useful institution. He knew by sad experience the great temptations young women were exposed to, and the risk they had of falling under the influence of evil companions. He believed, however, that many would be saved from these dangers and enabled to maintain a respectable position by means of this valuable Institution.

Englishwomen in Paris.

SIR,—Being a complete stranger in Paris; passing through that city on my way into Switzerland, Miss Pryde very kindly allowed me to take up my quarters with her at her Institute, 22, Rue des Acacias (formerly in the Rue Tilsitt). Her "Home" for English Governesses is in the Avenue du Bois de Bologne; but it is at the Institute where all the outside work is done, in a quiet, unsectarian, and unostentatious spirit. Only those who are actually living there can form the slightest conception of the wise counsel and kindly help given; also, where absolutely necessary, a meal and pecuniary aid; and the recent extension of this work is full proof of its deep need in Paris. It combines with its comforts a first-class French education without extra charge. Miss Pryde not only endeavours to find employment for each one, but also to make herself personally acquainted with their interests.

AN ENGLISHWOMAN.

Miss de Broen's Medical Mission in Paris.

THE cradle of the Belleville Mission was a tiny room. It was soon filled with poor communist women, eager to attend Miss de Broen's sewing classes, and became almost like the Black Hole of Calcutta ere it was replaced by a nice iron chapel, sent over from England. Now this iron building in its turn is overcrowded. As many as 300 sick people attend in one day. Sewing classes, children's school, night classes, Gospel services, all succeed one another in some section of the same building so rapidly that there can be no time to ventilate it thoroughly.

I have known Dr. Macrae, the medical missionary, from his first arrival in Paris, and have seen with great joy that the ever-increasing number of patients hear the Gospel from his lips. The sick come from great distances, not merely from all quarters of Paris, but many find their way to Belleville from towns and villages several hours distant by rail, so that the tracts given and Gospel portions sold travel to places hitherto unevangelised.

I feel convinced the Lord's stewards will deem it a privilege to save the doctor and his helpers the strain on health consequent on overcrowding, and Miss de Broen the pain of seeing them suffer. Ground for the site of suitable medical premises has long since been secured and paid for. That the building may soon be erected, and that all who contribute towards it may experience the blessing spoken of in 1 Chron. xxxix. 9, is my earnest desire and prayer.

EMIGRATION TO CANADA.—Mr. Jones, of the London Samaritan Society, and his party of emigrants, have arrived safely at Quebec. He reports work as being plentiful, and the prospects for agricultural labourers, mechanics, navvies, general labourers, and domestic servants, as being exceedingly good; another party, under the care of an experienced gentleman, leave London on the 15th inst. During Mr. Jones' absence the secretary, Mr. H. H. Board, at the Society's Offices, Ludgate-hill, will attend to all communications.

THE NATIONAL LIFEBOAT INSTITUTION.—We have received the annual report of the Royal National Lifeboat Institution, which records another year of noble, self-sacrificing, and perilous endeavour to save human life. It is prepared to establish and maintain a Lifeboat Station on any part of the coast of the United Kingdom where it can be shown, from previous disasters, that a lifeboat is required. It is requisite that there should be a sufficient number of men (fishermen, or others accustomed to the management of boats at sea) to man the lifeboat, and a Committee formed from the residents in the neighbourhood to superintend the Station and obtain such small annual subscriptions as may contribute towards a portion of the expense of the Lifeboat Station. Communications may be addressed to the Secretary of the Institution, 14, John-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

BOMBAY.

SOME fifty persons have publicly sought salvation in connection with the Methodist Church in Bombay during the past four months. A work of genuine revival is going on in Lanowli, with some features of special interest.—Indian Witness.

CAPTURED LANGUAGES.

Science is now being used to entrap strange dialects. An interesting experiment is to be made by Dr. Zintrgaff, who is about to visit the interior of Africa. He takes with him a phonograph wherewith to fix the speech and melodies of hitherto unknown tribes. The plates used in Africa will be sent to Berlin to be enrolled by another machine and thus to re-emit the sounds received.—Regions Beyond.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN LIVINGSTONIA.

Dr. Laws, who for eight years has worked as a medical missionary on Lake Nyassa, but has kept before him, as most important work, the translation of the Scriptures into the Chinyanga and Chitonga dialects, writes that the first draft of the translation of the New Testament into the former tongue is now completed. Mark's Gospel has already been printed at Lovedale, and John's Gospel is passing through the press in Edinburgh.

A YOUNG HINDOO

was recently baptized in the English church of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Lucknow. He had laboured under a deep sense of sin, and seeing the English church, he asked where the minister lived. His informant happened to be the sweeper in Mr. Clancey's family. Mr. Clancey discovered in the young man an earnest desire to seek salvation. For two weeks he met him daily, talking with him and discussing questions which had given rise to doubt in the young man's mind, and praying with him. Thus God honoured his faithful counsel and gave him this fruit to his ministry.

NEW YORK.

Our work among the Roman Catholics in this city continues manifestly blessed of God, as it has been sustained by his divine guidance for the past six years. In that time I have received 600 persons in our church in this city. Rev. James F. McNamee in Brooklyn, and Rev. Stephen Dekins, in Newark, N.J. (both converted Catholic preachers), have been equally successful. Our audience averages 2000 every Sunday, about equally divided between Protestants and Catholics, and many even of the former have found the Saviour through our preaching Jesus only.—Yours sincerely,

JAMES A. O'CONNOR.

CALCUTTA.

There was an interesting spectacle at the usual service in the Lall Bazaar Seamen's Coffee-rooms on Sunday evening, when a sailor who had been converted to God in those rooms before his last voyage appealed to several of his unsaved comrades sitting near him to tell if he had not been true to his profession of Christ during the voyage. In one respect the preaching of the Gospel among sailors is the most assuring of all varieties of missionary work. The services and other works of charity continue without abatement at the coffee rooms. One, two, three, or more are seeking salvation each evening.—Indian Witness, April 12.

CENTRAL AFRICA.

Rev. Dr. Laws, of the Livingstonia Mission, who recently returned to Scotland after nine years' labour on the shores of Lake Nyassa, has been giving a very interesting account of his work in the Bristo United Presbyterian Church. The plan upon which the Mission is conducted is threefold—first, evangelistic; secondly, medical; and thirdly, industrial. In evangelical effort, which is difficult because of the dense ignorance which prevails, the missionary is able to turn the eagerness of the people "to know" to good account. As a "medicine man," the Gospel teacher gains easy admission to quarters which would otherwise be barred against him, while as a director or manager of industries, as these are conducted on the shores of Lake Nyassa, he is in a position to exercise a wholesome paternal authority. Lake Nyassa covers an area as large as Scotland, and the region around is occupied by a great variety of tribes.

Temperance Notes.

THE open-air campaign for the present season, at Hoxton Hall, was inaugurated on Saturday evening last.

At a recent Friends' wedding in Gloucester, all the company, the bride included, wore the blue ribbon.

A very successful series of Gospel Temperance meetings has been held at Brighton. Mr. William Noble was the chief speaker.

Owing to the state of his health, Mr. F. Smith, Secretary of the Band of Hope Union, has been obliged to resign his secretarial duties.

The Belfast Witness thinks the prospects of the Sunday Closing Bill for Ireland are somewhat gloomy. Its enemies are very watchful and unscrupulous.

The alarming consumption of alcohol in Switzerland has induced the Government to propose fresh legislation on the subject. A prohibitive tax will probably be put on distillation.

Mr. Matthew Burnett, the well-known Temperance reformer, has returned to Melbourne after an absence of three and a-half years. Many thousands have signed the pledge at his meetings in Western and South Australia. He goes to Tasmania for an evangelistic and Temperance campaign.

Deputations have recently waited on the Lord Advocate and the Prime Minister, pressing on them the necessity of further Temperance legislation for Scotland. Though Mr. McLagan's Local Option Bill was rejected by a large majority in the House of Commons, it is believed that a less drastic measure would be successful.

The Gospel Temperance meetings by Messrs. Booth and Glover, in Melbourne, have resulted in nearly 13,500 pledges. One paper says that every tenth person in the city wears the blue ribbon. Mr. Booth's health has again broken down, and Mr. Glover is continuing the crusade in the suburbs. The evangelists have received a cordial welcome to Sydney.

The closing Saturday night Temperance meeting of the session in the Polytechnic, Regent-street, was presided over by Mr. John Ripley, and addressed by Mr. John Hilton and Capt. Waterson. Above 1500 young people from the age of eighteen to twenty-five were present, and seventy signed the pledge. There are 500 students and 2000 members in this remarkable institution, and 1000 applicants for membership are waiting admission.

At the anniversary of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Temperance Society a characteristic letter from Mr. Spurgeon was read. He said: "The drink must be dried up, fountain, stream, and pool; this river of death must cease to flow through our land. The desolate homes, the crowded jails, the untimely graves, and the terrible destruction of souls, all wrought by drunkenness, inspire you with fervour for the cause of Temperance."

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For many souls converted at Messrs. Pentecost's and Stebbins' Mission at Mildmay, and for great refreshing to the Christians attending the meetings.——For recent mercy when in danger of accident.

PRAYER.—A Christian asks prayer that God may open up a path for him in the foreign missionary field.——Richard Weaver intends visiting Belfast on May 18 for a series of evangelistic services in Hermon Hall. The brethren there desire prayer for much blessing on the meetings, and that very many may be won for Christ.

REMARKABLE TESTIMONY.—On Wednesday, May 7, a large company of working men and their wives, from Collingwood-street Mission, New-cut, met together at the Mission Chapel, Little Wild-street, Drury-lane, and gave delightful testimony to the power of the Gospel to create anew the vilest of offenders. The meeting throughout was one of special interest, and at the close we had the joy of immersing in a profession of faith twenty-two recent converts. It is quite clear that our brothers Young, of the New-cut, are in the right place, and our faithful Lord is greatly blessing them in the conversion of souls. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN kindly remember both them and their work in believing prayer?

GUILDFORD.

STEPS are being taken to form a Y.M.C.A. in this town, on undenominational lines.

AUSTRALIA.

The Southern Cross of Melbourne states: "Young Men's Christian Associations are taking vigorous root in these colonies. Sydney is erecting an immense building for its young men, to cost some £35,000. The cost of the Adelaide institution will be £27,000."

WORCESTER.

This Association was visited by a representative of the National Council on the 30th ult., who addressed the members on "The Original, Essential, Constant, and Realised Aim of the Association." We are glad to report that this Branch of the Y.M.C.A. is doing a good work.

MALVERN.

The first annual meeting of this Association was held on the 29th ult. The report, read by the Hon. Sec., was a most encouraging one. Addresses were delivered by the President, Mr. J. P. Cheshire, also by Revs. F. W. Devonport, A. C. Gill, C. W. Pratt, Messrs. G. Skey, — Nott, T. Jameson, and Hind Smith.

BLACKHEATH.

A meeting was held on the 22nd ult. in St. Michael's Church Schoolroom, Captain Seaton Churchill in the chair, for the purpose of forming a branch of the Y.M.C.A. A provisional committee was formed and the rules of the Central Association were adopted. Mr. Hind Smith attended as a deputation from the National Council of the Y.M.C.A.

BOW.

The inaugural meeting of this new branch was held in St. Stephen's Hall, Saxon-road, on the 26th ult. The Earl of Shaftesbury, who presided, delivered an address full of practical advice to the audience and committee, and dwelt largely upon the value such an association would be to the teeming population of young men in the neighbourhood. The meeting was addressed by Revs. T. R. L. Lawrence, — Fletcher, Mr. Hind Smith, and others.

IRELAND.

The Association, recently formed in Limerick City, is progressing well under the presidency of Mr. T. L. Ferguson and the secretaryship of Mr. F. A. Fitt. The newly-formed Southern District Union of Y.M C.A.'s of which Dublin is the centre, has agreed upon a constitution for the furtherance of the work amongst young men in the South of Ireland. The Belfast Association in its enlarged and well-adapted premises is being made a great blessing to hundreds of young men. The Association at Carrickfergus has, through the recent visit of Mr. Hind Smith, reformed its basis of membership and adopted the London Rule VII. relating thereto. Londonderry has engaged Mr. Lapsley (late of Inverness) as Secretary.

CENTRAL SCOTLAND.

At the annual Conference of the Stirling District Union of Young Men's Christian and Fellowship Associations, held at Stirling on Saturday, the 3rd inst., the District Secretary reported that the number of Associations in connection with the Union had increased during the year from twenty-three to thirty-eight, thirteen of these are new Associations. This increase was stated to be largely due to the exertions of the travelling secretary for the National Union, Mr. R. Henderson Smith, the efficiency of whose work is being felt over the whole of Scotland. The membership of the Union was last year 1003, and is now nearly 1400.

Mr. J. W. Reid, Herbertshire Castle Academy, afterwards read a most admirable paper on "Personal influence as a power in Christian work amongst young men." About sixty delegates were present.

WEST LONDON TABERNACLE.—Thirty-five members were received into fellowship at West London Tabernacle, Notting-hill, on a recent Sunday evening. The pastor of the church has lately baptized about sixty persons, a large number of whom are young people from the Sunday-school, and children from the Children's Special Service Mission in connection with the Tabernacle.

Evangelistic Notes.

GOLDEN-LANE.—The open-air services in connection with Mr. W. J. Orsman's Mission were commenced on Sunday week, on the steps of the Royal Exchange. A few days previously a conference of 100 persons, who volunteer their assistance in the general operations, was held, when plans were arranged for the summer season.

CORNWALL.—Mr. T. Moreman, the blind evangelist of Kingswood, has been engaged since January by the United Methodist Free Churches, in the Camelford circuit, Cornwall. He has conducted Missions at Pengelly, Wadebridge, Camelford, St. Tudy, and Port Isaac, and nearly 500 persons have, at these places professed conversion under his ministry.

T. E. WAKEFIELD.

WEST BROMWICH.—Mr. George Green, evangelist, has concluded a very successful fortnight's Mission at Ebenezer Chapel. The results have been very highly gratifying and encouraging. The room specially set apart for "inquirers" was crowded each night of the Mission. Various means will be devised and adopted to strengthen the converts in the faith, and so help them in their endeavours upward and onward.

ISAAC HARTELL.

ST. GILES'S.—On Sunday week a series of interesting open-air services were held in and about the Seven Dials. The occasion was the opening of the season, during which this work is carried on in the thoroughfares of this crowded locality by Mr. William Harrison and his fellow-workers. The services were continued all day without interruption; the last service was one of praise, which was held in Five Dials at nine o'clock in the evening. This "day of work for God" was followed up during the evenings of the week by special meetings for the working people in the Mission Hall, Moor-street.

STUTTON CHURCH MISSION.—A fortnight of Mission services has been held in this parish, conducted by Mr. J. Taylor Smith, of the Highbury College. The meetings were held in the schoolroom, which from the first proved too small for the numbers that attended. Many anxious souls were led to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. Three special services were held for men only, and it was most encouraging in a small country parish, to see about one hundred men gathered together waiting anxiously to receive the message frem on high. A special service for boys proved a very bright one. During the last week of the Mission many requests for prayer and praise were sent in, these being read each evening before the address.

Curate of Stutton, Suffolk.

THE GOSPEL IN FRANCE.—In the beautiful city of Bourges in France, a large military depôt, there are at least 200 soldiers who are nominally Protestants, but of whose interests, temporal or spiritual, no one is in charge. The Protestant pastor has his hands very full, having two parishes some miles apart to see to. What a field would this be for an earnest servant of God! What a work to inaugurate, especially as the present reception of the Gospel in France is most encouraging. I shall be happy to supply further information to any inquirer, but may add that the position should be filled by one who has the means of living, as well as of providing at first the little outlay necessary in such a work. This last the Pastor estimates at perhaps £10 to £12 a year.—Yours truly,

M. B. Y. B.

"HOPEFUL SIGNS IN FRANCE."—The article with this heading in your last issue gives perfectly the state of mind of our people, but the address given of a library is not correct. All the tracts bearing the imprint of 204, Rue de Rivoli, have been carried over to the Depôt Central, 4, Place du Théatre Francais, near the Palais Royal. Friends coming over to France can be supplied with small illustrated tracts, both for adults and children; taken in large quantities they can be obtained at a cheap rate. Another article in the same number of THE CHRISTIAN (page 11) speaks of the "French monthly tracts." They also are in stock at our Depôt des Publications populaires. It would be well if friends in England knew of our Bible and Tract Depôt in Paris, where they can avail themselves of all the information of the different Mission works and churches; we are always glad to give them, and too happy to put ourselves at their disposal.—Ever yours truly,

M. VASSEUR, Manager.

Notices of Books, &c.

SERAPH SONGS. By ROBERT OXLEY. 6d. Sunday-school Union. This is a neat little book of original hymns and music, suitable for the school or the house.

WHAT IS THE SALVATION ARMY REALLY DOING IN INDIA? By Mr. H. W. FRY. 1d. Book Stores, 8, Paternoster-square. This little brochure gives a graphic account of Army work in India, and is written by an able advocate and warm friend of the movement.

Many readers will hail a new edition of that familiar book known as A COLLECTION OF THE PROMISES OF SCRIPTURE UNDER THEIR PROPER HEADS. By SAMUEL CLARKE, D.D. It is republished by the Religious Tract Society as one of their new series of Companions for a Quiet Home, and should be in the hands of every reader of God's Word, as a help to its spiritual study.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN EVANGELICAL REVIEW. 3s.6d. Nisbet & Co. There are two articles of special interest in the current number. One by Professor Croskery on "Perfect Sanctification" exposes from a sound and scriptural point of view much of the false teaching which is current under this name. The other article of considerable interest is by Rev. R. G. Balfour, of Edinburgh, on "Theories of the Atonement," especially those of Bushnell and Macleod Campbell.

THE LAW AND THE PROPHETS is the title given to the volume of "Hulsean Lectures for 1882," preached by the Rev. F. Watson, M.A., before the University of Cambridge. Those who desire to see a refutation of the theories of Old Testament critics, like Reuss and Professor Kuenen, will find satisfaction from these treatises, which are marked by clearness and argumentative skill. Copious explanatory notes and appendices are given, containing a large amount of valuable information on subjects of great importance to Bible students. The book is published by T. F. Unwin, Paternoster-square.

LIFE AND TIMES OF JOHN WYCLIFFE, THE MORNING STAR OF THE REFORMATION. (2s. 6d.) WYCLIFFE ANECDOTES, by the Rev. S. G. GREEN, D.D. (1s. 6d.) Religious Tract Society. Both these books will prove a welcome guide to all who desire to acquaint themselves with the life and times of one to whom God gave the honour of introducing his Word into our land in our own tongue. They are written in a most readable style, are crowded with well-selected facts and incidents, and enriched with pictorial illustrations of memorable scenes in the history of the great reformer.

From Messrs. W. Hunt & Co., 12, Paternoster-row, we have received two little books by Rev. J. C. RYLE, D.D. They consist of THOUGHTS ON BAPTISM, and THOUGHTS ON SICKNESS. Invalids will find much that is comforting and helpful in the latter book, which has our hearty commendation. So also has another volume from the same publishers, entitled RUTH THE MOABITESS, by ALFRED L. HUNT, M.A., Rector of St. Mary, Maldon. (1s.) As a short commentary on the Book of Ruth it contains many valuable critical and expository hints, useful to Sunday-school teachers and others.

SERMONS BY THE REV. W. MORLEY PUNSHON, LL.D. 5s. 6d, Paternoster-row. This second series of Sermons, by one of the best known and most deeply lamented modern divines, is possessed of rare merit, being distinguished not only by all the author's well-known ability as a preacher, but containing several discourses bearing on the ministry of special interest. There are also sermons relating to social questions rife at the present time, which are full of wise counsel and suggestion. The volume cannot fail to be appreciated warmly by all to whom Christian truth put in practical as well as eloquent form is welcome.

HOWARD, THE PHILANTHROPIST. By Dr. Stoughton. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Those who are acquainted with the writings of Dr. Stoughton will not be surprised to find this biography written in that terse and attractive style which characterises so many of his works. The life of a man like John Howard cannot fail to be of interest, and some of the scenes in his visitations of English and Continental prisons are very effectively written. In addition to this the author has visited almost every locality mentioned, and is, therefore, the better able to present a graphic description of the events for which they are remarkable. Short sketches of Howard's chief friends are also introduced, which lend an additional charm to a book otherwise of unusual interest.

A TEACHER'S COMMENTARY ON ST. MARK, from the same publishers, by Rev. R. GLOVER, 4s. 6d., gives in compact form the substance of several articles which appeared in the Sunday-school Chronicle. It contains ample notes, and deals fully with passages difficult to understand.

KADESH-BARNEA: Its importance and probable site, including studies of the route of the Exodus. By H. Clay Trumbull, D.D. 21s. Hodder & Stoughton. This work will attract readers of all tastes. Those who delight in travel and adventure will find much that will interest them, while antiquarians, and those who prefer historical and geographical research, have an ample field opened up to them. But especially is it of value to the Bible student, inasmuch as it affords an important link in the chain of the Exodus. Dr. Trumbull has spared no pains in the identification of this ancient locality, and his personal discoveries have rendered his testimony invaluable. In his introduction he says: "Kadesh-Barnea may seem a small subject for a large book, but it was a site of great importance forty centuries ago. It was more than once the scene of events on which for the time the history of the world was pivotting; and for now well-nigh twenty centuries its location has been a matter of doubt and discussion among Jewish and Christian scholars." The book has met with great acceptance in America, and we wish it equal success here.

T. B. SMITHIES: A Memoir. By Rev. G. STRINGER ROWE. 1s. 6d. S. W. Partridge & Co. The first thing that strikes us in this unpretentious memorial volume is the truly admirable photographic presentment of its subject. The open, genial, benevolent-looking countenance of Mr. Smithies is faithfully and happily reproduced; the very fidelity of the portrait causes a keen sense of disappointment that we cannot again hear the earnest and sympathetic tones of the voice that was so often lifted on the side of righteousness and truth, but is now silent in death. Within the bounds which he has set for himself, Mr. Rowe has produced a sketch worthy of his theme. What he gives us is so excellent that we wish he had given us more. Mr. Smithies' best and most lasting memorial will doubtless be found in the stream of good and attractive literature that he set flowing, till from small beginnings it has overspread the habitable globe. Mr. Rowe's brief monograph will help to deepen the affectionate esteem in which Mr. Smithies was held by all who knew him. We trust also it will stimulate many young men to imitate our departed friend in the singular devotion to principle and to the highest weal of his fellow-men, which, by God's blessing, enabled him to achieve so much.

The Religious Tract Society has made a valuable contribution to Missionary literature by the publication of a new edition of the HISTORY OF PROTESTANT MISSIONS IN INDIA, 1706 TO 1882, by the Rev. M. A. SHERRING, M.A., and carefully revised by the Rev. E. STORROW. It forms a manual of information no lover of Missions should be without. It gives an impartial and succinct account of the progress of the Gospel in India as connected with all branches of the Protestant Church, and presents a broad and accurate survey of the results thus far achieved. Nothing could be more calculated to cause abounding thankfulness, or to stimulate renewed ardour in the work than a perusal of this unique volume. The author was a man of distinguished character and ability, and pre-eminently fitted to write such a book; while Mr. Storrow has added fresh interest to it by his careful revision and extension of information to the present date. Young men it is to be hoped will read this volume with eagerness; they will find it worthy of all the thoughtful interest they can concentrate upon it. It is a standard work, and to be hailed with deepest satisfaction. The maps are a special feature, being quite new, and showing all the various stations occupied by different societies. (6s.)

THE PEOPLE CALLED QUAKERS.*

IN a goodly volume lately issued, Mr. Bickley gives a complete picture of the manners and morals of the seventeenth century. His book depicts not only the religious but the political aspect of that state of society which produced "the people called Quakers." It would, perhaps, be more correct to say that the political aspect has the ascendency. The author has a warm admiration for George Fox, and a due appreciation of his sincerity, courage, and fearlessness. Although he fails, as many modern friends will think, to fully appreciate the power and spirit of George Fox's teachings, they will doubtless welcome the book as a faithful picture of the outward concerns of their society during the first fifty years of its existence. All the "weighty" matter which usually makes Friends' books dull reading to the unsympathetic, are in this case eliminated, and a thoroughly readable and entertaining volume is the result. It is as reliable, too, as anyone, not a member of the Society of Friends, would be likely to produce.

With regard to the narrative itself, we venture to think that Christians of every name would find profit in its perusal. It is a story of enthusiastic missionary work, extending to many countries; of opposition to the powers of evil in high and low positions; to unjust magistrates, and to priestcraft; of calm endurance of wrong; of patient suffering of bonds and imprisonment, mingled with a tender care for the concerns and welfare of others such as has rarely been shown forth by any body of Christians since New Testament days—the present writer excepts only the Waldenses.

Although Mr. Bickley makes a mistake in intimating in the preface of this work that modern Friends as a body have lowered their standard with regard to the unlawfulness of war, he concludes his last chapter with the following estimate of the fruits of Quakerism:—

"As a body, the Quakers have been noted for the large amount of time and attention they have devoted to acts of practical charity. Constantly and perseveringly they worked for the abolition of slavery, for the amelioration of the Penal Code, and the more merciful treatment of prisoners and lunatics, until at length they achieved their objects. In later times they have been equally assiduous in endeavouring to open the eyes of the English people to the folly of war, and the wisdom of settling disputes by arbitration. It would be impossible in the limits of a small work to name all the philanthropic movements which they have either originated, or with which they have been identified; but it would be unfair not to mention their uninterrupted and consistent efforts in the cause of education, and their admirable system by which the child of every Friend, however poor, can receive a good boarding-school education; the large part they have taken in the Temperance movement, in the City Missions, and in the founding and support of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and the Society for the Protection of the Aborigines. And they have done something more — by their strict honesty, unimpeachable honour, undeviating truthfulness, and indifference to the sneers of the world, they have been a powerful means of upholding the credit and business morality of the country.

"At the present time the Society of Friends is a body inconsiderable only in point of numbers. Its influence remains measureless; and surely it is well that it should be so. The time is not yet come when we can afford to spare from among us such a sect as this. There are yet wars and rumours of wars; the people of every great nation in the world still groan under the abominable burden of vast standing armies the greatest folly of the age. The poor are still oppressed in their wages, and vice flaunts itself on the footpath, while virtue is insulted and thrust into the gutter. Successful swindles are lauded and admired, whilst our gaols are filled with men who, if guilty, are infinitely less wicked; workhouses are full, and even now men are allowed to starve in our midst. Lust, oppression, and cruelty still stalk unchecked through the land, and God's holy name is blasphemed daily in our streets. When all these things are altered, then—and not till then—can we afford to lose a Society whose whole career has been one long course of benevolence and justice, one long battle against evil, one long struggle for God and for truth."

HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5, and 6, Regent-square, Gray's Inn-road, London, W.C.

This Society was established in 1860 for the reception of the less degraded class of penitent young women. Young women are admitted on any day, and coming from any quarter whatsoever, if there be room and funds. Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied. A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women before they become mothers, as are untitted from their previous good character and position to mix with others. The applications for admission are painfully urgent. Funds are greatly needed.

John Wesley:

HIS LIFE AND TIMES.

By JOHN W. KIRTON, LL.D.,

Author of "Happy Homes, and How to make Them."

"This 'LIFE OF WESLEY' is precisely what it is intended to be—an interesting, condensed account of one of England's most popular men, adapted to popular use."
Christian Commonwealth, January 24.

"There are many lives of Mr. Wesley, and he who writes another must necessarily borrow from Mr. Tyerman's massive work. Dr. Kirton, whom we always associate with 'Buying your own Cherries,' has compiled a shilling book, which is published at the office of THE CHRISTIAN, and contains in a handy form all that the bulk of our people need to know of the great Methodist. The work is very well done; the book is eminently readable, and will be sure to command attention. To stimulate our own friends to get the biography, we give the following anecdotes, which will be new to many."—Sword and Trowel, March, 1884.

"Whitefield was not a framer of discipline, not a leader of a sect, not a founder of societies, not a ruler of men, but pre-eminently a winner of souls. Would that such preachers were multiplied in the present day! We thank Mr. Andrews for this seasonable addition to our religious biography. No young preacher or student should be without it. Or, The Profit and Pleasure of Bible Study.
BY GEORGE F. PENTECOST, M.A.
With Introductions by Rev. JOSEPH COOK and Rev. J. H. VINCENT, D.D.

"The Author is well known in this country, as well as in America, as an able and successful evangelist and preacher. The book is the well-arranged product of a fresh and vigorous mind; steeped in biblical thought and spirit: and is fitted in no ordinary measure to give clear views of the scope and purpose of the Bible; to confirm faith in its Divine origin and authority; and to guide to such a use of it as may build up the reader, both in holiness and comfort, and in zeal and usefulness, unto Eternal Life. While admirably fitted for young converts, no Christian can read it without both stimulus and profit."—The Outlook, Feb. 1, 1884.

MAGNETIC TREATMENT THE SAFEST AND MOST EFFECTUAL.

WHILE the scientific electrician has adapted Electric force to transmit the thoughts of men at lightning speed, and has been working wonders among the arts and manufactures of our time, the medical galvanist has been supposed to be doing, by Electricity, a manufacturing or repairing work in the human organism. This he cannot do. He can only supply, by art, the natural force or stimulus which will enable Nature herself to accomplish the work of restoration. In confirmation of this fact, medical men have become so acquainted with failure from galvanic treatment that they justly warn their patients against placing themselves in the hands of galvanists. The too powerful effect has often been such as to bring the remedy itself into undeserved contempt. We leave the reader to imagine how far the ill effects of galvanism are increased when in the hands of those deficient of the most elementary scientific attainments; or, when used by persons totally unacquainted with physiology, pathology, or medicine—their only qualification being that they know how to produce a shock by chemical Electricity. Considering that so little is known or really understood concerning the physiological effects of this agent, it is but justice to ourselves to seek the advice of those only who, by a long practical experience, can safely direct the use of so subtle an agent. The Medical Times says: "Medical agents will do much in the treatment of disease; but Magneto-Electricity will do more, and produce a more decided result, with permanent advantage from its application." Experience has led us to the conclusion that of the different forms of Electricity, the one termed "Magnetic" is the most effectual, because it possesses a penetrating and permeating action lacking in others. We do not therefore claim any new discovery, but we maintain that we have solved the great problem, viz., of combining efficiency with practical adaptability.

From Miss E. UPCHURCH, 92, Oakley-street, Chelsea, S.W.

"May 1, 1884.

"It is now five months since I adopted your treatment for neuralgia in the side, and I am glad to say that at the end of a month I was relieved of all acute pain, and at the end of four months all pain was quite gone. I now have more energy, and can go about my duties with pleasure and comfort. A lady who saw me recently, after an absence of over a year, remarked that I was not like the same person, I looked younger and brighter, and went about with such a quick step that she was quite astonished at the change; and, indeed, I am a different person. After three years of such suffering, to be so well seems marvellous, and almost too good to be true. Recently I undertook a journey, during which I was riding in the train eight hours, and I did not feel the slightest pain, although, when I came to you, I could scarcely bear the motion of the train for the short distance I had to come. As I have tried no other remedy since adopting the Magnetic treatment, I am convinced that it is this alone that has helped me, and I can never sufficiently express my thankfulness to you."

On receipt of particulars of any case, in which advice is sought, the fullest information will be given, and the required treatment suggested, gratuitously, by Mr. B. COPSON GARRATT, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-sq., London, E.C.

THE

AN ADDRESS BY

Rev. NEWMAN HALL, LL.B.

EXTRACT.

"The entrance of the soul at death to the presence of Jesus is one article of faith: the general Judgment is another; but these should not absorb and take the place of another revealed fact, that Christ will come to our world to reign with His saints, to perfect His Church, to cause His Kingdom to come and His will to be done on earth even as in heaven; and thus to accomplish all the predictions with which the Bible teems respecting the universal triumph of truth and righteousness in this long distracted and sin-polluted world.

"The early Church did eagerly and lovingly anticipate such an Advent. They were 'looking for that blessed hope'; not the hope of going to heaven, but of Christ coming to earth. They were patient in tribulation, believing that 'the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.' They were 'looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God.' They were characterised as those who 'love His appearing.' In this confident expectation they were encouraged by Apostles filled with the Spirit of the Lord."—Pages 6—8.

NUTS TO CRACK.

For Infidels and Freethinkers.

By AN OLD DEIST.

Extracts.

2. I cannot gainsay the fact that human nature is bad, and as bad as the old book makes it. Of course it is not the duty of deists and freethinkers to admit this; because, having no remedy for it, why should they tell that the old fortress is rotten at the foundation? But let us admit it; it is too hard to be cracked.—Page 5.

10. We are also asked to explain, on the ground of Evolution, whether the bird laying eggs came first without eggs, or the eggs without fowls. If we say eggs first, where did the egg come from? Or if we say the fowl first, then did the fowl not come from an egg? It would puzzle the natural philosopher to say how it could possibly come without an egg.

* * * * *

19. Why is it that dying men never regret being Christians? And why do Deists often on their death-beds mourn over the fact that they were not Christians?

* * * * *

24. I cannot gainsay the fact, that the London Shipping Gazette has admitted that no ship is capable of meeting great storms and carrying heavy cargoes "that differs far from the proportions of Noah's Ark." How came the proportions of that great ship to be so worthy of attention in this nineteenth century?

IT is a great pity that at a time when so much interest is felt in General Gordon's noble, self-denying devotedness in the perilous expedition he has undertaken, and when so much Christian sympathy and prayer are being called forth for his preservation, this book, which is so little credit to him as a theologian, should be brought out. We could almost imagine its publication to have been the work of an enemy, were it not that we are told in the preface that "the following pages are given to the public not only with the sanction of General Gordon, but by his express wish and injunction." If so, we can only say his worst enemy could hardly have done more damage to his good name than he has himself done by penning and publishing many of the reflections which this book contains.

For it is as a Christian that he invites criticism in making public these reflections. And it is with their bearing upon Christian truth that we are alone concerned. We cannot but think of the influence his words might have had for good, if at a time when his name and perilous position have evoked sympathy in all hearts, he had been content to set forth simple Gospel truth, and had used his vigorous pen to exalt the person and work of the blessed Saviour. But instead of this, we mourn to say that sacramentalism, and that of the most materialistic type, is extolled throughout the book, as the Divine panacea for all evils. For as all the ills of humanity have come to us through our first parents having eaten the forbidden fruit, so he thinks the Divinely appointed antidote is eating likewise, i.e., partaking of the sacrament.

But perhaps one will say, surely he means, in speaking of sacramental eating, what the twenty-eighth Article of the Church of England so well expresses: "The body of Christ is given, taken, and eaten in the Supper only after an heavenly and spiritual manner. And the means whereby the body of Christ is received and eaten in the Supper is Faith." Alas! he does not. He makes it too evident that the gross carnal conception of Christ's body going into the mouth is that on which his whole argument hinges. He as little understands the teaching of the Article just quoted as he does the words in the service: "Feed on Him in thy heart by faith with thanksgiving." It is but justice to the Church to which he belongs, to say that the sacramental views of General Gordon are not those of the Church of England, and this will be easily seen by comparing his words which follow with those that come after, which are taken from one of the Homilies:—

"Analogous to the 'thou shalt not eat' the words God spake to man at the first—are almost the last words of Christ to his disciples, and through them to the world (?). 'Take, eat, this is my body.' Here is an actual substance (bread) to be eaten, taken into the poisoned body, assimilated with it, and which actual substance is bidden to be eaten by Christ, and is the vehicle or conduct by which Christ imparts his divine attributes to that poisoned body; just as much as the forbidden fruit was the vehicle or conduct by which Satan imparted his evil attributes to that body and poisoned it."

What a contrast to this materialism is the following passage from the Church of England "Homily on the worthy receiving of the Sacrament":—

"It is well known that the meat we seek for this Supper is spiritual food, the nourishment of our soul, a heavenly refection, and not earthly; an invisible meat, and not bodily; a ghostly substance, and not carnal; so that to think that without faith we may enjoy the eating and drinking thereof, or that that is the fruition of it, is but to dream a gross carnal feeding, basely objecting and binding ourselves to the elements and creatures."

Our Lord blames his disciples for being "without understanding" (Mark vii. 18), because they confounded the mouth with the heart, and thought that things entering into the mouth could defile a man. It is this same want of understanding that leads many into the carnal materialism of supposing that what goes into the mouth is that which feeds the soul. As little can "that which entereth into the mouth" cleanse, as it can defile. The heart is the place to be reached. From it defilement flows; to it God's remedy must be appiled.

Although this little book is called "Reflections in Palestine," the amount devoted to topography, a subject on which the General might have spoken with authority, is very small. Six-sevenths of the book is devoted to reflections on the sacraments, which occupy in his scheme of religion a much more prominent position than we find assigned to them in Scripture.

On Baptism he has some interesting and profitable remarks. He sees more clearly than many do that death and resurrection are the two great truths set forth in that sacrament. "As the earth was once covered with water and dead, so baptism covers man figuratively with water to denote his death, to state publicly that he acknowledges death as his due; and as the earth emerges in its new creation, so man comes forth from baptism a new creature." It is but fair to add, he repudiates the thought that these last words unexplained might convey, and says, "I do not say that baptism as a rite does raise a man from death;" and again, "Baptism does not make a man a Christian. He who is not a Christian before, is not made a Christian by that rite." But he is not always consistent, for further on we read, "Every one of those lambs in our Sunday-schools we have the right to think of as God's lambs, for they are baptized into his name."

There is too little recognition of Christ's death as the death to be acknowledged in baptism, in the view above given. General Gordon is right so far as he goes, but he does not go far enough. Rom. vi. is the passage that sets forth God's truth on this subject most clearly, and there we learn that it is not merely our dead state or our desert of death, but Christ's death for us, that we own in baptism. "So many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death."

As it is in his reflections on the other sacrament that General Gordon's mistakes—to call them by the lightest word—most abound. We may observe that to work out the analogy between death by eating at the Fall, and life by eating at the Lord's Supper (!), he invents a notion wholly unknown to Scripture, of the evil effects of the Fall having come about by a sort of poison which Eve ate in the forbidden fruit. He passes over the real Scriptural cause of the entrance of evil, "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin," and in its place substitutes his own fancy, that Eve "was poisoned by evil introduced into her actual body." Nor does he modestly throw out this thought as a surmise. He goes on: "The fruit was the vehicle of the virus of evil. I thereupon say distinctly, that the moral poisoning man acquired was from the actual eating of a fruit which was forbidden, that this fruit was the cause of the poisoning, that had it not been eaten the poisoning would never have taken place."

To this we reply, it was not the fruit eaten, but the sin of disobeying God's command that brought death into the world, and all our woes. It may be from a sort of consciousness that the ordinary teaching here differs from his theory that General Gordon says (p. 39): "I do not like the word 'fall:' it is not Scriptural." Nevertheless the Greek word for "fall" occurs six times in the latter part of the fifth chapter of the Epistle to the Romans, for the word there rendered "offence" is literally "fall," and is so translated twice in Rom xi. 11, 12.

It is far from pleasant to blame where one would gladly praise, but General Gordon has left us no alternative. Already the enemy is beginning to make capital out of these reflections. The Saturday Review points to them as evidence that "sacramental Christianity is 'in the air,'" and "sacramental doctrine does stand confessed on the face of Scripture." To us it seems just the reverse. Where General Gordon wholly fails is to prove his points from Scripture. We have already pointed out how contrary to Scripture is his account of the Fall. We regard his views of the remedy as equally unscriptural. We lament that in an age when Romanism is increasing among us, a Christian man of high repute, and at present the just object of world-wide sympathy and admiration, should think it right to make his contribution to the religious literature of the day in a form that acknowledges Rome's sacremental materialism—nay, seeks to prop it up by arguments and analogies that happily will not bear examination. The book should be called "Speculations" rather than "Reflections." We hope "Reflections" may hereafter come, but of a very different kind. We have enough confidence in General Gordon's Christianity to believe that he will one day regret that he has ever published this book.

Emigrants' Home, Blackwall.

SINCE this was opened in February last year, large numbers of emigrants of many nationalities have passed through the Home. In passing through they have come under the preaching of the Gospel in their own languages. The Lord has given very many tokens of real blessing and conversion, but space will not allow of detail.

This year the Committee have found it necessary to add (in a very fine adjacent shed) about 300 beds, at a cost of some £700 to £800, of which we have only £108. The numbers passing through this coming year will, it is thought, be very large. For these we stand in great need of a lending library, Bibles, books, tracts, and toys of all sorts. If any of your readers will help in supplying this need, it will greatly cheer us. Any parcels addressed to Mr. Wilkie, Manager of Emigrants' Home, Blackwall Station, will be thankfully acknowledged.

The Committee earnestly invite any friends to come down to the Home and see the work for themselves. Trains every quarter of an hour from Fenchurch-street Station to Blackwall Station. The Home is by the side of the station.

EDWARD TROTTER.

VILLAGE EVANGELISATION.—Messrs. W. Catlin and Joseph Phillips, of the Cow-cross Mission, London, have paid a visit to Methwold, Norfolk. The Primitive Methodist chapel was placed at their disposal for ten days' special services. Mr. Catlin gave Bible readings, not only in the chapel, but in farmhouses and cottages around. A farewell tea-meeting was held, when the people came in from Wilton, Feltwell, and surrounding villages.

HOW TO USE THE BIBLE.—2.

By Rev. Dr. MONRO GIBSON.

ADDRESS TO YOUNG CONVERTS, AT FLEET-ROAD HALL, HAMPSTEAD.

BUT I wish to get to my third point. The first was, be sure to keep up your appetite; the next was, choose that which agrees with you; and now I come to the third, which I may put in familiar words:—"READ, MARK, LEARN, AND INWARDLY DIGEST." Read, of course, but reading will not be enough; you must also mark. You must notice what you are reading, especially in the more familiar passages. You are exceedingly apt to let the mind slip over the familiar passages, and not get a single new thought out of them. Be sure to mark as you read. It is a good thing sometimes to mark with a pencil, but be sure you mark with your mind. And then learn, not necessarily the words, though that is a good thing, but the lessons. We should always keep in view the purpose of the reading, and to do this we should keep in our hearts all the while these two prayers: "Lord, what wouldest Thou have me to learn?" and that other, "Lord, what wouldest Thou have me to do?"

"Read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest."

After you have finished a meal you have not done with it; you do not leave it behind you; you carry it with you to your work, and meantime it gets turned over and over in your stomach and digestive apparatus, and gradually it passes into your life. So in the same way, after you have read your portion of Scripture, you are not to leave it behind you; you are to carry it with you to your work, turn it over and over and over in your mind, bring it close to your heart, and keep it working there, and little by little it will pass into your life. That is the true way to "learn by heart;" not simply to learn the words, that is learning by rote; but to let the substance of it pass into your heart and life, that is learning by heart. "Read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest."

This applies, of course, to every part of our reading. But now I wish to say something, very briefly, about the different parts.

THE PSALMS.

They are the simplest of all reading; we may speak of them as the soup in our bill of fare, easily taken, very good for invalids, and yet not to be bolted down, but to be sipped slowly, so as to get the flavour. That is the reason why it is so good to sing the Psalms. I was glad Mr. Moody gave out that hundredth Psalm. Do you not think that we Scotch people know what is good for us when we like to sing the Psalms occasionally, even though the version in which we sing them be rough, and rugged, and old-fashioned, like the grand old Psalms themselves? And then let me recommend you to mark your favourite Psalms. What you like best is generally best for you, that is, if you are in good health; and so it is with the Scriptures. So when you find something that is particularly delightful and satisfying, mark it, and come back to it again and again and again.

THE GOSPELS.

Then the Gospels: these need a great deal more thinking than the Psalms in order to get the good out of them. If the Psalms are the soup, the Gospels are the main joint, and they need some carving to begin with. The division into chapters and verses is an attempt to carve, but the carvers, unfortunately, did not always know the joints, and sometimes they cut right through the bone. In this respect you will find the Revised Version very helpful by its division into paragraphs. And let me advise you to take it piece by piece, each piece of convenient size, so that you can easily manage it. A little at a time, well eaten and thoroughly digested, is far better than a long chapter bolted down, or, as is too often the case, not taken in at all. The eye is just run over it, the heart gets no nourishment, and you could scarcely tell at twelve o'clock in the day what chapter it was that you read in the morning. I would far rather have two or three verses read, marked, learned, and inwardly digested, than whole chapters run over in that careless kind of way.

Then, when you are reading the Gospels, let me recommend you always to look out for the two great lessons to be learnt in the life of Christ; the first of these, What God is; the second, What man ought to be. Jesus came to tell us who God is, and what He is, and how He feels towards us, and how He treats us. Always be on the look out for lessons on that subject in the life of Christ. So when you read about the poor leper who came running up to him, and saying, "Lord, if Thou wilt Thou canst me clean," watch what He does, because whatever He does to the leper is just what God will do to you. He immediately puts forth his hand, and touches him, and says, "I will, be thou clean." So, if you come to the Lord, He will put out his hand, and touch you, and say, "I will, be thou clean."

When you see the Saviour standing on the stormy lake, and lifting up his voice to the waters, and saying, "Peace! be still," and "immediately there is a great calm," that is just what the blessed Lord will do to you; when the waves of your spirit are agitated, and you in your trouble and fear come to Him, He will speak the word and say, "Peace! be still," and there will be "a great calm." And when you see Him agonising in the garden and dying on the cross, you see not merely a love that was felt and shown eighteen hundred years ago, but you see the love of God to you now; you see what God is, and how He feels towards you now. Always be on the look-out for that, as you read the Gospels, to learn what God is, and how He feels to you, and how He wishes to pardon, and save, and bless you.

And then do not forget the second lesson—to learn what man ought to be. The Lord Jesus has "left us an example, that we should follow his steps," and wherever it is possible for us to follow we should "come after" Him.

THE HISTORIES AND BIOGRAPHIES.

These cover a large part of the Bible, and are of course important. We all know the importance of teaching by example, of which these histories are full. Now, the study of the history in the Bible will take time, and I hope you will give time to it. If you cannot get time through the week, take it on Sunday; and if you were to spend say a couple of hours in this way every Sunday you would be astonished to find how fast you would become acquainted with the sacred history. And study it as you would any other history, so as to get a connected idea of it, and to follow and understand the whole course of events. And as you read always be on the look-out for helpful passages, and put a pencil mark beside them, and come back and back to them, so as to get again the help you had the first time, and whatever new help you can get, for it is not one, or two, or twenty drawings that will take you to the bottom of a Bible well.

THE EPISTLES.

Never forget that they are letters, and are to be read like any other letters. You must know who the writer was, if you can, and who the person or persons to whom the letter was written. And then, of course, you will read it straight on from beginning to end, if it is not altogether too long. If you receive a letter from a friend, even if it is a long letter, you do not read a few sentences to-day, and then lock it up and read a few sentences of it to-morrow and a few sentences the next day; you read it straight through to get a general idea of it, and afterwards you come back to particular passages. So should we do with the letters in the New Testament; we should read them through, especially the shorter ones, and get a general idea of them, and come back and study the particular passages.

Alongside of the Epistles in the New Testament you might perhaps put the Proverbs in the Old. These give us practical wisdom from the Old Testament point of view, as the Epistles give it from the New Testament point of view.

THE PROPHECIES.

They occupy a large portion of the Bible and therefore are important; but remember that the greater part of the prophecies are not predictions. A great deal of prophecy is just what we call preaching, only it is most powerful preaching. Sometimes it is like a trumpet or a clarion, to rouse men from the sleep of sin, and call them to "awake to righteousness." Sometimes it is like a sweet flute or Æolian harp, to comfort and soothe the sorrowing spirit. Let us seek out these passages and delight ourselves with these heavenly strains.

As to the predictive prophecies I should like to say much, but I can only give some broad hints. In the first place, let us be sure that we keep before our minds the great event to which prophecy points, the Second Coming of the Lord. Let us keep that in our minds and hearts, and always look forward to it as the goal of all our hopes.

So far in general; and now in matters of detail I give you

THREE COUNSELS.

1. Do not go into "Miscellaneous" here. Do not trust to a Concordance and a haphazard string of passages. Study the prophecies right on, and do not be quite sure about all that is in the book of Revelation till you come to it in the right order.

(2) Do not study to gratify curiosity. The prophecies were not given to gratify curiosity, they were given to build us up in faith, and hope, and love, and in preparedness for the Lord's coming. And especially remember what our Lord said to his own disciples, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power." Only remember that we are always to be waiting, always ready: for we "know not the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh."

(3) "Be not wise in your own conceits." I apply that, of course, to myself as well as to all others. I am quoting the passage, or I should have said, "Let us not be wise in our own conceits." Remember that prophecy is very difficult. Let us not be quite sure as to all the details of it until—well, the question is whether we should ever be quite sure about all the details of it. Those who have studied prophecy most thoroughly are likely to be the most modest with regard to their ability to interpret the difficult passages. If ever any of you should be disposed to insist that of course you are right, that course the Spirit of God is with you, though that means that He is not with others who are just as diligent and just as earnest as you, then regard it as a temptation of the evil one. You may be sure that, if you have feelings like that in your heart, the Spirit of the Lord cannot be with you, because wherever the Spirit of the Lord is there is humility, there is modesty. The Saviour says, "Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart." And if any man is not "meek and lowly in heart," the Spirit of Christ is not in him.

May the Lord keep every one of us from all pride and self-conceit; may He save us from all self-will and selfishness of every kind; so that "as new-born babes we may desire the sincere milk of the Word, that we may grow thereby," "unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ," and so may be ready for the "strong meat" which here is for strong men, and become not only "wise unto salvation," but "throughly furnished unto all good works"!

The Lord make every convert here an earnest, humble, loving, patient, persevering student of this blessed Word, in which we all rejoice, which is indeed a light unto our feet, and a lamp unto our path, and, next to the Son of God and the Holy Spirit, Heaven's greatest gift to man.

PAUL'S PARADOX.—2.

By Rev. G. F. PENTECOST, D.D.

[The preacher at this point in his discourse related a very affecting incident in his personal experience. He told how some years ago he was on a visit to the Continent of Europe. At Venice he received a budget of letters forwarded from London. One of them was from his mother, telling him of a welcome she was arranging for him on his return to New York. By and bye he opened another letter that came in the same packet and which he had overlooked. When opened, it contained a telegram from his brother in America, saying, "Mother is dead." Of course all the delightful visions he had conjured up as to the warm welcome being arranged for him now vanished, and when he did return he preferred not to look on the dead face, which he had expected to find full of life and love. He preferred to wait to greet her in the resurrection. Dr. Pentecost proceeded:—]

I WOULD rather have the assurance of seeing my mother on the morning of the resurrection than possess no end of earthly wealth, or enjoy no end of earthly pleasure. I only relate these things to show you that man has possessions that cannot be weighed, nor counted, nor measured, nor estimated by money value—which yet outweigh and outcount and outvalue all the possessions that men struggle after in this world. Are you not all conscious of some such need? It may be your sins do not press upon you, so that you are saying, "Would God I had forgiveness!" Your conscience is not troubled, so that you are saying, "Would God I were at peace with Him!" You do not feel your estrangement from God, so that you are saying, "Would God I were reconciled to my Creator and my Saviour!" Yet, if you have bidden farewell to father, mother, sister, brother, or child, who has died in faith, and if you yourself have no hope of immortality, you are a beggar in the presence of the greatest need that a human soul ever had. You cannot tell what your need is until that need is measured by the crisis in which it comes to the front.

Let me briefly call your attention to some things which men and women are eager to get hold of, but which weighed in the balance of their supremest necessity are just nothing. In the first place, there are those things that minister to the present pleasure of a man's life. I do not mean to say that under certain circumstances they are not to be desired; but I do say that that cannot be a real possession which perishes with the using. I cannot be said to be in possession of a pleasure that I used up last night; it is gone. All that go to make up the lust of the eye, the lust of the flesh, the pride of life—there is no possession in them. Sentient pleasure is not a possession. It is a mere passing breeze—a mere flash through the being, and it is gone, leaving not one solid thing behind it, only intensifying the craving for more, that will never be satisfied.

There are a great many people who have possessions that are only temporary. Suppose somebody should say to me, "Here is a house. I am going away to India or America; you are welcome to go into it and use it as if it were yours. You can have my servants and everything in the house; make yourself perfectly free." "When will you be coming back?" "Oh, I cannot tell; but you can go in and use the house till I come back. I may be back in a month or two, or I may change my mind and may not be back for years, or not at all. But you can go in and use it." Suppose after I had gone into the house a friend should come round and ask me if the house were mine. I should have to say: "No, I have no title to it; I have only got it for a little while; I do not know the moment I shall be dispossessed."

There is a woman in our country nearly ninety years old. For more than fifty years she carried on a law suit to gain possession of a large tract of ground in New Orleans. After fighting the case out through all those years she won it. The men who had built warehouses, shops, and factories, were quaking and trembling; they never knew whether they had a valid title to it or not. At last the United States Marshal came and served writs of ejectment on the whole of them. They were told they must vacate the property as it did not belong to them at all.

But you say: "My estate has a better foundation than that; it is an undisputed freehold." Well, suppose you are a man or woman of property. Presently there comes along that old Sheriff with the long, bony fingers and the icy breath. Death, the stern Sheriff of God, will come your way, and if he does not take your estate away from you, he will take you away from your estate. I feel supremely sorry for a man who is always reckoning up how much he has got, houses, lands, bank stock, and so on. You are a rich man to-day, but to-morrow you may be a miserable beggar. You may be dispossessed of all that you have in this world; you may be dispossessed of the world itself and thrust into eternity any moment. What have you got for the world to come?

Two great "railroad kings," as we call them in our country, not long ago had a terrific battle in Wall-street, the great financial centre of the United States. One was trying to crush the other and get the supremacy. The shock of the financial battle was great and terrible, and the whole country felt it that day when Daniel Drew lost his millions. Commodore Vanderbilt swept them all into his coffers, but he died two or three years afterwards. Drew lost his possessions, and Vanderbilt was snatched away by death from his. What poor men they were; after all they had nothing.

So once more, let me say that hoarded wealth of any kind is a perfect delusion. What can a man really have after all, more than his food, raiment, and a house to cover his head? There was a very weathy man in Philadelphia, Stephen Gerrard. A man came to him and said: "Can you give me something to do?" "I do not like to see any man idle; come into my warehouse and I will see that you have something to do." "What can you afford to pay me?" "I will give you bed, board, and clothes." The young man said: "I cannot afford to work for my board and clothes only." "Oh well," said the man of wealth, "that is all I get for my work. If you cannot afford to work for that you cannot afford to work for me." If we get our bodies fed and covered in some reasonable and respectable way we have just as much as the millionaire. He may reckon up his houses and estates and stocks, but after all what has he got but a lot of figures written down in his bankbook? I venture to say there is no delusion so absurdly false as the delusion that comes with hoarded and heaped up wealth.

Once more; the man who has only possessions that can minister to one side of his nature is a man who has nothing. I can explain in a single illustration what I mean by this.

Suppose, by way of illustration, that here is a certain kind of food that goes to build up the right side of a man's physical nature; here is another kind of food that goes to build up the left side. If the man eats of both kinds in due proportion, he builds up a fully developed organisation. But he says he does not like the right-hand food, and he exclusively eats the left-hand dishes. What is the result? One side stands out with fatness, while the other is shrivelled up. If such a thing were possible, and the man built up one side of the body and neglected the other, you would say he was a fool.

I knew a man in one of the New England States, the son of the Governor. His father was a pious man of high distinction. He was brought up with every advantage. He betook himself to "manly sports"—football, cricket, boating, baseball, &c.; by the time he was nineteen years old he had got to be a splendid athlete. But he neglected his intellectual culture, his social responsibilities, his spiritual life. He had a magnificent physical development; that was about all he had. He was a fool, was he not, to neglect his higher nature and capacities.

Now, we have not got two sides, but three sides to our nature, if I may so speak—the physical, the intellectual, and the spiritual. And the young man who neglects the culture of his mind and his heart in order to become an athlete is a fool as to the other two sides of his nature. What are you doing for your spiritual nature? Are you neglecting it? Though you have all wealth and all culture—everything that ministers to body and mind—if you have not those things that go to make up spiritual wealth, you are "poor, and miserable, and blind, and naked." A few years at most will show you your utter beggary and bankruptcy, and leave you through eternity without one solitary possession.

A rich man lived in the city of New York. He was supposed to be one of the wealthiest men in the city. He was a man of college education, and was distinguished in his circle of friends as perhaps the most brilliant conversationalist in society. He almost idolised his wife, but she died of consumption, and he was well-nigh heart-broken. What comfort was it to him then that he was a wealthy, educated man, living in one of the most splendid mansions in one of the finest avenues, or that his house was filled with pictures and marble? In less than a year his only child, a daughter of nineteen years of age, died. She had contracted the disease from her mother, and went into a sudden decline, ending in death.

How poor and how miserable the man was. He sold his business, took a manservant with him and started for a long tour through Europe, trying in that way to drown his sorrow. He came back to New York at the end of two years, his frame bowed with grief and his hair grey, though he was not fifty years old. He went into his splendid house, but he had only lived there a few months when he laid himself down to die. Fancy his private secretaries or his bankers coming to him and saying: "Do not be discouraged; you are worth ten millions of money. You have got one of the finest houses in New York, everybody agrees that you are a highly educated man: do not take your sorrows and approaching death so much to heart." What mockery! What were all these things worth to him then? The man said in effect: "Do not talk to me about these things. I do not care what becomes of them. Tell me where my wife and child are, and where I will be when I die? Curse the wealth; curse the culture; curse everything that I have followed with the eagerness of a hungry hound, and neglected my soul. And now I know nothing about God and nothing about the future."

And the man died in the darkness. He had everything, and yet he had nothing. I had ten thousand times rather be Paul, or anyone like him, who could look upon the possessions of the world and say: "I have nothing, and yet I possess all things."

Dear friends, what have you got? In the name of my Master I offer you forgiveness, justification, regeneration, reconciliation, eternal life — everything that makes up spiritual life.

For the Young.

BOYS AND GIRLS IN BEDFORD.

DURING the Easter holidays a Mission in connection with "The Children's Special Service Mission," commencing April 17 and ending May 10, was held by Mr. Arrowsmith for the boys and girls attending the schools in Bedford. From the first evening the missioner's words were used by the Holy Spirit to convince of sin and to reveal the Saviour, notably among the boys. Many young fellows and boys were glad to receive Jesus and to confess Him. Several Cambridge men assisted Mr. Arrowsmith during the Mission, among whom were Messrs. S. L. Swan, Stanley Smith, J. E. K. Studd, and others.

The work among the girls, which was carried on on the alternate days, was most encouraging, and many young people were led to the Saviour, and are now rejoicing in Him. The addresses to parents and guardians were well attended and particularly helpful; here, too, seeking souls found rest in the Saviour.

At the close of the Mission papers were distributed requesting those who wished to join Bible-classes or the Children's Scripture Union to say so on a form circulated. This invitation was very warmly responded to. Over eighty boys now belong to Bible-classes, and a still greater number to the Scripture Union. Over sixty girls have also signified their wish to be similarly provided for. Mr. A. T. Polhill Turner, Trinity Hall, Cambridge, Secretary to the Grammar School Branch of the Scripture Union, has a hundred members.

The Blue Ribbon meetings which concluded the Mission were well attended, and many girls and boys have joined the Blue Ribbon Army, and have taken a large number of the pledge-books with a view to getting recruits.

"RAGGED TOM."

A boy in a Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-school had become so incorrigible that it was found necessary to expel him, lest his bad conduct should corrupt the rest. On the following Sabbath the parents of this boy brought him again to the school, and begged the Superintendent to re-admit him, telling him that this was their only hope, that by being at the Sunday-school he might be brought to reflect on his bad conduct. The Superintendent, however, felt obliged to object, yet was very sorry to do so when he saw the distress of his parents. He then said that he would take him again if they would become sureties for his good conduct. But this they durst not do.

He then adopted the following plan, hoping to benefit the rest of the school. He took the outcast by the hand, led him into the school, and called for silence. He said, "Boys, you all know that this boy was expelled on account of his bad conduct. His parents have brought him to-day to have him again admitted; but to this I cannot consent unless some one will become surety, and answer for his future good conduct. Is there any one among you who will become surety for him?"

A solemn silence for some moments ensued; when a voice from the lower end of the school was heard, which said, "I will, sir."

"You will?" said the Superintendent. "Who are you? Come here, and let me look at you." A little boy then got up.

Now, this little boy was so poor as regards this world's goods, that he was known in the school by the name of "Ragged Tom." He asked if he was willing to become surety for the boy, when he softly said, "Yes." He was then asked if he knew the meaning of being surety for another, when he replied, "Yes; if he does anything wrong, I must be punished for him."

"And are you then willing to be thus punished?" "Yes, if he may be again admitted."

The little ragged boy then took his purchased friend by the hand and led him to his seat. On the school leaving, the Superintendent observed that Tom still stuck to the boy. He resolved to follow them home, and waited a little behind until they arrived at Tom's house and went in. Then he followed. On his knocking at the door, Tom's mother came, and in reply to his inquiry said that Tom and one of his schoolfellows had gone upstairs.

Asking leave, he went up after them, and when he got to the room door he heard Tom praying for the boy, and saying, "O Lord, do Thou make this boy from being the worst boy in the school; oh, do Thou make him the best boy in the school!" Then he could keep outside no longer, but went in and prayed with them; and their prayers were heard and answered in the conversion of this boy.

He afterwards became a very useful member in the church and a blessing to the parents whose heart he had so often grieved. He was soon made a teacher in the school, and afterwards became a prayer leader, then a class leader, and so on, step by step, until he was sent out as a missionary. In the first letter he wrote home he desired that "Ragged Tom," who was then a local preacher, might be sent to him, in order that he might "become surety" for some of the poor Africans.

MR. W. R. BRADLAUGH is meeting with much success in the large tent, Forstal-road, Aylesford, Kent. From Aylesford the tent goes to Malling, thence to Maidstone.

"Always Ready."

THE MOTTO IN THE LIFE-BOAT HOUSE, CLACTON-ON-SEA, ESSEX.

"ALWAYS ready," is the watchword
Of the Life-boat's noble crew;
Always ready, ever ready,
Let it be my motto too.

Ready when the sky is brightest,
And the ocean seems at rest,
When the little ships are cradled
Calmly on its tranquil breast.

Let me thus be ever ready,
When my heart is light and free,
In my happiest hours remembering,
That my King may call for me.

Ready when the waves are dashing,
Lash'd to fury by the wind,
When the tempest wildly raging,
Wakens terror in the mind.

Ready when the signal flashes
From across the angry wave,
Ready then to man the Life-boat,
And the danger nobly brave.

Saviour, thou wert ever ready
Human lives to bless and save,
And at last for our redemption,
Brav'd the terrors of the grave.

Thou hast told us to be ready,
For we know not when thou'lt come,
"One by one," or altogether,
To receive us to our home.

Trusting in our blessed Life-boat,
We are ready, come what may,
Like our Master gladly helping
Those who pass along our way.

Shipwreck'd hearts are all around us,
Let us lend a helping hand,
Point them unto Christ the Life-boat,
Who will bear them safe to land.

O'er the sea of earth's temptations,
And the raging waves of sin,
He will guide them to the haven,
Where the blessèd enter in.

Trust, oh trust, in Christ the Life-boat;
"Always ready" then we'll be,
Souls around to aid and succour,
Till the King's own face we see.

MARY E. SCOTT.

The Boys' Home, Southwark.

DEAR SIR,—We have received a letter from Mr. Fegan announcing his safe arrival with his party of boys in Canada. The voyage has benefitted him very much physically, and the prospect which he appears to have of doing substantial service to the work of the Homes, by his visit to the Dominion, causes him to write very hopefully. There are such good prospects of placing boys out in satisfactory positions over there that he speaks of the probability of sending another party of 50 out before the winter. We have much to be thankful for in all this, and I am sure you will join us in praise for it.

Meanwhile the work of the Homes goes on as usual. We have lately been somewhat troubled by the falling-off of funds since the fine weather set in, but I trust our friends will continue to remember our needs, so that we may not get in arrears before Mr. Fegan's return.—Yours faithfully, EDWARD BRAILEY, 95, Southwark-street, May 15. Secretary.

MORNINGTON HALL.—The Lord is blessing the special services at Mornington Hall, Hampstead-road, N.W. Several interesting cases of conversion have been witnessed, and the interest is deepening. This work follows close on Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Missions at Hampstead and St. Pancras, and the help of any of the worker and choir in the above Missions would be valued.

CORK SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE.

DEAR SIR,—I want to enlist the sympathy of your readers in the important and increasing work carried on in Cork by Miss Elise Sandes on behalf of soldiers.

She has just now begun building, in an excellent position, a new Institute, or Home, as it may fairly be called, the demands of the work having quite outgrown the modest domicile where, seven years ago, it was first started. Out of the £3000 required £1200 have been contributed. If the remaining £1800 is received as the work proceeds, the house will be finished by the end of the present year. If not—a contingency which faith will not contemplate,—yet, if not, the builder will stay his hand, for our friend will not go into debt. The building will be of the simplest character consistent with durability and the necessary accommodation.

A special feature of the Cork Institute is the pressing need for a supply of beds for the soldiers, who from the whole south of Ireland pass through Cork, the nearest port for England. As many as seventy men going on furlough have come to the doors in one night, asking for beds, between nine o'clock p.m. and midnight, and they often have begged for leave to lie on the floors or even sit up all night rather than go to the public-houses, their only alternative resource. In the present house, rather than send them away, Miss Sandes has been in the habit of laying mattresses on the floors, and even so cannot receive all applicants, while the men's wives, who are just as sorely in need of respectable lodgings as their husbands, must always be refused.

The new Institute will provide beds for fifty men, or at a pinch 100, with separate rooms for the wives and families. There will be, besides, large and comfortable coffee-rooms for men and women, separately, and good reading and meeting rooms, and all will be open to sailors and policemen as well as soldiers.

The work of the Institute in Miss Sande's hands (who, I may here say, has been fifteen years at work for soldiers in Tralee and Cork), includes Gospel services, prayer-meetings, Bible and Temperance meetings, one or other every evening; and the men are always encouraged at the Bible-classes to ask questions and talk over the chapter read, which they do very freely. The average attendance during 1883 at the meetings has been fifty-one. The object is the winning of souls, and God has abundantly owned the words of his servants to many of the men. There is also the daily visitation at the Military Hospital, with flowers for the patients supplied by the friends of the work, as well as visits to the married quarters in barracks, where the wives are sought in patient sympathy and love, drawn to the Lord in his Word, or invited to the meetings.

In appealing to England for funds for this work, I would remind you that the larger number of those whom the Institute benefit are Englishmen. Miss Sandes has been afforded opportunities during last year for holding drawing-room meetings in several places, in aid of the soldiers' cause. She has received some invitations of the same kind for the coming summer, and is prepared to go to any part of England, where a few Christian people can be assembled to hear the story of this work. The address for contributions or invitations of this kind will be Miss Sandes, Soldiers' Institute, Cork. I will only add, that in all the fields of Gospel labour there is none that I know of in which there is a greater need than this, or which is furnished with a guiding hand more clear, a heart more fervent for Christ, and a hand more zealous and efficient, than those of this dear and devoted servant of God. It is most worthy of a liberal and prompt support.—Yours faithfully,

GEORGE F. TRENCH.

Ardfert, Co. Kerry, May.

[We very cordially second Mr. Trench's appeal on behalf of this excellent mission. Our correspondent who visited Ireland with Messrs. Moody and Sankey last year had the opportunity of personally inspecting the work, and can bear strong testimony to the devotion and success of Miss Sandes.]

Marseilles Strangers' Rests.

THE enormous total of 140,000 seamen yearly visit Marseilles, of whom only 15,000 are English, so that 125,000 remain to be influenced by the means employed by us, and now so well known under the appellation of Strangers' Rests. One is a large five-flat house close to the Quay, where thirty-five beds are provided at a moderate cost, and on the ground floor is a large and comfortable reading and coffee-room combined, where unintoxicating drinks are sold, and where are found the Holy Scriptures as well as good and wholesome literature in at least six languages. In this room constant meetings are held, with a good attendance, though naturally varying in number according to the season of the year.

A restaurant has been in full work since last November, thus completing the efforts previously made to keep a hold upon those who formerly only came for the night. The success of this last measure is now assured, and encourages the long-cherished hope that with good management the Rests may yet become nearly self-supporting.

"The Lighthouse," our second station and an offshoot from the first, is situated on the Quay, with twenty-six dram shops on one side and twenty-seven on the other, and all in the short distance of about three-quarters of a mile. I am sorry to say we have overdue rents to meet amounting to £100.

The local committee, composed of pastors and merchants, all earnest men, would gladly welcome any earnest workers. Its vice-president, one of the honoured Monod family, writes me only recently: "We are more and more interested in the valuable work done by the Rests."

—Yours in the Master's service,

Missionary Training College,

PUERTO SANTA MARIA, SPAIN.

WRITING from Spain, Miss Whately points out the pressing need of such an institution in Spain. Many lads of fifteen and sixteen in that country are ignorant even of the common rudimentary knowledge that every National School child has gained before he left the lowest forms.

The need of trained Spanish helpers in the work of the Gospel is also greater than can be conceived by any who have not been staying in this country. To find a Spanish schoolmaster who has any ideas of teaching; an evangelist or missionary pastor who has the Scriptural knowledge, and the moral and Christian training, which can make his work really useful, is a task of unspeakable difficulty; and yet a native agency is most imperatively required in Spain.

It was to supply this pressing want that the college was established. It was opened in January with five students, though the house might be filled to overflowing could the numbers who are applying be received; but, alas! they must be refused because they are too poor to pay even a small part of the expense themselves. In one instance an effort has been made to meet part of the cost in the midst of deep poverty. One of the few resident students is the son of a poor miner in the North. The father actually contributes more than a third of his small salary (he receives seventy-five francs a month, and gives thirty francs to help to meet the expenses of his son's training). How many there are in our favoured land who, by giving, not a third, but a tenth or twentieth, not of their living, but of the money at their disposal for superfluities, would be able to keep a boy at this college, and it may be literally "to save a soul from death!"

The college is quite undenominational, and would be available for any Protestants in Spain. Further information can be obtained from Miss Whately, 21, Belmont-park, Lee, S.W.; or from Donald Matheson, Esq., 120, Queen's-gate, London, S.W.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

ON Thursday last an influentially-attended meeting in support of this society was held in the Mansion House. The Earl of SHAFTESBURY presided at the opening of the proceedings, but had to leave early to attend to pressing business in the House of Lords. His Lordship said:—

I consider this work of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland to be one of the most important that could be imagined for that ill-fated country. I have always felt that we owe a very great deal to Ireland in a variety of ways; and now certainly, for the last fifty years, or rather more than that, we have been doing a great deal from time to time in compensation for all the wrongs we have inflicted on that country. It is our duty to do the best we can to give to Ireland all she has a right to expect from us; but I do not know any one single point upon which we owe her so great a debt as upon the matter in which you are engaged. No one can read that marvellous book, I think it is by Archbishop Usher, called "The Religion of the Ancient Irish," without seeing what a religious country it was until we undertook its political conquest, having on our side the assistance of the Pope of that day, who, by one of his autocratic letters, said that provided we gave Ireland to him religiously he would surrender her to us politically. Then we come to the time of Bishop Bedell, whose efforts were counteracted, especially by the Government of that day. That seems to me to be one of the most disgraceful and alarming epochs in the history of our connection with Ireland. Bishop Bedell had translated the Scriptures into the Irish language, and the Irish people, so far as the history of that time shows, had a very great appetite for the Scriptures and a great tendency to embrace many of the new doctrines. Charles I., acting no doubt under the advice of his minister, Strafford, put every impediment in the way of the circulation of that version of the Scriptures, so the version by Bishop Bedell was never circulated, or, at any rate, it was soon stopped. From that hour to this we have felt the consequences of that abominable interposition between the people and God's truth. How long we shall suffer through it is impossible to say. All I know is that this Society and some others are doing all they can to counteract the evil effects of what was then perpetrated. You find that Scripture-readers now, in the most disturbed times and in the most disturbed places, have latterly gone about in perfect safety. The Irish people are, upon the whole, a people with strong religious tendencies. I believe that it requires nothing but energy and due support from this country to give the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland a full and abundant harvest year by year and greater and more blessed results.

Rev. JAMES ORMISTON said that the Society had been at work for the last sixty years, and that it employed upon an average fifty Scripture-readers, who went about the country in no controversial spirit, but with the simple desire of bringing the Gospel to the people. Mr. R. C. MORGAN said he had often thought that an occasional Royal visit to Ireland would do more good to the country than all the coercive legislation that could be introduced. We ought also to encourage the industries of Ireland, and not to suppress them as we had done in the past. But above all let us give the Gospel to the people; that is what this Society is doing. Mr. MAVITY, one of the missionaries, testified to the readiness and even the eagerness of the people to receive the truth. He had visited and been well received in the very localities where some of the worst of the late outrages had been committed. Canon Sayers, Colonel Brooke, Mr. Lefroy, Q.C., and others bore testimony to the valuable work of the Society.

THE REVIVAL IN LONDON.

The Croydon Mission.

THE continued absence of Mr. Sankey during the past week has robbed the meetings of much of their life and vigour, especially during the early portion of each service. Nor has this been without its reaction upon Mr. Moody, who often says that the singing inspires him in his preaching. There has, however, been no manifest lack of power in the meetings. The well-filled inquiry-room, night after night, has borne an unmistakable testimony that the Word has not returned void, but that in multitudes of hearts it has prospered in the thing whereto it was sent.

A touching incident occurred one evening. A fine young man, accompanied by his mother, was brought into the private vestry to sign the pledge, the mother watching nervously, with mingled anxiety and joy, as he put the pen to paper. He was then asked to join in prayer to God for help and strength, but said he was "too black." Failing in her persuasions, the good woman knelt down herself, and with tears besought the Lord to save her son. He seemed much moved; and a friend, taking his hand, said, "Well, my brother, won't you start anew to-night?" "Brother!" he exclaimed; "do you grasp my hand as a brother?" "Yes, certainly, I do." "Then God bless you; there is hope for me yet, and by his grace I will live to serve Him!" A bright smile lit up his face as he left, and his godly mother said, "He is my eldest son, and a child of many prayers. God has given me great joy to-night: these are not tears of sorrow, but tears of gratitude to Him."

On two or three occasions a detachment of Mr. McGranahan's male choir has been present to aid the service of song; and at other times Miss Agnew and the Misses Beauchamp have rendered their willing services.

The effects of this Mission will perhaps be felt over a larger area than in any previous district of the London campaign. Numbers of those who listen to the message of salvation, come from considerable distances by train, and from nearer localities by conveyances of various kinds, special accommodation being provided even for cyclists. A lady came all the way from Margate, on Friday, to hear the evangelists, and was sorely disappointed to find that Mr. Sankey was away, and that Mr. Moody would not conduct the evening service. The railway companies have been particularly enterprising in their arrangements.

A man was one day using foul language in a train, when a fellow passenger advised him to "go and hear Moody." "Not I," said he, "I've been once, but never again. Why, he made them stand up, and counted them like an auctioneer, and said who were saved and who were not." This misrepresentation of the case is of course obvious to all who are acquainted with the work, but when men desire some excuse for continuing in sin, the devil is ready enough to help them in framing one. In contrast to this may be mentioned the case of a fine-looking navvy in his white smock, who said: "Yes, thank God I ever came here. I found Christ a few nights ago, and I have been to every meeting since; I always bring one or two of my mates, and one of them has been converted since."

On Friday afternoon Mr. Moody spoke about "Heaven;" at the close of the address over eighty signified their desire to seek the better and heavenly country. His address was followed, as on the preceding Friday, by a prayer-meeting for "our children," and it was very touching to hear the varied requests from the overflowing hearts of anxious parents.

In the evening by half-past seven the hall doors had to be closed upon a disappointed multitude who could not obtain even standing room within. An overflow-meeting was speedily organised in St. Matthew's Church, which was also soon filled, conducted by Rev. W. Chapman. Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, who took Mr. Moody's place in the large hall, delivered a very powerful address from 1 Chronicles xxviii. 9, to which detailed reference will be found below. Very few left the hall at the close, and although Mr. Moody filled the inquiry-room with those willing to have the way of salvation explained to them, a great many remained in the hall itself and were spoken to by individual workers. This visit of the celebrated preacher will be quite a landmark of this Mission, and indeed of the whole London campaign.

The same evening a young man who has been a prominent atheist and a preacher in the Hall of Science, brought one of his infidel books to a lady worker, requesting her to destroy it. He promised to bring a hundred more to her address the following morning. Being unable to change his own lodging-place, he has suffered much ridicule from his companions by praying at his bedside before retiring. He is a vendor of hymn books in the street, and was thus brought into contact with the meetings. Such a case as this cannot fail to have an influence amongst the many infidels who are to be found in Croydon.

The services of Sunday last showed an increase in point of numbers, and great power was felt at each. Heavy rain prevented many from coming from a distance to the early meeting for Christian workers, but those living in the neighbourhood came in good force. The preacher's words must have refreshed and strengthened many a weary servant of the Lord.

At eleven o'clock, taking for his subject the death of Lazarus, Mr. Moody moved many to tears as he spoke of the death of his own brother, and the comfort he had derived from our Lord's assurance, "Thy brother shall rise again." The afternoon and evening meetings were likewise full of interest; at the latter over two hundred and forty rose for prayer after a most stirring address upon "Confessing Christ." An overflow meeting was held in the evening in the Rink, and was addressed by Mr. Stevenson Blackwood. Much precious fruit was reaped in the inquiry-room during the day, and the presence of Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan added much to the enjoyment and heartiness of the service of song.

Mr. Spurgeon at Fairfield Hall.

The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pastor is never more at home than in aiding evangelical efforts to reach the masses, and in the labours of our American brethren he has both publicly and privately rejoiced. Mr. Moody has been a welcome visitor at Westwood, Beulah-hill, and Mr. Spurgeon delights in recounting the incidents of these friendly meetings. When, therefore, the evangelists moved to Croydon, Mr. Spurgeon determined to avail himself of their proximity to his Norwood residence, and to accept the opportunity thus presented for sharing his deep interest in their work. On Tuesday week he put in an appearance at the afternoon meeting, and Mr. Moody induced him to give an address.

On Friday evening it was a pre-arranged understanding that Mr. Spurgeon should be the preacher, although Mr. Moody attended as usual and really conducted the service. The continued popularity of the pulpit-prince was testified to by a remarkable rush of would-be hearers. Some time before eight o'clock the great hall was crowded, and for the first time during the Croydon Mission overflow-meetings had to be held. St. Matthew's Church, hard by, was filled to overflowing, and many also repaired to the Skating Rink. In Mr. Sankey's absence Miss Agnew touchingly rendered a solo "Whiter than snow." Mr. Moody urged the friends "to get up in larger numbers and attend the Sunday early morning service, or if they could not wake themselves, at least to wake somebody else and send them." Prayer was offered by the Rev. W. Williams, of Upton Chapel, Lambeth, followed by a clergyman. Then Mr. Spurgeon, leaning on a stick and with the assistance of his brother, mounted the rostrum, and proceeded to read and briefly expound a short passage from the Epistle of the Romans, emphasising the righteousness which is of God by faith. "They tell us," said he, "that we who preach this do encourage wrong-doing, but they do lie in their teeth. 'The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth,'—swallow it, man, and let it sink into thy deeper self; it is in thine heart—let it become a part of thy feelings, the object of thine affection." Characteristic touches of this kind sparkled throughout the reading, as well as the sermon, moving the vast assembly to alternate smiles and tears, and holding the people spellbound by so remarkable an assimilation of Scriptural truth, presented in this strikingly personal and common-sense form, to the experiences of every-day life.

Selecting his text from the Gospel of the First Book of Chronicles—for every book in the Bible is a Gospel to Mr. Spurgeon—28 chap. 9 v.: "If thou seek Him, He will be found of thee," the preacher, dispensing with any lengthened preamble, went straight to the mark. The words of the dying were always noteworthy, but the utterances of a dying king, like those of David to Solomon, should they not be specially treasured? The beauties of Christ were set forth in choicest phraseology, and illustrated with the noblest similes. Then how to seek Him was treated of. There was a ship at sea, and by stress of weather their supply of drinking-water had run short, so that the crew were actually perishing with thirst. Hailing someone else at a distance, "Water, water" was heralded out in piteous wail. "Dip it up," came back the answer, like the penetrating sound of the fog-horn; "you are in a river—the Amazon; water is all around you." And there they were, surely enough, perishing for want of that with which, though they knew it not, they were actually surrounded. Men sometimes created difficulties for themselves. Instead of simply taking what was presented to them for acceptance, they raised objections and urged arguments. "Will you pray for me?" said a young lady once to the preacher. "No, I won't." And she was astonished. "No, the way of salvation has been proclaimed; it is plain; you have not accepted it, and I cannot pray for any other plan." "But may I have it now?" "Yes." She there and then surrendered, and gave her heart to Christ. "Now," said Mr. Spurgeon, "we will pray if you like;" and so we knelt down together before God. Man's nothingness and God's all-sufficiency were powerfully indicated. Like the spider, man weaved for himself a web that was well enough in itself, but which would not bear any strain. "Oh, spider—I mean sinner," Mr. Spurgeon went on to appeal, "If thou seek Him, He will be found of thee." We must lean on Christ alone; cast our all upon Him, just as I am depending on this pillar with all my weight. If it goes, so must I. Even so have I trusted myself to Christ." For years, Mr. Spurgeon said, he had been preaching this same truth up and down the land, this readiness of Christ to save all, and he had never known a case where one had been rejected. If such an instance occurred in the experience of any of his present hearers, he begged them to let him know, and he would publish it widely, for he did not wish to go on proclaiming lies!

The last point of the discourse—and it was urged with characteristic entreaty—was this, "When you have found Christ, let everybody know it—tell others about it." On my study window-ledge I had a frequent little visitor, in the shape of a robin, for I used to put bread-crumbs out for him. He looked at me and I looked at him, and he semed so familiar that he would fain come inside but I did not want him there. He soon brought two or three other robins, to whom he had evidently communicated the fact that a certain man put crumbs out for them; and there they were, quite a number of them come for their share. One morning, however, my old friend looked at me so straight, and putting his tail a little higher in the air than usual, seemed to look uncommonly big. I found on that occasion, not content to bring other robins, he had actually brought a blackbird! Oh, how I afterwards loved that robin! So, if you have found Christ, tell it to others. The finding of water in the desert was communicated to a travelling party by a line of explorers on camels, who, at certain intervals, called one to the other right along the line, "Water!" until the glad sound reached the travellers behind.

"To you is the word of this salvation sent," was the personal closing appeal—to you, to you, to you. "If thou seek Him, He will be found of thee."

Messrs. Pentecost and Stebbins.

Dr. Pentecost's Mission at the new Conference Hall in Eccleston-street, Belgravia, began with crowded meetings in the afternoon and evening of Monday the 11th, and is still proceeding. Every evening the hall is filled, generally to its utmost capacity; also on four afternoons during the week large congregations assemble, comprising many of the class which these meetings were specially designed to reach. Saturday is claimed as a day of complete rest by our American friends, and on the Monday afternoons Dr. Pentecost has had drawing-room meetings at the Marchioness of Ailsa's.

Mr. Stebbins has gathered round him a company of devoted helpers, whose services in the choir have been most valuable. When, at the close of the thrilling address on 1 John iii. 1, with which the Mission opened, the preacher's text was sung as an anthem—"Behold what manner of love," &c.—all must have felt that the effect was to rivet the words more firmly still in the hearer's hearts. Mr. Stebbins commends himself as a man who sings not to display a rich and pleasing voice, but in true service to God and his people.

Not only have there been the outward tokens of success which a full house and rapt attention afford. The deeper proofs of God's abundant blessing have been richly bestowed. Lasting spiritual impressions have been made. Very many Christians have been established or aroused, and called to a worthier life, and not a few have for the first time confessed Christ as their Saviour and Lord. A single verse in the Acts would perhaps have sufficed for the record of such a work in the days of the Apostles; and if we turn to speak of the men who are the agents in it, we may be reminded of St. Paul's remonstrance: "Who is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed?" But if Paul also said that he and Apollos belonged to the Corinthian saints, we may fairly claim that our friends from Brooklyn belong to us; and it is only natural we should investigate our property a little. The inquiry, moreover, may prove of real value.

When the gaoler at Philippi came face to face with proofs of the power of God, he cried out, "What must I do to be saved?" and the answer rang out sharp and clear, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." But faith never springs from telling men to believe; faith comes by hearing the Word of God. And the next verse adds, "They spake unto him the Word of the Lord." First, the sinner must be convicted or aroused; secondly, he must learn that salvation is not in doing, but in believing; and then comes the glorious Gospel on which faith takes hold. Verse 32 records the administering of the cure; verse 31 is only the prescription.

The secret of Dr. Pentecost's power and success in the Gospel is doubtless in the fulness and vividness with which he ministers "the Word of the Lord." Richly endowed with advantages of mind, and voice, and manner, he conciliates and wins an audience. But though these are talents to be used in God's service, they avail nothing to relieve the heavy-laden sinner, or give life to the dead. Neither will mere doctrinal accuracy of statement avail to feed or satisfy the soul. This indeed has not been wanting. And such is the boldness and definiteness of the preacher's language on great Biblical themes, that some are constrained at times to hold their breath; but in the sequel the judgment approves his words, and the heart responds to them.

Nor is it the mingled pathos and power of the preacher's utterances that produce the effects which mark these happy meetings. These words are not written in praise of man, but in acknowledgment of God's gifts, and to guide and help those who desire, not to imitate the preacher's methods, but to learn the secret of his power. And it cannot be urged too plainly that the secret of Dr. Pentecost's success is that he ministers Christ to the soul. His words are full of a deep sense of the love and grace and power of the living God and the risen Christ as a present Saviour. Converted and unconverted alike are brought face to face with a Divine Person. It is to be hoped that in the days that still remain before the meetings close, many more will be brought into blessing in Eccleston-street Hall. Christians would do well first to come and hear for their own soul's blessing, and also to bring with them their unconverted friends.

No meetings have yet been arranged for Dr. Pentecost beyond May 25, and it is earnestly to be hoped that during Mr. Moody's last Mission, on the Embankment, Exeter Hall may be secured for him. One of Mr. Moody's powerful appeals followed by one of Dr. Pentecost's "after-meeting" addresses would, speaking from a human standpoint, be a perfect Gospel ministry. With one on the Embankment and the other in the Strand, this would be attained; and instead of either Mission impoverishing the other, the opposite results would unquestionably follow. A.

Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan.

These friends have laboured for a fortnight at the Rink Hall, Blackheath, to the great comfort and joy of many. From past experience Blackheath has not been considered a fruitful field for Missions; but during these weeks the tide of revival has overflown its borders, and the Rink Hall was found too straight for the crowds who flocked thither.

Pastor Charles Spurgeon came from Greenwich and brought the good news that his congregation has received into membership over sixty persons who had found blessing during the late Mission in that locality. Moreover, the place was sprinkled all over with redcoats from Woolwich, who would hear further of the good things God had spoken to them through his servants.

Night after night was the Gospel "said and sung," and the power of the Spirit was manifested at every meeting. Not a service was held at which many did not enter into the Kingdom of grace.

The closing meeting was held on Sabbath evening, when a most solemn address was given by Major Whittle, and the great decision was pressed so tenderly and powerfully that, as one said, it seemed impossible for any to say no. The inquiry-room could not contain all who wished to press in. There was an abundance of workers, ladies and gentlemen, ready for the delicate and kindly duty of conferring personally with individuals, and a busy season was brought to a close with much blessing. As Major Whittle's departure for home is shortly looked for, there was much leave-taking and many farewells, for there were many present who will remember his visit as the beginning of a new era in their lives.

The Greenwich and the Woolwich Male Choirs, also Mr. Earle with the South London choir, gave able support to Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan in their special department.

Major Whittle purposes to be at the Duke of Connaught Hall, Woolwich, on Friday evening, to say a parting word to those who received blessing during his Mission there.

THE INFIDEL'S PRAYER.—In a recent issue we quoted a very striking incident under this heading from The Truth, a monthly magazine, edited by Rev. Dr. Brookes, of St. Louis, U.S.A. The narrative was prefaced by an offer on the part of the writer to verify the facts related. Many friends have written to us desiring such verification, which, of course, we ourselves cannot supply. Inquiries addressed to Rev. Dr. Brookes, St. Louis, U.S.A., would probably reach the proper quarter.

Mr. Aitken at Dorchester.

THERE has been no small stir this week in this quaint and picturesque little town, owing to the commencement of a Mission by the Revs. A. Hay Aitken and James Stephens. The church (St. Peter's) has been crammed each night, on some occasions many being unable to find admission. There seems to be a great impression produced by these Mission proceedings in this country town, where such services are certainly a novelty. The large number of persons who seem willing to seek advice and help appears to indicate that a very encouraging work is being done.

Mr. Aitken's morning addresses have been upon the Christian Life, and have been very well attended. Mr. Stephens' work amongst the young people has been most interesting; large congregations, composed of children of all classes, have flocked to listen to this remarkably successful children's preacher, and have hung on his lips with eager interest. The work is being continued this week; much earnest prayer is desired.

Policemen at Mildmay.

THE meeting of men of the Northern Divisions of the Metropolitan Police, which during the past eleven years has been held at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, took place on Tuesday week, and was of even more than usual interest. Upwards of 500 men were present, and the Lord Mayor presided.

Mr. J. E. MATHIESON, in a brief opening address, said that the object was, while thus manifesting the sympathy felt with the members of so important a body, distinctly to make known to them the love of God, as revealed in the person and work of the Lord Jesus Christ. Two years ago a practical suggestion for furthering the work thus initiated was adopted, and since that time monthly meetings for the study of God's Word and prayer had been held, with an attendance of between forty and fifty men. Simultaneously other efforts in other districts had been made, resulting in the formation of the Christian Policemen's Association, which now, he was thankful to say, numbered 800 members.

The LORD MAYOR said it gave him great pleasure to preside at such a gathering. They were much indebted to the police, and the way in which they discharged their duties, often under circumstances of great provocation, was very creditable to them.

Admiral Sir WM. KING HALL having spoken to the men in earnest terms on the subject of Temperance,

Mr. HOWARD VINCENT (Director of Criminal Investigation) gave a brief address. He said he had requested the Home Secretary to relieve him of his duties in the course of a few weeks. He expressed the pleasure and pride with which he should ever look back to his connection with the Metropolitan Police, and said he hoped, if he returned with health from a tour of study in India and Australasia he was about to undertake, that he might be permitted to serve his country in some other sphere.

Mr. ALGERNON COOTE put before the meeting four words—Pardon, Peace, Power, Provision, all needed by every man, woman, and child, and all freely offered to men by God in his Word, without money, without price, through faith in the Saviour. The meeting was concluded with prayer, by Mr. Kirkham.

This meeting was followed by an interval in the large garden, and that again in turn by a substantial meat tea, prepared Mildmay fashion, in rooms graced with flowers. Then another turn in the garden, where the band of one of the divisions played, and the evening closed by a meeting of the Christian Policemen's Association, where some Temperance pledges were taken, some testimonies by Christian policemen listened to, and some hopeful conversions recorded. This religious movement among these useful public servants is certainly among the most hopeful signs of the times.

Notes and Comments.

At the invitation of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, of Chicago, U.S., Mr. Francis Murphy began on May 4 a Gospel Temperance campaign in that city.

Our readers will learn with deep regret that Rev. Dr. Stanford is still laid aside, and there is grave doubt whether he will again be able to resume his pastoral work. The following extract from a letter lately sent by him to his Church at Camberwell is full of characteristic pathos and tenderness, and conveys a lesson that all may learn with advantage. He says:—

"I have indeed had great need of grace; but grace has been given me. I am not in 'Doubting Castle,' but only the 'Prisoner of the Lord.' He has taken me 'aside from the multitude,' and shut me in with Himself that I might know Him better, for I have often in the past very much misunderstood Him. He has made me find out more and more meaning in his Word, especially in his famous title, 'the Tried Stone,' for I have truly tried Him, resting myself and all my heavy cares on Him, and finding that He never gives way. I ought not to shrink from making this confession of faith out of the weak fear of being voted an egotist."

The Jubilee Fund of the Congregational Union now exceeds £305,000, of which sum the Welsh churches have contributed £50,000 in two years. Clearly Welsh fire and fervour are not confined to words; the principality knows how to abound in good deeds, and does not believe in a religion which costs nothing. The Rev. Dr. Rees, of Swansea, has been elected Chairman of the Union for 1885, the first time that post has been held by a native Welshman. No one more worthy of the honour has ever received it; his long and honourable career as a servant of Christ well qualifies him to fill the office.

Rev. G. S. Reaney created a profound impression upon the assembly of the Congregational Union last week when speaking on the "Bitter Cry." He produced a number of pinafores, shirts, and other articles made by the poor, and detailed the amounts paid for the work. Fairer wages and shorter hours of work, he contended, were essential in order to meet the difficulty of "Outcast London." There was a monstrous injustice somewhere between the penny an hour and the millionaire. The enthusiasm with which these remarks were received, and their spirit maintained by other speakers, shows how widespread the feeling is become that the relations between capital and labour must be re-adjusted. No little amount of Christian forbearance and high-toned principle is necessary for the fair consideration of a subject which so closely affects individual interests; but the question is evidently forcing itself to the front.

Large numbers of the Esquimaux, it is said, are leaving their native land and settling in Alaska. The Moravians, who have so long and so nobly cared for the spiritual interests of Greenland, are taking steps to follow these emigrants to their new sphere, and to provide them with Gospel privileges. It would be well if all the churches thus considered the special claims of new districts opened up by the ever-increasing flow of the stream of emigration. The need is as great as that of any other branch of Mission work, although not so fully recognised.

A correspondent sends us the following suggestion:—

"Would it be possible for you to say a few words to Christian ladies who sell their old clothes for a few shillings when God has given them plenty? Much good might be done if ladies would give their cast-off garments to their less favoured sisters; many a sad heart would be cheered."

The House of Lords by no means added to its dignity or influence by rejecting the Bill for the prohibition of shooting pigeons in sport. Common sense as well as justice demanded this concession to public opinion and to humanity. The brutality involved in gouging out the eyes, and otherwise mutilating birds, that they may be the helpless victims of men who have no better object in life than to find amusement in shooting them, needs no comment. It may be aristocratic pastime, but it is no less a disgrace to civilisation and an affront to the instincts of humanity to find the majority of an assembly like the House of Lords combining to perpetuate it.

The special claim of railway servants on public consideration is not recognised so fully as it should be. There is no class to which the general public are more indebted; their safety, comfort, and convenience in travelling, depend almost entirely upon the care and fidelity of those who are in charge of the trains. The perils to which these men are exposed in discharge of their duties, makes it incumbent on society to see that provision is made for their aid when accident befalls. Last year no fewer than 134 employés were killed by accidents and 2075 injured, a fact that reveals wide scope for benevolence, when we remember the widows and orphans as well as cripples represented by such figures. £8000 was subscribed at the meeting.

The appeals just now being made to dwellers in the country for spare plants and flowers for distribution to the poor and suffering denizens of our crowded city are worthy of kindest response. The facilities for transmission afforded by the Parcels Post make it an easy matter thus to show benevolent sympathy with the distressed, and at a slight cost to brighten many a dreary home. Flowers not only minister delight, but serve to refine thenature, and often to elevate the soul to thoughts of their beneficent Creator. The Secretary of the Kyrle Society, 14, Nottingham-place, W., offers to give addresses to which such gifts may be forwarded direct, at a great saving of time and expense.

In his recent address as Chairman of the Congregational Union, Dr. Parker made some vigorous remarks on the relation of the Churches to the Christian Press. He thinks, and rightly so, that they have but imperfectly fulfilled, perhaps because they have but imperfectly realised, their proper functions toward religious journals, and so have failed to enlist, as they might have done, their full sympathy with Church work. His contention is that "Editors are preachers, the broadsheet is a pulpit on the wing, articles are sermons, and reviews are spiritual monitors." We gladly re-echo his words when he says "We pray for preachers, missionaries, and teachers, why should we omit from our supplications brethren whose influence is immeasurably wider, and in whose power it is to give the Gospel a universal hearing?" Undoubtedly the power of the Christian Press is very great, and it is of the first importance that all who are responsible for its influence should be divinely taught and upheld.

Will any of our readers oblige us with the best hymn or poem they know of on Prayer?

In our issue of May 8, we referred to a case of the dismissal of a child from school in Turriff, N.B., for wearing the blue ribbon. A correspondent has since sent to us a detailed report of the affair. It is stated that the wearing of the ribbon in school by some boys was a cause of distraction and inattention to lessons. The teacher deemed it best, under the circumstances, to request the boys to remove the ribbon during lesson hours. Several of them refused, and it was for the acts of insubordination, not for the wearing of the ribbon in itself, that the punishment was awarded.

Now that the time for open-air preaching has again come round, Christian workers should be prompt and vigorous in embracing the opportunities afforded for lifting up the banner of the Cross. It is the only means afforded for reaching hundreds of thousands of souls wandering far from God and heaven. Bands of workers, whose hearts God has touched, should be formed in connection with every church, and sent forth sustained and encouraged by the prayers of those less qualified or in any way unfitted for such work. Ministers of the Gospel will find their spirits braced and their experience greatly enlarged by going forth from their pulpits to proclaim in the highways the Gospel of Christ. The need is great for such effort, and the reward sure.

Mr. Mundella, at the annual meeting of the Sunday-school Union, stated that he had himself been successively a Sunday-scholar, teacher, and superintendent, and therefore was well able to gauge the value of such an institution. It is a striking fact to which he alluded as showing the value parents place upon Sunday-schools; that in England, whereas some 4,300,000 children attend the day-school, upwards of 5,000,000 are to be found in the Sunday-schools. The necessity for employing this mighty engine of influence directly and at full pressure for the moral and spiritual welfare of the young becomes increasingly urgent as secular education advances. Redoubled ardour in inculcating Christian truth is everywhere called for.

June 3 ought to be a notable day in connection with prayer for missionary operations throughout the world. It was on that day in 1784 that at a meeting of the Northamptonshire Association of Baptist Ministers, held at Nottingham, a motion was made by John Sutcliffe, of Olney, that the churches should meet specially for prayer, to bewail the low state of religion and to implore a revival of the Redeemer's cause in the world. The first Monday of every month was accordingly set apart, and a solemn exhortation addressed to the churches to meet on that day for prayer, at the same hour, and to let the spread of the Gospel to the remotest parts of the world be the most fervent object of their requests. Other denominations were invited to join them—the invitation asking "Who can tell what the consequences of such a united effort in prayer may be?" After the lapse of just one hundred years we may well ask what have they been? That meeting was the birth-hour of modern Missions. Surely in these days of commemorations and centenaries, no day could more appropriately be regarded as calling for special praise and prayer than June 3, 1884.

THE CITY MISSION JUBILEE.

LAST Friday the City Mission entered on the fiftieth year of its existence. The Committee resolved to celebrate the auspicious occasion by a great jubilee meeting in Exeter Hall, and by the raising of a jubilee fund to provide for a wholesale extension of public-house visitation in the Metropolis. A good beginning was made in the matter of the fund at a "Jubilee Breakfast" on Friday morning at Cannon-street Hotel, when some £8000 was subscribed towards the £50,000 which the Mission hopes to secure for this special purpose before the jubilee year runs its course.

The Exeter Hall meeting on Friday evening was one of the most crowded of the season. Hundreds indeed failed to get in, and for these an overflow-meeting was held in the lower hall. The present staff of the Mission numbers some 460, and these gentlemen were accommodated with seats on the orchestra. A select party of them formed a jubilee choir which discoursed sweet gospel music while the people gathered, and at intervals during the evening.

The entrance of Lord Shaftesbury (as Chairman) and other leading occupants of the platform was a signal for the heartiest cheers. The meeting was a most enthusiastic one throughout, as befitted the occasion. One of the Mission Secretaries having read a portion of Scripture, and the other having led in thanksgiving and prayer,

The noble and venerable CHAIRMAN gave the opening address. This, said he, is a day much to be observed unto the Lord. We meet at this beginning of your Jubilee year to render humble and hearty thanksgiving to God for the great achievements of the past and to pray that the success of the Mission in the time to come may be multiplied fiftyfold. If we compare the London of fifty years ago with the London of to-day, what a mighty contrast we find. Then the city was nearly dead in a spiritual sense; the people seemed to know nothing and to care for nothing. Now their eyes are opened, their hearts and consciences are touched, and we may expect to see even far greater results than have been achieved. If those good men who founded this Mission could see what has been done and could witness a meeting like this gathered to celebrate the day on which they first met, and to give thanks on their behalf, it would add to the bliss of which they are now in possession. I will repeat an expression I once used with respect to this City Mission—that if it may not have made London a city of saints, by the blessing of God they have saved it from being a city of devils! Of course its leading and primary object has been the spiritual instruction and welfare of the people. But it has also achieved a great political purpose in promoting the peace and good order of the whole community, teaching the people to respect the rights of each other. Many of you do not remember, but at the time of the great Revolution in 1848 it is a fact that almost every throne in Europe was in the dust. With the exception, perhaps, of the Emperor of Russia, Queen Victoria alone sat safely on the throne. And why? I remember that Guizot, the Prime Minister of Louis Phillipe, who fled at the rising of the democracy in Paris, when he came to this country, talked to me about the state of things. Said he: "Be sure of this, and lay it seriously to heart, what has saved England at the present crisis has been the religion of the people." Sir George Grey was Secretary for the Home Department at that time. Shortly before the day when it was expected that the Chartist riots would burst forth he sent for me and asked if nothing could be done to soothe the temper of the people, and to preserve order and quiet among them. I said I thought a great deal could be done. I will tell you one thing that was done. For some time the agents of the London City Mission went out charged with the express duty of instilling among the people the necessity of order and quietness. They were everywhere well received. That famous day came and passed, and London was tranquil as it is to-day. There was not a breath of sedition, or the tread of a hostile foot. Sir George Grey wrote to me afterwards and said: "I do not hesitate to tell you that it is my firm belief that the movements of the religious bodies, and primarily of that great body the London City Mission, had the effect of soothing the spirits of the people, and enabling us to pass that day with satisfaction and joy."

His Lordship proceeded to eulogise the work of the Mission, and spoke in the warmest terms, from personal knowledge and contact, of the high character of the missionaries. Their work, he said, was a most striking proof of the power of the Word of God. They do not go forth charged with Hebrew, Latin, Greek, "the Higher Criticism," and all that dreadful nonsense! They go with nothing but a deep, living knowledge of the Word of God; yet we see what they have done. Read their reports; they are not coloured; I believe every word of them. The mightiest results have been obtained by the simple, earnest words of these men.

A lively and interesting speech followed from Canon SCOTT, of West Ham, who gave many encouraging and valuable experiences of the help he had received in his parochial work from the agents of the Mission. When he began his London career as chaplain in the London Hospital he had as a colleague one of the missionaries. A grand old fellow he was; full of sanctified common sense, as well as of tenderness and sympathy for the patients. No curate would have been worth half as much. The Canon had also many interesting reminiscences to give of the late Thomas Jackson, another agent of the Mission, and his remarkable work among thieves in Whitechapel.

After a few formal words from Lord Justice FRY, came an admirable speech, indeed the speech of the evening, by Mr. DUNN, late missionary to public-houses in Shoreditch. He began by referring to the happy gatherings of the Jubilee day, and the stimulus they as missionaries had received for their future work. We go forth, he said, from this day with renewed vigour, and with more holy consecration than ever; we are resolved, in the strength of the Lord, to serve Him with all our redeemed powers. Concerning the particular branch of the work in which he had been mostly engaged—the visitation of public-houses—he told of one case where four men who were in the habit of singing at a low music-hall were converted and singing for Jesus at the Mission-hall. In order to carry on the work of visitation in public-houses it is necessary to gain the goodwill of the publican and the potman; all the rest, said Mr. Dunn, is easy. He told an amusing incident illustrative of the way in which he met objectors and secured a hearing for the Gospel message. One day in a public-house a man said to him, "What book is that you have got?" "The Bible." "Oh, I don't believe in that." "I did not say you did. What do you believe in?" "I am a materialist; I believe in nature, and nature's laws." "Well, what is nature?" "Nature! Why, nature is nature, of course." "I believe you are right. Well, what is the first law of nature?" After some shuffling and haggling, the answer given was, "Why, to take care of yourself." "May I ask if you keep that law." The man evidently had no shirt on, and his toes were peeping through his boots. The others who stood by and listened understood the point of the question, and they said, "Tom, put that in your pipe and smoke it." The man could not but admit that I was better fed and clothed; so I said, "Then I am the best materialist. Now I will tell you how that is. This book has taught me how to be a good materialist. Let me read a little bit to you: 'Godliness is profitable for all things, having the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come.'" The result was that I was able to preach the Gospel to them. Tom shook me by the hand and said, "I shall not forget what you said. You touched a chord in my heart when you spoke to me about home; if ever there was a good man, it was my father." In closing his stirring address, Mr. Dunn said: "We are content to work on the old lines. Some people are crying, Legislate, legislate; others say, Educate, educate. Our motto is, Regenerate, regenerate."

A resolution in favour of the proposed Jubilee Fund was submitted to the meeting by Mr. S. A. BLACKWOOD, who gave most unqualified testimony to the worth of the four missionaries engaged among employés in the Post-office. The resolution was seconded by Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES, in one of his famous "begging" speeches. He is bidding fair to go down to posterity as the "Kimball" of Great Britain. He strongly recommended the perusal of Mr. Weylland's new Jubilee volume, "These Fifty Years" (S. W. Partridge), and also the other two books about the City Mission work from the same pen: "The Man with the Book," and "Round the Tower." Copies of these, he said, ought to be placed in every Public library and in every Sunday school library, that the rising generation may know what has been accomplished. Looking to the future, we find that a million and a half of citizens of this city never go to any church. There is much in their wretched surroundings that is not favourable to a life of virtue. At the same time we must remember that a great proportion of the misery of the poor is occasioned by the drink. That brings to the front this work of visiting the public-houses. Many of the publicans need our deepest commiseration. They have become entangled in the business and would be glad to get out of it. The most effective way in which we can help them is to send the missionary who will teach them how to trust in the Lord and forsake this ruinous business, even at the loss of all. Fifty new missionaries are needed to take in hand the 5000 public-houses in London still unvisited. If the funds are forthcoming, the men can be found. I addressed a crowded overflow meeting downstairs before coming up here, and two brave ladies stood up at the close of my appeal, each of whom offered to give £50. I had to leave, and do not know what the gentlemen did. There are Christian ladies and gentlemen in this meeting who could raise the sum of £5000 at once, without losing a single rasher of bacon at any future breakfast. Let the teetotalers set an example; let them consider how much they have saved by not patronising the public-house. There is no question on which Christian men need more teaching than on this matter of giving of their substance. No man has a right to die and leave half a million behind him. Standing here as an evangelist, I testify that next to intemperance the greatest curse of the day is mammonism. The devil once tried to destroy a man's soul by taking all his money from him. He found the plan such a terrible failure that now he seems to take the exactly opposite plan. The founders of this Mission said to the Christians in their day: "We want four hundred watchmen and £30,000 of the Lord's property in your hands." If every man here would pay up all arrears of the Lord's property in his hands, with compound interest, the London City Mission would not know what to do with the millions in its possession.

The collection came after Mr. Hughes' audacious appeal. How much it totalled we wot not, but as the Jubilee year has only just begun, there is ample time before it closes, for all the "arrears of the Lord's property, with compound interest," to be paid up. The Secretaries of the Mission are to be found at Bridewell-place, New Bridge-street, London, E.C.

May Meetings.

Christian Colportage Association for England.

THE tenth annual meeting of this Society was held on Monday, 12th inst., in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House. The Lord Mayor regretted that his duties in the House of Commons necessitated his leaving almost immediately, but gave the assembly a hearty welcome, and wished for the Society the greatest success. Sir William Muir then took the chair.

Mr. H. D. Brown's report was a most excellent one. It showed that during the ten years of the Society's existence 146,000 copies of the Scriptures had been sold, besides 3,000,000 books and magazines of a pure Christian character. Beginning with one colporteur in St. Giles, there were now nearly one hundred in London and the country. Countless instances of blessing accompanying the efforts of these workers might be given. These the friends of this good work can see for themselves in the printed report, which may be obtained from 37, Farringdon-street, E.C. The only regretable feature was the balance-sheet, which showed a deficit of about £400.

The Chairman said he deemed the Society a most valuable one, as affording opportunity for personal contact and converse with the people. The quiet and unostentatious character of the work done he had always admired, and he only wished it were increased a hundredfold.

Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson, in an earnest and eloquent address, directed the attention of the meeting to the efforts that are being made to diffuse infidel literature both at home and abroad. This is done with comparative ease: no organisation is needed to secure its sale. The dissemination of Christian literature needs pressing on the people. The Society is emphatically an Evangelistic Society. There is a splendid field open for ladies who are willing to work with the colporteur. Someone, dressed quite as a lady, had recently called at the house of a friend of his, offering the most filthy literature for sale. Surely, with such facts before them, it was gratifying to know that nearly a quarter of a million homes were reached by this Society every year.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe said the colporteurs were worthy men, doing a gracious work. He could speak to the value of their services in his own neighbourhood (Belgravia). The houses were mostly grand, with butlers and coachmen, and they were liable at any time to get a rebuff in the form of a moral or physical slap in the face. They were willing, however, to begin downward, at the area door, and in many instances had worked their way upward to the drawing-room.

Mr. J. H. Fordham urged mistresses to see that their servants were supplied with good literature. Any who were able to offer £40 for a colporteur would be conferring an immense boon on the locality selected for his labours. Mr. R. Paton said that 250,000 homes were touched by the Gospel for the very small sum raised. They had the right men at work. Their zeal and ingenuity were seen in some of them rising early on Sunday mornings, and leaving a little book or tract at the people's doors before the arrival of the Sunday paper.

There was a capital display of the Society's books in the reception-room, with which the colporteurs appeared to be doing a brisk trade.

Scripture Readers for London.

At the recent annual meeting of the Church of England Scripture Readers' Association in Willis's Rooms, there was a large attendance, under the presidency of Earl Cairns. The present number of readers, some of whom are located in the lowest localities in London, is 120. Applications for more readers are constantly being received, but cannot be responded to for want of adequate funds.

The Chairman remarked that if this Society was deemed a necessity forty years ago, how much more was it needed now. There is no greater need for it anywhere than in London, where not a third of the population can be got into the places of worship. A pressing subject at the present time is that of housing the poor. If we could first change the man's heart he would soon change the aspect of his home.

Rev. J. A. Aston, Deptford, said he could give thirty or forty instances of practical good accomplished by the efforts of the readers. Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe said he had considerable opportunity of knowing the condition of the poor of London, and ascertaining their need. He believed the Scripture readers were just the men for the work. He appealed for more liberal support, criticising in scathing terms the money lavished on fruit, dress, &c., by many professing Christians, as contrasted with the small sum given to the cause of Christ. Mr. Ernest Tritton said that factories and workshops were open to the readers as never before.

The Gospel for the Jews.

The British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews held its anniversary on Tuesday, 13th inst., at Exeter-hall. Mr. George Williams presided. In his report, Mr. Dunlop referred with great satisfaction and thankfulness to the recent tour made by himself and the Treasurer. They had been able to see with their own eyes the Missionaries whom the Society had sent abroad in the midst of their work. A grand work was being done. This was shown by brief extracts read from accounts received from workers in various parts of Germany, Austria, Russia, Turkey, and Italy. They had learnt by their visit that some of the most important work done is the least chronicled. References to the Society's work at home were also cheering, showing that there was a constant succession of converts, who publicly avow their faith in Christ, and that during the past thirty years thousands of Jews had been truly converted.

The Chairman hoped that the time would come when a Rothschild or a Montefiore would be numbered amongst their converts. He strongly urged the singling out of some rich Jew as an object of their special prayer to God that he might be saved. Excellent addresses were given by Revs. Hiles Hitchens, Dr. Rosedale, W. H. King, Aaron Matthews, W. Unsworth, and Mr. W. G. Habershon.

Medical Missions in the West-end.

Among the societies that are bravely doing their best to answer "the bitter cry" of suffering London is the Marylebone Medical Mission, the annual meeting of which was held last week at Stafford Rooms, Titchborne-street. It was presided over by the Earl of Shaftesbury.

The services of Dr. R. Chambers, who is at once missionary and doctor, are entirely devoted to the work. The Mission has also the advantage of a nurse (whose expense is met by one lady friend), who, under the charge of the doctor, attends to the more serious ailments. It would, perhaps, unnecessarily harass our readers to recount the dire distress which this gentleman meets from day to day in the district allotted to him; indeed, he says himself it must be seen to be realised. He will therefore, gladly welcome any who choose to come into personal contact with it. Three days a week patients call at the dispensary for advice and medicine, the number of such visits amounting last year to over thirteen thousand; attention to their bodily requirements is preceded by a short address, in which salvation is freely proclaimed. Patients are also attended at their homes, and last year this work afforded an opportunity of distributing nearly 38,000 tracts and Scriptures. The Gospel is also made known in the sick-room, and many cases of blessing received have gladdened the heart of the willing messenger. Blankets, &c., are lent where necessary, and each case is dealt with as its circumstances require.

With such a work as this to plead for, one may be sure Lady Hope reached the hearts of her hearers. Her Ladyship's personal experience in hospitals was brought to bear on the subject; she knew how the souls of men had been blessed in bodily trouble, and she invited every lady to lend her aid in the blessed work. Lord Shaftesbury and Dr. Sinclair Paterson ably supported the appeal on behalf of this good work.

The Y.M.C.A. Breakfast.

Everybody knows that the "May Meetings" extend from April to June, but few of the societies find it necessary to begin the day's work so early as 6 a.m. It was, however, at this hour that the members of the Y.M.C.A at Aldersgate-street met on Tuesday morning last week to celebrate their annual May breakfast. Punctual to the hour the chairman, Mr. George Williams, took his seat, surrounded by a numerous company, many of whom must have risen with the sun to keep this feast.

When the business of satisfying the bodily appetite had been duly attended to, the company adjourned to the lecture hall for a breakfast of another character. The Chairman, in the course of a general address, introduced to the meeting four young men—two from Belfast and two from Glasgow—who had dedicated themselves to the missionary field in China. He wished that their voices might be heard. The words they spoke were of the most cheering character, and we congratulate the China Inland Mission on the acquisition of four such zealous servants. It must have been encouraging to Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan, who were present, to hear one of them acknowledge that they had been the means, under God, of his conversion.

Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan then sang their newest song, "The Banner of the Cross," as an introduction to an address by Major Whittle. Taking the text, "I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision," he told how good it was to work for Christ. His own heart had been made glad by the receipt of a letter from his daughter of fourteen years, saying how much she wished to be allowed by and by to go as a missionary to China. As an example of how the world misjudged God's servants, he said that when Mr. Moody gave up brilliant prospects of making money in business to preach the Gospel, he was called "crazy Moody." The result had shown that it was the world that was foolish, and that his friend was filled with heavenly wisdom. Then, in words of powerful entreaty, he placed salvation before all present, urging that such as may not have accepted it might even then believe and live.

Among the speakers who followed were Lord Kinnaird, Mr. Eugene Stock, Mr. J. Hayward, Mr. Falconer (Newport, Mon.), and Mr. McGranahan, each evidently striving to say the greatest number of good things in the briefest possible space of time. Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan sandwiched the speeches with their beautiful songs.

The meeting separated at nine o'clock, and we feel sure everybody was satisfied that the May breakfast is a delightful and a profitable institution.

Irish Church Missions.

A large party of the friends of the Society breakfasted together on Tuesday morning last week, in St. James's Hall, and spent an hour and a half in pleasant social intercourse. Captain Maude, R.N., presided, and short exhortations were given by Revs. H. J. Berguer and H. W. Webb-Peploe.

The thirty-fifth annual meeting of the Society was held at St. James's Hall later in the morning. Earl Cairns presided. Rev. Horace Townsend, Clerical Secretary, gave an epitome of the report, which stated that this year, although their agents had been reduced in number, they had been more blest in their work than in former years. During the last twelve months divisions among the priests, and even the prelates, of the Roman Catholic Church, had aroused a spirit of inquiry among the Roman Catholics, and an earnest desire for the guidance of the Holy Scriptures. There existed at the present moment in Ireland such facilities for Mission work as could not have been expected even two years ago. More copies of the Word of God had been sold by the Society's agents during the past twelve months than for several years before, and wherever faithful, earnest workers went forth in the Master's Name, they found willing listeners.

The Chairman said: There can be no doubt, from what we have heard and from what we know from other sources, that at this moment the people of Ireland have attained to a degree of freedom from the spiritual thraldom in which they long had been held, which is entirely new in that country. That condition of things has presented an opening for work like that of this Society, which is more hopeful than anything we have seen for many years. I hope that that opening will not be neglected.

Rev. Horace Newton, of Driffield, said there was nothing in the City of Dublin more truly calculated to bring peace to that troubled country than the glorious schools in Townsend-street. The children there had it in them to restore peace and prosperity to Ireland. For the last thirty years he had heard of the working of these Missions, and now he had had the privilege of coming in contact with some of its most earnest workers. He had a prejudice against controversy, but when he saw the loving way in which it was conducted in connection with this Society, he believed all he had heard about its usefulness. He found that wherever there was loving, faithful controversy, the putting forth of the truth of God, not as if one was ashamed of it, but as if one believed in it, and did not believe in error, there the work prospered. The men who thus faithfully set forth the Word of truth were the men towards whom all opposition vanished, and they were respected above all others. The way in which the work was progressing was marvellous, and it was the Lord's doing.

Rev. H. J. Berguer said he had spent three weeks in Dublin lately, having been summoned to take part in a Mission. The work among the adults was largely controversial, and it must be so; but there was a spirit of gentleness, earnestness, and forbearance among the agents of this Society which it was beautiful to see.

Rev. Canon Cory, D.D., Rector of Clifden, and Rev. H. Fishe, B.A., Superintendent of the Dublin Mission, also spoke.

Ragged School Union.

The fortieth annual meeting of the Ragged School Union and the Distribution of the Scholars' Prizes took place on Monday week at Exeter Hall, which was crowded in every part. The Earl of Shaftesbury presided. There were 750 prize-takers present on the platform, from 61 ragged schools in connection with the Union, who formed a choir, and sung several selections at intervals during the evening. The Noble Earl presented the prizes, consisting of handsomely-bound books, to the teachers of the schools for distribution amongst their scholars.

The Secretary (Mr. Kirk), before reading an abstract of the report, stated that the flags that adorned the walls of the hall that evening were given by General Gordon to a Gravesend Ragged School where he had been a teacher. Their prayers, he hoped, would go up that that good man might yet live to see his native country again. The teachers' roll now musters 3278. To this voluntary army of earnest, devoted workers should be added 193 paid teachers and monitors. There are 35 day schools, having an attendance of 719 boys, 579 girls, and 2954 infants, with a total of 4252 on the books. There have been open 68 night schools for boys, with 2865 in average attendance; 39 for girls, with 1526 present; and 23 mixed, with 305 in attendance; giving in all 4696 scholars in average attendance. Some efforts are made to gain an influence over the factory girls at the East-end, and with considerable success. The number of scholars sent to situations during the year was put down at 667, but might safely be taken at a much higher figure. In conclusion, the Committee made an earnest plea for the continued co-operation of the workers, and for the extended liberality of the benevolent.

Rev. W. R. Mowll having addressed the children, Rev. J. R. Wood moved a resolution, heartily commending the Ragged School Union to the increased liberality of the Christian public. Although there were many calls upon Christian benevolence, he would say, Make room for the Ragged School Union, which was meeting one of the greatest needs of the time. The wretchedness and crime were unmerited on the part of the children, who were born into it. They were the victims of other persons' vice and other persons' sin, and they should take them into their pity. It seemed to him that the helplessness of the little ones was another reason why they should take up that work. They should remember that the little ones could not extricate themselves from the position they found themselves in, and they had a right to look to the strong arm of the Christian faith to lift them up to a higher level.

Addresses followed from Lord Leigh and Rev. Canon Cadman.

The Earl of Shaftesbury, in the course of a hearty and much applauded address, said. Some three years ago we sent out from the Ragged School Union a number of lads to Australia, and so well did they behave, so good was their conduct, that I received the greatest compliment and honour I ever received in my life. I received a letter directed to the Ragged School Union, saying, "Please send me directly a dozen more of Lord Shaftesbury's lads, for they are the best lads in the whole of Australia." But look behind you now; out of these 750 young persons that you see, full 700 are in domestic service, or some other honest employment. They have been taken from the streets and put in a way of obtaining a livelihood, and I ask you who have any households to keep whether they have not added brightness and peace to the inmates of these establishments. We are dependent upon our servants, and great complaint has been made all over London that domestic servants cannot be obtained, but here is a means by which you can send out not 700 but 7000 into the great metropolis, and who will continue to give a blessing, not only to children, but to all the families who receive them. We have taken off the streets of London 300,000 children, and put them in the way of earning an honest livelihood, either in this country or in the colonies, and all of whom would in all probability have been reared among the dangerous class of this community. While I am speaking of these ragged children my attention is called to those flags. Let our hearts rest in prayer and supplication for the welfare and security of that good man, General Gordon, as noble a man as ever lived. If you have ever read Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" you will find that Great-heart is as good an account of General Gordon as you can have. I am sure from what I know of him that if he comes back in safety, one of his first acts will be to go and teach again in the Gravesend Ragged School, to which he bestowed those flags, which will stand for ever as a record of his name, and if he will bring the Mahdi with him, we will give the Mahdi such an entertainment that he will never regret the day that he paid a visit to the English people.

Soldiers at Winchester.

THE good work at the Soldiers' Home, Winchester, continues to increase in usefulness and blessing. We are much encouraged by the extension of its influence to the country places. The converts of the early years of this Mission have for some time been banded together in a Bible and Prayer Union, and are engaged continually in preaching the Gospel in neighbouring villages and hamlets.

In addition to a barn and Mission-halls, we are starting a tent for evangelistic work during the summer. The quickened interest already displayed, and the unity and prayer of the workers, promise fairly for a season of successful work. Our congregations consist entirely of the working classes, who contribute nobly towards the expenses; but we need help to defray the cost of the tent. Our staff of workers is composed not only of soldiers, but railway-men, prison warders, and agricultural labourers with their families. L. P.

Englishwomen in Paris.

BY the kind invitation of the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen, a meeting of the friends of Miss Leigh's work in Paris, met at their residence, 37, Grosvenor-square, last Thursday afternoon, to give that lady and others an opportunity of urging its claim upon West-end support. His lordship was supported by Mr. W. Fowler, M.P., Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., Rev. Canon Boyd Carpenter, and other influential friends. The addresses delivered by his lordship and these gentlemen indicated the great importance and quality of the work conducted by Miss Leigh among English girls in Paris.

Miss Leigh's own account of the nature of evils they were endeavouring to counteract and remove was of a striking character. We earnestly repeat her warning that no young women should go to Paris in answer to advertisements, or in search of situations, without having learned something of the circumstances from an independent source. She also called attention to the law of France, which does not recognise as valid marriages between a Frenchman and an Englishwoman, celebrated in this country. By the assistance of Miss Leigh's institutions many mothers and children have been rescued from utter despair.

As a result of the meeting an association was formed, having the Countess of Aberdeen as president, and an influential local committee. It was also announced that the Lord Mayor purposes to hold a meeting at the Mansion House next month to place the claims of these institutions before the City.

HIRINGS DAY IN WESTMORELAND. — The profligacy and open sin so sadly prevalent at our North Country Hirings has prompted some Christians in Kirkby Stephen to unite together for special evangelistic work on the Hirings day, May 26. Every effort will be made for the purpose of drawing the young from the dancing-rooms, public-houses, &c., and getting them to hear the Gospel. Will anyone help with a supply of striking Gospel books?

Kirkby Stephen. J. W. BRAITHWAITE.

Evangelistic Notes.

MESSRS. MATEER and PARKER have been conducting a fortnight's Mission at the Baptist Chapel, Kent-street, Portsea. The effort has been greatly blessed.

BIGGAR, N.B.—Mr. Wm. Hall, of Annan, has conducted Gospel meetings here with very encouraging results. The meetings were held in the Christian Institute, and were well attended.

WM. ADAMS.

BITTADON, BARNSTAPLE.—During the past few weeks the Lord has been pleased to grant much refreshing from his presence in this little parish. Meetings were held in the schoolroom on successive evenings, and on one Sunday afternoon by an evangelist, with very cheering results. His addresses were simple, earnest, and scriptural, and well adapted to the people, many of whom are now rejoicing in a newly-found Saviour.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH have been holding a Mission at Cardiff since April 27; it has been without doubt one of the most successful which they have held. From the first great enthusiasm has been manifested, for the spiritual blessings have been very great. In addition to the ordinary services, addresses have been given at the Docks to a large gathering of men, arranged by Mr. Richard Corey. One striking feature of the gatherings has been the large attendance of men. A time of blessing has indeed been experienced by many; in one house of business alone fifteen young men profess to have decided for Christ.

CHRIST CHURCH, DERBY.—The Lord has done great things for us. At the morning services Rev. Dr. Morris has delivered heart-searching addresses on the Christian Life, and many of God's children have testified of the help which they have received. The lowest and most degraded in this poor parish have attended the evening services, and there have been many most wonderful cases of the conversion of men and women who have been hitherto steeped in drunkenness and sin. The Mission lady has been most acceptable to the women in the afternoons. WM. H. ASKWITH, Derby. Vicar of Christ Church.

STOCKTON-ON-TEES.—A very successful Mission from April 27 to May 13 has been conducted here by Mr. Henry Varley. Great interest has been felt, and encouraging results have followed. Mr. Varley has dealt some sturdy blows at sin, which have made him a terror to evil-doers. He has also preached "Christ in you" in such a manner as to inspire with greater courage and confidence many a wavering Christian. By his Bible-readings on "Faith" and "The Lord's Second Coming" he has given instruction and help to many. But no meeting equalled the one held on Monday, the 5th inst., when he gave his valuable lecture on "Certain Forms of Temptation." The Exchange Hall was crowded with 2500 men; the Rev. Canon Falconer in the chair. With great courage and yet with prudence he dealt with this difficult subject, and left impressions that cannot fail to produce the most important results.

LIVERPOOL WAIFS.—The twentieth band of rescued waifs, from our sheltering homes, have now been a week upon the mighty deep, and must be drawing near the shores of our fair Dominion, where they are sure of good home and a hearty welcome. There were seventy as pretty-looking girls as could be seen anywhere. Our little daughter, who has grown up in the work, went with them to take charge. Will your readers please help me to save yet a few more. We much want a suitable house through which we could pass these children for some useful training, before placing them into the farm-house homes of Canada. LOUISA BIRT.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—On Monday evening, May 12, the annual meeting of the West London Auxiliary was held at Stafford Rooms, Titchborne-street, Edgware-road. Many workers and friends who aid the Mission attended the meeting, which was presided over by Mr. G. A. Gossett. After an encouraging report had been read by Mr. W. Davis, hon. secretary, Mr. Gawin Kirkham remarked on various obstacles and discouragements in the way of open-air preaching, and its value in the work of the Church. Mr. John Short gave some illustrations of the benefit of outdoor preaching in rousing the thoughtless to reflection. Rev. A. C. D. Ryder and the Chairman also spoke, the latter touching on the aggressive element of open-air preaching.

John Hambleton at Sea.

THESE mail boats stop at nothing, their time is their money. The screw so shakes the ship that it is like writing in a jolting omnibus. On May 2 we left Plymouth; the predicted storm from America met us, and accompanied us across the Bay of Biscay, where out of about eighty, in 2nd cabin, five of us only answered the breakfast and dinner bells. The sea was very high, but the Garronne is a good sea boat.

The Lord gave my wife a sort of vision, which took timidity away. The ship was a cradle, a little child was in it, the mighty sea was the rocker; she told me it had taken away all fear.

There are three priests on board, with young women, watched by them, going to be nuns in Australia. Many Papists on board, and many mocking infidels. I took my stand on the fore deck, and preached on Sunday evening to the astonished crowds. Officers and men all heard the word; the Sunday was a beautiful day, and the wind with us. After we left Cape Finisterre behind, a splendid meeting. At first they took me for a Salvation Army Captain, and the battle was fought and the victory won before I had half expounded Rom. i. 16, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ." The power of God was upon us; but Monday evening, while I was writing below, they were dancing and carousing on deck, and the priests were the leading men in the ring.

On Tuesday morning at half-past two we passed the Rock of Gibraltar. I wanted to see the place, but all was hazy, only the lights on opposite sides to be seen, so I went below and turned into my berth. Our beloved young brother and his wife, the Brewsters, have now recovered their bodily strength after the Bay of Biscay storm. Their appetites prove that the rocking in the cradle has done them no harm.

Wednesday evening a little swallow, hundreds of miles from land, dropped panting on a rope near my hand, its wings hanging down. It seemed to say, "I will lodge with you through the night;" and truly the angel of God was with us during that memorable night, encamping in the rigging, for one of Paul's Euroclydons struck us later on, and I never saw such a night at sea before. The swell of the sea, rolling the ship about unmercifully for a few hours, was only the precursor of the terrific storm we entered before midnight. I waited on the Lord the whole night. In the morning the stewards were gathering up broken fragments of things below, but nothing else was lost, though the sea swept the decks.

Thursday morning under the lee of land; calm sea; rounding the Island of Sardinia; on for Naples. This morning at breakfast had the first saloon fight with mocking infidels; many inquirers listen, think, and weigh over matters. There are several of the Lord's children on board; we purpose (God willing) to have Bible reading when the weak ones gain sea-going strength.

Peace be with all them that love the Prince of Peace in sincerity.—Yours in Him,

Steamship "Garronne." JOHN HAMBLETON.

Mission and other Appeals.

UNION HALL MISSION.—I hope very shortly to erect three tents for Gospel work in different poor localities. God has wonderfully owned and blessed these efforts in past years. I would ask help for the expenses of this work, which are very considerable.—ROBERT BILKE, 18, Greenhill Park Villas, Harlesden, London, N.W.

COMPTON SKATING RINK (close to Highbury Station).—MR. W. FORBES, 71, Windsor-road, Holloway, N., has engaged this place for Sunday services, to commence next Sunday, May 25. As he will require either to purchase or borrow chairs or seats, he desires help in this matter. These may be sent to the Rink. Tracts, hymns, sheets, or contributions to be sent to his house.

SOLDIERS IN CANTERBURY.—Some of the Christian soldiers in the garrison have taken a small house, trusting that, with the Lord's blessing, it may grow into a "Home," where many shall find a place of refuge, and hear of Jesus. Help towards the expense will be thankfully received by Sergeant H. PAYNE, 7th Dragoon Guards Depôt, Canterbury.

A SECOND ADVENT CONFERENCE.

A THREE days' Conference was held during the past week at the South London Conference Hall, Clapham-road, on "The Second Advent of Christ." The subjects selected to be spoken upon comprised "The Personal Premillennial Advent," "The Two Resurrections," "The Personal Antichrist," "The Character and End of the Age," "The Restoration of the Jews," and "The Millennial Age." There were also sectional meetings, at which accounts were given of Mission work in Ireland, Egypt, and Syria. An early devotional meeting was held each morning, while the whole of the proceedings were prefaced by a special prayer-meeting on the Tuesday evening.

WEDNESDAY.

"THE PERSONAL AND PREMILLENNIAL ADVENT."

The assembly was presided over this morning by Col. ROWLANDSON, who remarked on the absence of any reference to the subject of the Second Advent in the announcements of the May meetings, notwithstanding the rapidly accummulating evidence, as he thought, of its near approach.

Rev. F. WHITFIELD (Hastings) said he believed we were close on the eve of the great event. Alluding to John xiv. to xvi., he would have them observe that our Lord evidently counted on his disciples sorrowing until his return. Little was said in Scripture about going to heaven, but much as to our Lord's reappearance. A large number of texts were alluded to as proving that his Advent will be personal and will take place before the millennium. This latter point was urged by reference to scriptures which represent the state of the world at his appearing being such as is utterly at variance with the idea of a millennium beforehand. As we neared the great event, it became apparent that it would consist of two stages, viz., a coming for his saints and a coming with them; the first of these might take place any moment.

Rev. G. KARNEY dwelt on the immense dispensational importance of the doctrine. Only by it could we apprehend clearly the various periods of the past, present, and future as representing those of the Father, the Spirit, and the Son. Difficult problems were solved by this form of doctrine which were otherwise involved in mystery. No other view furnished such a stimulus to the evangelist, who was enabled to remain buoyant and hopeful amid apparent discomfiture and limited success. Those who expected the world's conversion before the Advent could not but be discouraged at the present outlook. This doctrine was the key to the Apocalyptic Vision, wherein are seen two Churches—Babylon and Jerusalem, the harlot and the Bride—the latter to be fully revealed at Christ's appearing. It was almost universally held by Christians during the first three centuries. Rome was the greatest enemy it ever had. At the Reformation it came to the front again, and hundreds held it. Lastly, in its present day bearing, the importance of the premillennial view was simply unspeakable. Doubtless ours is the most remarkable epoch since the Apostles' days. The foundations of the earth seem out of course. Freethought, self-assertion, denial of the Supernatural, the worship of humanity, materialism, &c., abounded everywhere. But the millennial view explained all Said the speaker, I am at the present time seeing around me precisely that state of things both in the Church and the world, that I have been looking for. This address was listened to with deepest interest. At its close a gentlemen present expressed his astonishment at the silence of the pulpit generally on this topic, saying he had attended a place of worship for 50 years, but had not heard it spoken of more than two or three times.

In the afternoon an address on Holiness was delivered by Rev. CHAS. GRAHAM, the substance of which appeared in our columns some time since.

"THE TWO RESURRECTIONS."

At the evening meeting Col. PUGET presided. After prayer by Rev. H. TOPPING,

Rev. CHAS. GRAHAM gave a few definite statements from Scripture, which served to show that there will be two resurrections, and that the Saints will precede the wicked by 1000 years. The selective resurrection of the Saints was argued from their being one with Christ, because of analogy—they are a first fruits of the harvest; they have received the first fruits of the Spirit; there was a moral fitness that so it should be. It would be a resurrection "out from among the dead" (Gk.). Only such as were holy would be counted worthy of it; hence it was a doctrine according to godliness.

Rev. C. SKRINE, of Wimbledon, followed. The phrase in 1 Thess. iv. 17, should not be "caught up in the clouds," but simply "caught up in clouds." So that we were permitted to contemplate the beautiful idea of a great number of separate clouds in various parts of the earth, all rising upward, enveloping the Saints. This fully accorded with the ascension of Jesus into heaven, when a cloud received him out of the sight of the beholders. Christ will then meet his ascending ones on the way, as the friends of Paul came to meet him on his way to Rome. The day-star arising in the heart of the believer would be the divinely given earnest of the resurrection.

Rev. A. F. FAUSSET remarked upon the fallacy of supposing that the judgment-day meant simply a day of twenty-four hours. The "hour" of John v. 25 had already gone on nearly 2000 years. Hence the "hour" of the resurrection referred to in verse 28 by no means implied a resurrection of all men at the same time, but evidently covered a long period. The "better resurrection" of Heb. xi. 35, the desire of Paul in Phil. iii. 11, and the Hebrew rendering of Dan. xii. 2, "many from among the sleepers in the dust shall awake," all implied conclusively a priority and a preeminence.

THURSDAY.

Mr. J. E. MATHIESON presided at the meeting on Thursday morning; subject,

THE PERSONAL ANTICHRIST.

Among the marks of Antichrist were an endeavour to usurp the power of God, and the denial of the Father and the Son. Seeing all this there would be a rallying of believers around the person of our Lord as the Anointed of God. It was a startling thought that somewhere in the East there might be a beautiful child, or in some school there might be a precocious boy who was astonishing many with his progress in knowledge, who was destined to develop as the Antichrist.

Rev. CHAS. GRAHAM said no figure stands so prominent in Scripture as the Antichrist. It is important to distinguish between an antichristian system and the personal Antichrist. The former has long existed; the latter is yet to appear. When manifest he will be as truly a person as Christ. This is clear from the fact that when John speaks of many antichrists he always refers to persons. All admit that the antichrists predicted by our Saviour in Matt. xxiv. were persons. Beside which he is to be a king, to sit on a throne, to receive worship, will have eyes and a mouth, and finally will be cast alive into the lake of fire and be tormented. These things could not possibly be predicated of any but a person. The first verse of Rev. xiii. speaks of the papacy, but out of it comes the Antichrist, who is described in the verses that follow. All the world will worship him, and all political power will be in his hands. He will persecute the saints and shed their blood. He is the devil's parody of Christ. He is anti-Christ, against, and opposed to Him. Christ is the Truth. Antichrist is the lie impersonated. He will permit no worship but to himself. In Scripture he is designated the beast, the wicked one, the mystery of iniquity, and ultimately comes out as a blasphemer of God. He will be received by men as Christ foretold, and in like manner will minister for three and a half years. As he will go toward the east, it is evident that he will arise somewhere in the west. He will head the last great war against the saints, be overcome by Him who is King of Kings and Lord of Lords, and be cast into the lake of fire.

The subject was continued by Rev. A. Fausset, who said Jesus distinguished in his prophecy between many Antichrists and the Antichrist. Many have come but not the Antichrist. Lawlessness has been working 1800 years, but the Lawless One has not yet appeared. A great falling away precedes his manifestation. The hindrance to his full development is that which is opposed to it, viz., the Church of God. The wane of love will co-exist with the reign of lawlessness. There is a distinction between the "latter times" and the "last days," and each had its own characteristics. Also a striking similarity between the characteristics of the professing Church in the last days, as predicted in 2 Tim. iv., and the state of the heathen as portrayed in Rom. i. The Church, instead of witnessing against the world, has leaned upon it. But neither the Apostate Church nor the Church of Rome is Antichrist. The signs of the times warn us that his manifestation cannot be far off. The holy Scriptures are assailed by its professed adherents; men are teaching evolution without the Divine Evolver; and throughout the world we have an exhibition of evil in the form of Nihilism, Fenianism, Socialism, Dynamitism, Mobism, and Spiritualism, as never seen before. The oppression of Antichrist, though fierce, will be necessarily brief. The things foretold are such as we begin to see; therefore, let us lift up our heads, since our redemption draweth nigh.

Dean Bagot closed the meeting with prayer.

In the afternoon a stirring address was given by Rev. C. Fox, whose subject bore mainly on preparedness for the Lord's appearing, based on the three advent parables in Matt. xxv. Here, said the speaker, are three distinct relations of Christ to his people, as Bridegroom, Master, and King. The readiness of the believer consists in having the Holy Spirit dwelling in him. Mr. Moody once went into the prayer meeting at his own church in Chicago, and hearing his own name being used, said, "I suppose you are praying for my work." "No, sir," was the reply, "we are praying for you." The foolish virgins were more concerned about their lamps than the oil; the wise made the lamp a secondary consideration, "they took oil." We must go out and shine for Jesus, be wide-awake, no slumbering, and no looking back. Time must also be taken to trim the lamp, and keep it so. He requires our service, too. "Whose I am, and whom I serve," said Paul. The goods delivered to us are the Gospel; with these we must trade. The man who said most did least. His ignorance of his master was seen in what he said about him. The gauge of our service to Christ will ever be our knowledge of Him. We must serve Him as He now appears in disguise, in the person of his suffering brethren. And this service must be prompted by love. Don't be afraid to speak of Him to others. Some who are very near you may be dying of spiritual hunger. Jesus is not far away. He is to be seen in the slums of this great Babylon, and is weeping over it as of old. Thus be found preparing for his Advent.

THE CHARACTER AND END OF THE PRESENT AGE.

In the evening, Rev. C. M. Pym, Rector of Cherry Burton, presided.

Rev. J. Stephens, of Highgate, said the present age is one of progress, and many are expecting such a progress in Christianity as will culminate in a world prepared for Christ. "The whole world for Christ" is a popular cry, but as yet there is certainly no sign of it. Indeed, there is not a town anywhere to be found even in England that is wholly for Christ. The statement of the Apostle in 2 Tim. iii. implies that the end of the present age will be one of daring sin. And this may come about withal while certain appearances would indicate outward improvement. Even now we see the form of godliness, while the power is denied. The scoffers of the last days are familiar with the Word of God, and their forgetfulness and ignorance are wilful. To-day men of science are setting aside the testimony of the Bible concerning creation. I know of an institute where only two of its members are holding to the Mosaic account. Be not deceived when you hear of progress in art and science; this is quite compatible with retrogression in things spiritual. The days of Noah were characterised largely by indifference, and so will it be in the end. If we see not spiritual progress in our churches, let us not seek to adapt the church to the spirit of the age. The spirit of the age is the spirit that is according to the course of this world (Eph. ii. 2, see Gk.), and can never be in accord with the Spirit of the Lord. We have been separated from the world and from the spirit of the age.

The Rev. F. Whitfield continued the subject. Wherever the close of the present dispensation is spoken of, either in Old or New Testament, it is always a dark picture. Do not suppose that all will see it to be so: "the wise shall understand." There is the Jewish aspect. The Jews are everywhere coming to the front. The fig-tree begins to bud. The religious aspect also is another sign. The Holy Spirit is ignored, inspiration is denied, agnosticism is fast growing, and the supernatural is eliminated. The social aspect points to the sea and waves roaring, and men's hearts failing. The Black Band in Spain numbers two millions. In America, spiritualism counts her millions. I have just seen a book written by a clergyman in London denying the resurrection of the dead. And in France great efforts are being made to blot out altogether the name of God. The national features are those of lawlessness, seen in families, servants, and men generally; also in the spirit of democracy, which is coming in like a flood. Trade unions and strikes are also to be noted. For the physical signs of the end I would point to earthquakes. More have taken place during the last three years than during a century before. Signs in the sun were also specified.

FRIDAY.

THE RESTORATION OF THE JEWS.

In a long, clear, and lucid address, Rev. J. Wilkinson gave reasons for concluding that Israel and Judah will return to the land of their fathers. They are to be gathered "a second time." They are to be gathered from the four corners of the earth. This could not have been the case when restored in the time of Nehemiah, for they were not then in the four corners of the earth. There is a restoration predicted, after which they are never again to be dispersed. This is not yet fulfilled. The land was given to them for ever, therefore they must eventually inherit it. The land has never yet been fully possessed by them, and the Word of God says it shall be. The tribes, according to Ezekiel, are to be located and distributed after a certain prescribed order. This has never yet been, and therefore will be. They will be restored in unbelief; and there will be no conversion of the Gentile nations until the Jewish nation is converted.

One of the most instructive addresses was given in the afternoon by Rev. H. Webb-Peploe on the subject of "Personal Holiness." The rev. gentleman began by observing that in his opinion the advent of the Saviour was very near, and that if we believed it, the effect would be that of practical holiness. Holiness and the coming of Christ, said Mr. Peploe, are linked together in each chapter in Thessalonians. The Apostle desires for them that they might be sanctified wholly. It means to be set apart for God's use. Also means a provision made in Christ for us (1 Cor. i., end). Is also progressive in the sense of our increasing conformity to Christ. And lastly, the exhibition of holiness practically. No definition of the phrase "wholly" is possible. But it means everything about our entire being so operated upon by the Holy Spirit as to issue in entire conformity to his will and Word. In its fullest sense it is not realised here. How near to it we may attain I have never dared to say. But the text opens to our vision a wonderful possibility. We too often excuse little sins. But temper, taste, thoughts, &c., are all to be brought into subjection to Christ. Until He comes, we shall find the principle of evil is in us, which, if yielded to, would destroy our fellowship with God. But the question is, "Need we yield to it?" The text says, "Blameless at the coming." Did not Paul live a blameless life, and maintain a conscience void of offence towards God and man? So we are to be—

> "Not sinless, but stainless;
> Not guiltless, but blameless."

The tendency to corruption remains, but the Lord is our keeper. Hence we never need knowingly sin against God. Mr. Peploe concluded this valuable contribution to the Conference by an earnest appeal to Christians to live as in the light of God.

The last evening brought a large attendance to the meeting. Rev. C. Skrine, speaking on "The Millennial Age," said, the state of the world then will be one of world-wide righteousness, peace, and worship. The vast multitude of the redeemed will comprise Israel, the saved nations, and the Church—the former dwelling in the midst of the earth. Among the features of that blessed period will be the absence of Satan, and the longevity of man. At its close Satan will be let loose, and will once more urge the wicked on to rebellion—there being some unregenerate persons still remaining. This will issue in their destruction. Then will be the end of all things—time no more, eternity begun.

A united Communion service, conducted by Rev. Chas. Graham, closed this interesting and profitable Conference.

Grave Moral Questions.

On Tuesday evening last week, to a splendid and responsive audience of men, gathered in the Friends' Meeting House, Bishopsgate, Mr. A. S. Dyer delivered a new lecture on "Safeguards to Moral Purity." This powerful and practical utterance is the complement of Mr. Dyer's address, "Plain words on an avoided subject." Both can be had from the publishers, Messrs. Dyer Bros., Amen-corner, E.C. (1d. each), and we trust they will be very widely circulated among young men. In presiding at the meeting referred to, Mr. B. Scott, the City Chamberlain, paid a high and well-deserved tribute to the lecturer for the courage and ability he had shown in dealing with these social topics.

Mrs. Ormiston Chant gave two stirring addresses at Uxbridge on Wednesday last week, in connection with the Social Purity Society of that district.

Speaking at the City Mission Jubilee meeting in Exeter Hall, Rev. H. P. Hughes referred to the good service Lord Shaftesbury had rendered by his amendment to the Criminal Law Amendment Bill, carried in the Upper House, making street solicitation by males a penal offence. He hoped the House of Commons would see to it that the clause was preserved intact.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—May 25, Acts ii. 14—24; May 26, Acts ii. 25—36; May 27, Acts ii. 37—47; May 28, Acts iii. 1—11; May 29, Acts iii. 12—26; May 30, Acts iv. 1—12; May 31, Acts iv. 13—22.

LORD'S DAY OBSERVANCE SOCIETY.—Mr. J. H. Puleston, M.P., presided at the 53rd annual meeting of this society at St James's Hall. The details of the year's operations covered a wide field, including particularly the subject of opening picture galleries and museums, the drink traffic, and newspaper press work. The Chairman said he had always opposed the Sunday opening of museums, &c., because he did not want to see a Continental Sunday introduced into England. Mr. H. Morris, C.S.I., was sure that those who were advocating the opening of places of amusement on Sunday were not representing the feelings of the working classes. The Rev. J. R. Stacey also testified, from personal experience, to the saddening and depressing influence which a Continental Sabbath had upon him. Mr. H. J. Champness moved a resolution of thanks to God that Sunday had been excluded from the operation of the parcels post, and for advances made towards securing rest on that day for postal officials in several towns and villages. Addresses followed by the Rev. E. Brewer and Commander Dawson, R.N.

ORTHODOXY OF HEART.

THIS was the theme chosen by Dr. Joseph Parker, of the City Temple, for his inaugural address last week as Chairman of the Congregational Union. We make a few brief extracts: the address, in a complete form, can be had from R. Clarke, City Temple, E.C., price 6d.

THE BUSINESS OF CHRISTIANITY.

Men of my particular class must rejoice that there are brethren who can discuss scientific questions with scientific men, whilst we are called to the not inferior work of proclaiming that the Son of man is come "to seek and to save that which was lost." I must not be understood as suggesting that Christianity is not more intellectual than any human philosophy, but rather as pointing towards a succeeding and completing mission which is distinctively and essentially Christian. The one business of Christianity is to save men. It is not to dazzle them by wit, to astound them by information, or to amaze them by ecclesiastical inventiveness; it is to save men! The true apostle must ever say, "I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." The heart is the preacher—"not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect,"—but with the yearning love, the burning and unquenchable passion, which seeks to "save some."

To make this purpose a little clearer to the imagination, let us for a moment gather together our intellectual opponents and constitute them into a separate city, and call the city the Metropolis of Unbelief. What is our distinct and solemnly responsible relation as Christian men to that city? Is it enough to taunt its gods, to return the fire of its raillery, to scatter its sophisms, to daze it with intellectual miracles, and prove the staleness of its originalities? All this may fairly be done; probably most of this ought to be done; perhaps this might first of all require to be done; my contention is that what is of infinitely greater importance should be resolutely attempted, whatever ridicule the holy endeavour may provoke. We are to light a candle, and sweep the house diligently until we find the piece that is lost; we are to leave the ninety and nine, and go after that which is gone astray until we find it; we are to preach the Gospel to every creature, "to make the Gentiles obedient by word and deed, by the power of the Spirit of God." Only the heart can rise to the greatness of so sublime a task.

At the risk of incurring the contempt of the intellectually proud, we must, by our distinctively Christian service in their behalf, show that we set a higher value on our opponents than they set upon themselves. Their possible or even assured resentment of our prayers must not make us pray the less, but the more. The prayer that is contemned may ennoble itself by the very suffering which was intended to kill it. There is something which I fear infinitely more than the contempt of opponents. The subtle danger is that Christians themselves may distrust their own prayers, or by half-faith may detain them on the earth, and thus bring heaven into discredit, or may show a marked partiality for intellectual gladiatorship, as compared with the all-belief in God, which makes prayer the daily miracle of life.

May I venture to ask—as I would venture also to hope—that when we are called to pray for those who oppose themselves, the objection may not come from the Christian side? that it will come in some form from the other side is more than probable, but from our side nothing should be heard that can point to conscious hesitancy in the acceptance of our own principles. Prove prayer by praying. "Pray without ceasing." Of one thing I am sure, that no Christian heart can, in its best moods, view with unconcern the attitude of many eminent men towards the Christianity of the day. Would to God they could believe in Jesus Christ as the only Saviour of the world! How willingly would we stand back that they might stand at the front, and in their own noble eloquence tell the world of the love of God! How precious our privilege to stand at their feet and hear them discourse of heavenly things! For brass they would bring gold, and for iron silver, and for wood brass, and for stones iron! Would to God we might by intellectual service, by holy intercession, by gracious sympathy, or in some other way be made the means of winning them to the cross and bringing them to the Son of God.

LOVE NEVER FAILETH.

I make bold to say that the inspired heart alone, not the educated intellect, can undertake some departments of Christian service most needed by this age. As Divine love was the cause of Divine incarnation, so love of Christ is the cause of any love of man that is deep, constant, and sacrificial. In this sense, as in every other, love never faileth. Love will outrun genius. Love will wait longer than statesmanship. Love will stand at the door and knock long after dignity has fallen into deep sleep. Love will see the man, where self-conscious morality will only see the sinner. The darkness and the light are both alike to love. The bent figure passing to and fro in the thick night is love; the tired stranger whose locks are wet with heavy dews is love: the spectre walking on the troubled sea towards more troubled men is love: the wanderer in quest of the lost lamb is love: love never faileth—God is love!

What but love—love of God, love of Christ, love of man—could live, and work with anxious hopefulness, in some parts of the very London in which we are now gathered? No words can fitly describe the awful circumstances. We cannot, indeed, properly pronounce the words which even dimly indicate the perdition, the smoke of whose torment beclouds the splendour of our garish civilisation. Only a man who has known the pain of hunger can properly pronounce the word "hunger;" it is part of a foreign language to us, we know its letters, we do not know its gnawing cruelty, but he knows all the horrors of the expressive term. Gentility turns aside from the darker features of the times; pedantry asks for rising neighbourhoods and social distinctions: self-indulgence is anxious about its smoking feast and downy couch; speculation prays that its serene retreat be unviolated by the noise of vulgar tragedies; vanity exhausts itself in petty idolatries; learning plans an extension of its library;—still the appalling facts remain, a daily appeal to Christian attention: still, the little child dies in the fœtid room; the reeling drunkard staggers to his bed of straw; ruined womanhood cries for vengeance; pale hunger dies in silence; discontentment plots the downfall of society; bold blasphemy drowns the plea of timid prayer; still the darkness lengthens its deadly shadow, and still the pit widens into a gloomier abyss; and in the face of facts which are their own eloquence I venture to contend that the only force equal to the overwhelming occasion is a sanctified heart, a love like Christ's own, a compassion large and soft as the pity of God.

THE SALVATION ARMY.—Last Thursday Exeter Hall overflowed with an enthusiastic gathering, drawn together by the announcement that a number of "saved drunkards" would testify. Some hundreds of those professedly coming under this designation were present, and many bore witness to the blessed fact of their conversion and salvation from the drink curse. Nearly £10,000 were subscribed at or before the meeting, for a special fund being raised by the Army. Mrs. Booth gave a stirring address on "Drink." Mr. Booth stated that a Salvation Navy would shortly be launched.

THE THAMES CHURCH MISSION.—This Society has lately increased its working power by the addition to its Mission fleet of the smack Edward Auriol. The new vessel lies during this week off the Custom House Quay (near London Bridge), and will be formally dedicated at 3.30 on Saturday afternoon next, by Bishop Kelly. All interested in Gospel work among North Sea fishermen are invited to be present. The Mission, we grieve to say, is much hampered in its invaluable endeavours, by the lack of funds. We earnestly trust the friends of those who go down to the sea in ships will come to the rescue, and enable the Mission to be carried on with growing vigour.

Bournemouth Y.M.C.A.

AT the invitation of Earl Cairns, the President of the Y.M.C.A., and of Countess Cairns, a large number of members and friends assembled on Friday evening in the Town hall, which was beautifully decorated with flowers and plants. After refreshments a party of ladies and gentlemen entertained the guests with a selection of music, vocal and instrumental, charmingly performed and sung. In the course of the evening Earl Cairns announced that they were out of debt, had a balance of £350, and promises of £115. Some active members whom he named — Capt. Dawson, Dr. Drury, Mr. Rogers, Dr. Nankivell—were enthusiastically greeted. His Lordship then announced that a piece of land had been secured on which it was proposed to erect suitable premises at a cost of £6000, of which a third had already been contributed or promised. The various ways in which the welfare, comfort, and enjoyment of the members were to be provided for elicited very demonstrative approval and applause.

Later in the evening Captain Dawson gave them as a watchword, "Go forward." His mention of their kind and noble entertainers was received with a heartiness which showed how warmly the kind interest in their well-being manifested by Earl and Countess Cairns was appreciated by their guests. The evening was closed with praise and prayer.

Gospel Work in Spain.

I HAVE lately received a letter from Mrs. Blamire, wife of one of the missionaries at Marin, Pontevedra, in the north-west of Spain, from which I have made the following extracts:

"Hitherto we have invited the people to visit us in our house for conversation, which is the best thing to be done till they get confidence in us. A few Sunday nights back, however, we had such a good meeting that we ventured to hold an after-meeting, like old times in England. Nearly all the people remained in their seats as if they were glued to the spot. We led the way, and asked the brethren and sisters to follow. We took the people right and left as they sat. Young Francisco (the first male convert) collected round him a number of young men and grown lads. They bent forward to listen to what appeared to be earnest entreaties about their souls. This was concluded with prayer. Others of the Christians were at work, and I spoke to several who told me they were trusting in Christ.

"We made a start with building a chapel or hall this week. A number of the converts will help free of charge, which will considerably reduce the expense. We have several brethren carpenters, who give their time; had there been stonemasons also the building might have been erected independent of outside help."

Should any of your readers incline to assist Mr. and Mrs. Blamire, may I be permitted to mention a need to which they would not have themselves referred? Mrs. Blamire has two little boys dependent upon her for care and instruction. The means to pay an English household servant, who would liberate her from domestic cares; or, still better, a brother, who, while giving some hours daily to the instruction of the boys, would fill up his spare time in evangelising, would be of great value to the work, by setting Mrs. Blamire at liberty. Our friends are also desiring to commence schools, as the children of converts cannot be taught at the ordinary seminaries. The assistance of any lady who, while paying her own expenses, would give herself to this work would be of great value.—Yours faithfully, S. Southall.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on open-air services at Whetstone, N., on Sundays, during the summer.——For an evangelist going to Canada, that God will open a great and effectual door for his own glory, in the conversion of souls. ——That the Holy Spirit may be abundantly poured out on a Mission to be held in the theatre, Ipswich, till Sunday, May 25.

Jewish Persecutions and Prospects.

AT the annual meeting held last week of the London Society for promoting Christianity among the Jews, the Earl of SHAFTESBURY said:—

For the last two or three years the Jews, in whom we take so deep an interest, have either been under actual persecution, or have been under the fear of it. That persecution has for a time subsided, but I fear it is about to be renewed. The anti-Semitic feeling is breaking out all over Europe, which we are pleased to call civilised Europe, and I am sorry to see—I should hardly have believed it possible—that that persecution has begun to break out in the Sister Island. Now I think it is the solemn duty of all of us who profess true Christianity to see that if the Jews are persecuted by Christians, they shall be assisted and consoled by Christians. Then let them judge of themselves—we need no other influence—whether there is anything at all in Christianity, and if there is, in what form of it they find the truest principles and the most upright actions. An attempt has been made by a great number of people to aid in this persecution, and I am astonished that literary men in England should be found a place in some of our reviews and periodical writings to justify it, on the ground of the Jews being an anti-social people, on the ground of their maintaining a tribal system, saying that that tribal system is the sole and the true reason why they have continued a distinct people on the face of the earth. Why, was there ever such an argumentative evasion of the whole truth as to suppose that it is their tribal system which has kept them whole over every region of the earth, and preserved their religion, their language, their habits, their manners, and their brotherhood? Even if it were so, is that a just ground for persecution, because they have habits and manners different from our own?

The truth is, that those who say the Jews are an anti-social people only use that as a cover for persecution. They say they are a people who ought to be shut out from the catalogue of nations, and to be forced by every power that can be brought to bear upon them to enrol themselves among the various ranks of society in the different nations of the earth, and so be lost in the great mass of the community. I am astonished that men of intellect should have condescended to write such stuff. They wished to evade what every man must see, and the truth which Addison affirmed so long ago, that the existence of the Jews as they now are is a standing miracle.

This Society is doing a very great work, and I am glad to find that there is not now the same desire that there was when I first joined the Society to see large and ample fruits and very brilliant reports every year. We cannot expect to have a harvest every year, and enormous results, though we should all rejoice in them. The time has not arrived for the seed to come to the surface, but I believe that the workings of this Society, underground as it were, are producing very mighty effects, which in due time will appear. I remember at one time studying Hebrew under a very learned German Jew, a convert, and he made the remark to me, "I have travelled all over Europe, and over a great deal of the East, and I do not believe there is a single thinking Jew in the whole civilised world who is contented with the religion he professes." If that be so, you cannot doubt that in circulating the Word of God you are producing serious and lasting effects on the minds of many of those persons. They may not avow it at the time, but the period is coming when their children will avow it, and you will be astonished some day at the rich and abundant harvest all of a sudden breaking out, in the goodness of God, as the result of the labour you have bestowed on this great work.

I see that we are called upon to rejoice in the establishment of a Mission in Galilee. Very well, but you must be quick about it, for I see that there is a body of men in this country who have formed themselves into a company for the purpose of making what they call the Jordan Valley Canal, their object being to submerge the shores of the Sea of Galilee, and many of the parts of the Holy Land trodden by the feet of our Saviour. All I can say is, "God stand in the way of their attempt;" and I hope the time will have come before they can accomplish or even begin their enterprise—that the Jews will have returned to their own land, and be able and willing to defend themselves against the attack of such irreverent invaders.

Letters to the Editor.

THE SPELDHURST FLOGGING CASE.

REFERRING to our recent note on this case, a correspondent asks us to state that the punishment of the two boys who had attended a chapel was administered by their father, the schoolmaster, because of disobedience. Says our correspondent: "This was done against the advice of Rev. D. Mackinnon, who was in no way responsible for the father's action."

"THE FACTS ABOUT VIVISECTION."

The following letter, sent to a friend in London, has been forwarded to us, and we gladly give it a place in our columns:—

An article in THE CHRISTIAN of April 24 has just been brought to our notice. It contains a serious mis-statement which it is desirable to correct. It occurs in extracts from a book recently published on Vivisection. In the course of these the following words are quoted:—

"Dr. Burdon Sanderson described in detail an experiment on a dog, of which the following is a summary." Then come eight paragraphs of description of the experiment, followed by these words: "Dr. Burdon Sanderson is spoken of by Dr. Simon (Question 1476) as one of the humanest of men, but this is the manner in which he concludes his description of the experiments: 'This beautiful, simple experiment we owe to Dr. Strieker, with whom I had the pleasure of repeating it here very frequently last summer.'"

The truth is that the words have no reference whatever to the description of an experiment which went before. The former was narrated in the course of a lecture as an experiment performed in Germany several years previously. The comment is a foot-note to the same lecture, and has reference to an experiment on a frog which had been killed. Anyone can satisfy himself of this by referring to the Medical Times, No. 1094, p. 684.

I make no remarks on the unjustifiable insinuation as to my husband's character contained in the sentences quoted.—Yours very sincerely,

50, Banbury-road, Oxford. G. B. SANDERSON.

RELIGIOUS AFFAIRS AT MALTA.

DEAR SIR,—In a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN, you mention the unsatisfactory state of religious affairs at Malta. Unfortunately such would appear to be a very mild putting of the case. A short time ago, a lady well known at home for her work among sailors, was turned out of the Naval Hospital at Malta, in so rude a manner that even the men nurses felt compelled to make a sort of apology for having to act.

The same hindrance which was formerly exercised at Haslar seems to be now in force at Malta. While there a short time ago, I was told, on what would appear good authority, of a recent case in which "extreme unction" was administered to a dying patient, and he not a Roman Catholic. The same authority also informed me that, through the influence of a clergyman of the Church of England, the Bible had been banished, and it was hoped soon to banish Temperance work, from the rooms of an Institute for Soldiers and Sailors.

So rigorously is the rule about searching men who go to visit friends at the hospital carried out, that a blue-jacket was not even allowed to take in his Bible, which he had purposed reading to a sick friend. When the Word of God and religious books are prohibited, while such papers as The Freethinker obtain admission, matters may well have stronger terms than "unsatisfactory" applied to them.—Yours faithfully,

A VISITOR AT MALTA.

[We have also received a letter from Cairo stating that a lady who has been much blessed of God in visiting the sick soldiers in the Citadel Hospital there, has been prohibited by the authorities from further visitation because she gave with some flowers, a tract to each of two Protestant soldiers. Such intolerance is to be deprecated most earnestly, and is unworthy of the name of religion.—ED.]

"THE HIGHER CHRISTIAN LIFE."

DEAR SIR,—At the first meeting of the Conference on "The Higher Christian Life," recently held in the Haverstock-hill Vestry-hall, a speaker on the platform said: "Men preach for sin, plead for sin in all the churches around us." "Christianity is corrupted." "We must go to the root of the matter: the root of the matter is false teaching." After the meeting I addressed him outside the hall, and inquired whether he knew the Hampstead clergy and ministers. "No." Then I asked his authority for accusing them of "pleading for sin," and reminded him of the ninth commandment. The good brother seemed embarrassed, and assured me he meant nothing personal; it was religious teachers generally he referred to. I might have asked him whom among the most notable he could name as instances—Aitken or Haslam, or Spurgeon or Moody? But he tried to crush me by a personal appeal; I must come out of the corruption, give up the traditions of men—which was rather hard upon me, seeing he had not the slightest knowledge of my opinions. However, I stuck to my point.

Now, I turned round upon this good brother, and said I feared that there was a defect in popular religious teaching, and that the meeting we had just left, the speeches made, its very title even, afforded illustrations of this error. "The Higher Christian Life"—Is there, then, a Lower Christian Life? I denied it. The Christian life is one—not two—it admits of growth, but it is one life from first beginning to final perfection. But in the meeting, one of the Salvation sisters spoke of a state of justification, in which the believer in his life differed not at all from an infidel. Such doctrine seemed to me false and perilous. Yet I fear that it is too common. The impression is produced that there are two states of salvation, two stages of Christian life. At first the great business is to get saved from hell fire. The second stage is sanctification, salvation, holiness. While you are talking about the first, the second may be left out of sight. Is that Christianity? Is that the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ?

My friend seemed to wish to get away, and I let him go, bidding him, in the name of my Master, to offer the higher, the highest Christian life to the worst of sinners.—I am, &c.,

AN OLD MISSIONARY.

Hampstead, N.W., May 10.

SCATTERING THE SEED.—The Berlin Society for the spread of Christian literature supplies 100 restaurants in Berlin with eight different religious and useful journals and papers. In the provinces fifty-four places are thus supplied.

MOTHERWELL, N.B.—A correspondent writing of the services here conducted by Mr. Dunn, says:—"Delightful times here. The hall is crowded night after night with iron workers, and great numbers of them are coming to the Lord. Sunday week was a day of great power and blessing. The workers had their hands full with anxious souls."

NEW YORK.—The International Free Reading Room, of 371, Third Avenue, in this city, has now removed to 744, Broadway. Would you be so kind as to insert this notice, as many subscribers send your paper to the Reading Room. For this we would express our thanks.—Yours respectfully,

WM. J. BOYNTON.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.—Annual Meeting on Thursday, May 29, at Mildmay Conference Hall: afternoon at 3 o'clock, Lord Shaftesbury in the chair; evening at 7 o'clock, Mr. George Williams in the chair. The evening meeting was in our May Meeting List stated, in error, to be held at Exeter Hall. Mr. Hudson Taylor and several missionaries from China will be present.

PADDINGTON-GREEN CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL.—A meeting in connection with this institution was held at the hospital on Thursday last. Mr. George Hanbury (chairman) stated that the hospital had grown out of the children's dispensary in Bell-street, Edgware-road, and was opened to receive patients in 1883. Mr. T. A. Denny felt convinced of the need of the hospital, and was sure that there would always be plenty of children brought to it. Rev. E. W. Moore said nothing appealed more strongly to their sympathies than the sufferings of poor little children. What was more necessary to ultimate recovery than proper nursing and suitable diet? These were not to be had in the miserable homes of the poor. He was sure the claims of the charity only required to be made known for the necessary funds to be forthcoming.

Notices of Books, &c.

THE GLORIES OF THE MAN OF SORROWS is the title of a little volume published by Cassell & Co., 2s. 6d. It contains six Lenten Sermons preached at St. James's Church, Piccadilly, by the Rev. H. G. BONAVIA HUNT. They are evangelical, thoughtful, practical, and suggestive.

A WOMAN'S WORK; or, Memorials of Eliza Fletcher. By Rev. C. A. SALMOND. 3s. 6d. J. N. Mackinlay, Glasgow. All who can appreciate the memoirs of Christian life and service will be deeply interested in the perusal of this book. Miss Fletcher was no ordinary woman, and her life was one of great usefulness and devotion to the cause of Christ. A portion of the book consists of a biographical sketch, the rest containing notes of addresses, chiefly to her Bible-class. Her remarks are intensely practical and pungent, and this record of both her words and actions should stimulate every reader to a closer walk with God, and more earnest endeavour for the good of our fellow-men. It is a worthy tribute to a noble woman.

THE TWOFOLD LIFE. By A. J. GORDON, D.D. Hodder & Stoughton. 3s. 6d. A specially instructive and useful book, written mainly for spiritual help and quickening of Christian ministers and workers. The work of the Holy Spirit in the believer is set forth very fully, the enduement of the Spirit for power, for service, for testimony, for success, being in brief the subject of the book. A special feature of this work is that the author lays much stress upon the manifestation of the Spirit's presence in the Church, and illustrates his theme by reference to the lives of saints of all ages, skilfully blending Scripture exposition with religious incident. It is sure to be a favourite book with spiritually-minded readers, and will, doubtless, help many to a better understanding and fuller realisation of the abundant life Jesus Christ came to secure for those who believe on Him.

TERSE TALK ON TIMELY TOPICS. By HENRY VARLEY. Nisbet & Co. 3s. 6d. The title very fairly expresses the character and aim of the book, which is cheerful, chatty, and companionable, as the author has endeavoured to make it. Some of the pieces it contains have appeared in The Christian Commonwealth, but are revised, and most of them amplified in the revision. A good index of subjects is appended, a glance at which shows the wide range of thought covered by the volume. Anecdotes and illustrations, gathered from a variety of sources abound, and a strong healthy moral tone, as well as the more distinctly spiritual element, pervades its pages. Altogether, Mr. Varley's first attempt to publish a volume deserves and is likely to secure success. It is specially adapted for circulation among young men, and should be in all libraries for their use.

WICLIF AND HUS. By Dr. LOSERTH. Hodder & Stoughton. 7s. 6d. This is one of the most able works on the Lollard movement that has appeared of late. After setting forth in a copious introduction the opinions of competent scholars as to the relation of Hus to the tenets of Wycliffe, it gives a number of sketches of men who, though less generally known, played very important parts as precursors of the great reformers abroad. The major part is devoted to the life of Hus; but as his views and tenets were so similar to those of his predecessor, the two men may be linked together as the leaders of the early stages of reform. It is admirably translated from the original German by Rev. M. J. Evans, and loses none of its force by the traduction. As a compact and yet exhaustive treatise on a movement to which all Christendom is indebted, we believe it will do good service on its mission.

THE BIBLE TRUE TO ITSELF: A Treatise on the Historical Truth of the Old Testament. By A. MOODY-STUART, D.D. James Nisbet & Co. 5s. It is gratifying to find this veteran theologian writing in refutation of modern theories respecting the Old Testament. We have read much on the subject, but have met with nothing that exposes with such a fine temper and such conclusiveness of reasoning the speculations of some modern writers. The argument of Dr. Moody-Stuart against the ceremonials of the tabernacle in the wilderness being the institutions and the ritual of the temple under Ezra and his successors, seems to us overwhelming. Equally valuable is the evidence offered in favour of the authorship of both parts of Isaiah. The untenableness of much modern criticism is shown in a few chapters, which must make the book a standard one. On other points lately raised by this destructive school, the reasoning is calm, candid, and convincing. We rejoice that the Old Testament has found such an able defender.

GOD IS LOVE. Sacred Song, by Sir JOHN BOWRING, set to music by Miss MARIAN PEARCE. 1s. 6d. nett. Jos. Williams, 24, Berners-street, W. The beautiful words are well known. The music before us is pretty, and well suited to the words. The song may also be had direct from Miss Pearce, 19, Victoria-road, Margate.

Two more additions have been made to the series of "Normal Studies for Teachers," viz., THE YOUNG TEACHER, an elementary handbook of instruction, by W. H. GROSER, 2s., and FROM CHRIST TO CONSTANTINE, or Christianity in the First three Centuries, by W. F. ADENEY, 2s. (Sunday-school Union.) They both contain valuable help to such work.

IN DIVINE REALITIES FORESHADOWED IN THE TABERNACLE AND ITS SERVICES the reader will find many good and striking hints explanatory of the precious truths typified by the Levitical economy. The book comprises seven lectures on the subject, by GEORGE HUCKLESBY, and is published by W. B. Horner & Son. (1s. 6d.) The lectures have been frequently delivered by the author, and he has done well to commit them to print.

NEEDLEWORK FOR LADIES, for Pleasure and Profit. By "Dorinda." 1s. 6d. Swan, Sonnenschein & Co. The authoress appears to possess good taste, and we have no doubt that the suggestions will be of great service to ladies wishing to increase their incomes by plain and fancy needlework. She shows how to make it remunerative, and gives instructions for the newest and most fashionable kinds of fancy work, with directions and recipes for various pretty and saleable articles.

SHADOWS; or, Scenes in the Life of an Old Armchair (with illustrations). By Mrs. O. F. WALTON. 4s. Religious Tract Society. This gifted writer has already made her talent known and appreciated in "Christie's Old Organ" and a "Peep behind the Scenes." Although this book does not contain the pathos of the one nor the startling revelations of the other, it is nevertheless a very interesting narrative, which adds its testimony to the truth of the divine assurance, "Be sure your sin will find you out." It will make a very readable and pretty present.

PRESENT DAY TRACTS ON CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE, DOCTRINE, AND MORALS. Vol. IV. 4s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. We have already given a separate notice of some of the tracts that appear in this portable and well got-up volume. We would now draw special attention to Dr. Porter's admirable argument for the truth of Christianity on the mutual relations of its three elements—its history, doctrine, and life, and to Prebendary Row's powerful statement of the historical reality of the Christ of the Gospels from the unity of characteristics assigned to Him by the Evangelists. This line of evidence is very instructive as well as convincing, and likely to do good service.

THE LOST TASMANIAN RACE. By JAMES BONWICK, F.R.G.S. (with illustrations). 4s. Sampson Low & Co. This is an interesting collection of facts and particulars relating to the lives and habits of early colonial races, especially the Tasmanians. It is an abridged reproduction of "The Last of the Tasmanians." The earlier works of this author are well known and worthily appreciated, and he has spared no pains in this to gather together incidents of interest to his readers. It reveals a sad tale of the past, and while we rejoice in the present civilisation of our Australian colonies, we cannot but mourn that in some cases such questionable measures were used in conquering a people less enlightened and less powerful than ourselves.

EARTH'S EARLIEST AGES; AND THEIR CONNECTION WITH MODERN SPIRITUALISM AND THEOSOPHY. By G. H. PEMBER, M.A. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Mr. Pember is favourably known for his able work on the great prophecies concerning the Gentiles, the Jews, and the Church of God. The present volume looks backward, and deals with very grave aspects of the present times. Intelligent readers may differ from the conclusions arrived at, but they will not differ as to the devout spirit, the scholarship, the clear, masterly style, and the appeal throughout to Scripture. We do not discern any positive scriptural basis for the author's theory of a preadamite kingdom of Satan upon earth; though we think the hints which are given concerning Satan's authority and power ought to be more seriously studied. Mr. Pember's book may be read with advantage by those who would follow in this line of inquiry. The 220 pages of the book on spiritualism, and the modern movement of an occult theosophy, are very remarkable and startling. These latter chapters give proof of careful research.

On the 31st May, the proprietors of The Graphic will publish on a large extra sheet a BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF LONDON AS SEEN FROM A BALLOON. This is said to be the first time that an artist has gone up for the special purpose of making panoramic drawings of London. This feat has been accomplished by Mr. W. L. Wyllie, who went up on behalf of The Graphic, being accompanied by the eminent aeronaut, Mr. Simmons. With his keen artistic vision, Mr. Wyllie was able to see a great deal of the general effect, during his brief voyage through the air, but the whole of the details had afterwards to be carefully sketched from various high points of the metropolis. In this part of the work Mr. Wyllie was aided by Mr. H. W. Brewer, the beauty and accuracy of whose architectural drawings are well known.

ROCK VERSUS SAND; OR, THE FOUNDATIONS OF THE CHRISTIAN FAITH. By J. MONRO GIBSON, D.D. Nisbet & Co. Dr. Gibson is admirably qualified to undertake such a task as he has set himself in this volume, which displays rare skill and originality in its structure and composition. Following in his argument the order of God, Christ, the Bible, he unfolds clearly and logically the evidence that our belief in each and all of them is founded on solid rock, and in no degree upon shifting sand. The heart, the soul, the intellect, the conscience, are placed in the witness box, and made to testify for God and truth; and by their joint testimony with the works of nature they are shown to necessitate the existence of God, and to point to the certainty that He would reveal Himself to man. The life, works, and resurrection of Christ are then carefully reviewed, and by evidences, independent of inspiration, proved to be authentic, compelling conviction and assured confidence as to their truth. We are thus led to the inspiration of the sacred Scriptures, and a complete foundation for truth to build upon is deeply and solidly laid. We commend the book most heartily, as one in every way serviceable to the cause of truth. The style is popular without being loose, the arguments full without being diffuse, and the criticism of opponents firm and bold without being harsh or one-sided.

THE ANCHORAGE MISSION.

THE ANCHORAGE HOUSE, Regent's Park, N.W. THE MISSION HALL, Queen Anne's Gate, Westminster.

Committee—George Hanbury, Esq.; Rev. H. E. Fox; Colonel Stuart Wortley.

GOSPEL MISSION AND PREVENTIVE WORK.

In addition to the Sunday and Week-day Services, Sunday Schools, Mothers' Meetings, &c., in the Mission Hall, Classes are now held for the instruction of young girls of various ages in the truths of the Gospel, and for teaching them sewing, cutting out, mending, and other such things as may be useful to them in their various positions in life.

Bible Classes for domestic servants, young women in houses of business, and others, are being arranged. All classes are conducted by Ladies.

RESCUE WORK.

The Anchorage House meets a great and acknowledged want, in sheltering respectable young women who have been led astray. Many and many a poor creature, now sunk in the sinful life of our great cities, might have been saved had such an opportunity come before her in the early days of her sin.

Special Mission Services are held from time to time for women living in sin.

The whole work of the Mission is directed towards producing a clear and definite change of heart, through simple belief and trust in the Atoning Blood of the Lord Jesus Christ. The work accomplished during past years shows that the blessing of God rests on what is done with that view only.

The expenses are necessarily heavy, and an earnest appeal for assistance is made to those who sympathise with work carried on on the lines indicated above. No debt will be incurred, and the work done can therefore only be in accordance with the funds sent in from outside sources, in aid of that found by the Members of the Committee and their friends.

Papers, containing a full account of the work of the Anchorage Mission, including suggestions as to the way found wisest by experience to overcome certain difficulties found in dealing with young women about to become mothers, and rules for admission to the Anchorage House, will be sent on application by letter (not post-cards), to Mrs. H. Stuart Wortley, President of the Ladies' Committee, Rosslyn House, Grove End Road, N.W., to whom, to any Member of Committee, or Messrs. Morgan & Scott, subscriptions, which are much wanted now, may be sent.

EVANGELIZATION IN SPAIN AND PORTUGAL.

In Spain and Portugal, where until quite lately Reform has seemed to many an impossibility, there are now several thousand native Protestants. Confronted by obloquy and persecution, these noble Reformers have asserted for themselves and their fellow-countrymen their right to an "open Bible," and to the "free salvation" therein proclaimed. They are carrying on a really spiritual work—the result of an open Bible, and of that glad tidings which is "the power of God unto salvation." Those who are engaged in the work are thoroughly in earnest—anxious about their own spiritual welfare, anxious about that of their fellow-countrymen. Every member of these Churches is taught to regard himself as a missionary, and many of them gladly accept the responsibility. But these Reformers are only a handful in the midst of a vast Roman Catholic population. They are few, and poor, and weak. They are passing through the ordeal from which we emerged 300 years ago. We have safely reached the shore. They are still struggling through the waves. A cry comes to us as it did to the Apostle of old, "Come and help us." Shall we not, as he did, haste to the rescue of these our brethren, assuredly believing that the Lord Himself has called us?

Shall these our brethren sink—
And we so near!
Dare we from danger shrink—
And they so dear!

Ah! ye who still delay,
What if in the last Great Day
Ye should for mercy pray,
And none should hear!

Christ! let it not be thus—
Be Thou at hand!
Dear Lord, who died for us,
Now by us stand!

Teach us the lost to seek,
Help the strong to help the weak,
Safe through the waters bleak,
Bring all to land!

This Society was established in 1860 for the reception of the less degraded class of penitent young women. Young women are admitted on any day, and coming from any quarter whatsoever, if there be room and funds. Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied. A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women before they become mothers, as are unfitted from their previous good character and position to mix with others. The applications for admission are painfully urgent. Funds are greatly needed.

THE GOLD COAST.

IN consequence of the numerous cases of illness and death among the French missionaries on the Gold Coast, an exploring party travelled inland to see if they could find a more healthful climate. After an absence of forty-four days the party returned unsuccessful in that respect, but wherever they announced the good news they were favourably received, many of the chiefs expressing a strong desire for missionaries.

THE PHILADELPHIA SABBATH ASSOCIATION,

Established forty-four years since, composed of representatives of all denominations, is active in agitating the Sabbath question. Several meetings have been held in response to the call which was issued from the Union, for prayer for the better observance of the Sabbath, in connection with the Ministerial Union of this city. It is hoped that the newly-inaugurated mayor will take steps to close liquor dens on the Sabbath.

GIBRALTAR.

During the past few weeks we have been much cheered by visits from various fellow labourers in the Lord's vineyard, on their way to and from their Mission fields. These include Dr. Witten, late of the Brighton Medical Mission, Rev. H. P. Chapman, of Walworth, and Mr. and Mrs. Campbell, of Glasgow, who have given us refreshing and encouraging addresses, to stimulate us to further service. We shall at all times be glad to welcome any workers on their way, as steamers generally remain here for several hours.

A RATIONALIST SAVED.

Dr. Hildebrandt, a learned German naturalist, travelled eight years in Africa and Madagascar, and gained a deservedly high name in the scientific world. He arrived in Madagascar a Rationalist, but died there a believer in Christ. When he was taken ill he was received into the house of the Norwegian Missionary and Dr. Borchgrewink at Antananarivo, where he died. When the missionary saw that the illness was likely to be fatal, he told him so, and said, "Shall we not together call upon God, and ask Him to reveal Jesus to you as his Son and as the only Saviour from death and judgment?" He willingly consented. "During the prayer," relates Dr. Borchgrewink, "the doubts which had so long held him captive disappeared, and soon after, when my wife came into the room, he stretched out both his hands, while joy beamed from his face, and triumphantly cried out, 'Yes, dear friend, there is indeed a Christ,' and he often repeated that he could now die with joy."—Wahrheitszeugen.

THE MISSION SCHOONER "MYSTERY."

Our Mission vessel has been for a few weeks in Havre, and we have been much encouraged in our work among the French sailors, fishermen, &c., who are attracted by the singing on board. The crowded gatherings night after night, and on the Lord's Day, made us anxious to continue in the port, but a more pressing need being felt at Trouville, we engaged our French pilot to take us in tow, and arrived there on May 8. Although it was nearly nine o'clock at night, we were welcomed by some French Protestants, who came on board and joined with us in prayer and praise.

There are here a number of French Protestants and Roman Catholics longing for the good news of the Gospel. They need the sympathy and prayer of the Church of Christ. If some warm-hearted, loving Christians could settle down amongst them, and hire a room for Gospel preaching, they would be doing the Lord's work. Weather permitting, we leave on the 23rd for Dunkerque.

Some four years ago I had the pleasure of lending the vessel to Count Bobrinskey and the Hon. Miss Waldegrave. Lard Radstock and his lady friends have also been labouring here, and have left the mark of their esteem in the hearts and homes of the people, through their deep and loving sympathy, while the light of the Gospel has dawned upon many in this fashionable watering-place.

"The Author is well known in this country, as well as in America, as an able and successful evangelist and preacher. The book is the well-arranged product of a fresh and vigorous mind; steeped in biblical thought and spirit: and is fitted in no ordinary measure to give clear views of the scope and purpose of the Bible; to confirm faith in its Divine origin and authority; and to guide to such a use of it as may build up the reader, both in holiness and comfort, and in zeal and usefulness, unto Eternal Life. While admirably fitted for young converts, no Christian can read it without both stimulus and profit."—The Outlook, Feb. 1, 1884.

THE BOYS' HOME, SOUTHWARK.

Branches—LITTLE WANDERERS' HOME, GREENWICH, S.E.; THE BOYS' ORPHAN HOME, RAMSGATE; THE "GOLDEN LION" WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE, SOUTHWARK.

FUNDS are now URGENTLY NEEDED for carrying on the work in the above HOMES.

As usual during the summer season, there has been lately an almost entire falling off in supplies, and it has become necessary to beg that friends of destitute boys will kindly help, that the accounts may not be allowed to fall in arrears during Mr. FEGAN's absence in Canada.

Applications for admission to the Homes are as numerous and as distressing now as during the winter, but from lack of means many urgent cases have to be reluctantly refused.

In this emergency, a Friend kindly offers £20, if 24 others will contribute a similar sum in response to this appeal.

Letters should be addressed, and remittances made payable, as usual, to

J. W. C. Fegan

THE

COMING OF THE LORD.

AN ADDRESS BY

Rev. NEWMAN HALL, LL.B.

EXTRACT.

"The entrance of the soul at death to the presence of Jesus is one article of faith: the general Judgment is another; but these should not absorb and take the place of another revealed fact, that Christ will come to our world to reign with His saints, to perfect His Church, to cause His Kingdom to come and His will to be done on earth even as in heaven; and thus to accomplish all the predictions with which the Bible teems respecting the universal triumph of truth and righteousness in this long distracted and sin-polluted world.

"The early Church did eagerly and lovingly anticipate such an Advent. They were 'looking for that blessed hope'; not the hope of going to heaven, but of Christ coming to earth. They were patient in tribulation, believing that 'the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.' They were 'looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God.' They were characterised as those who 'love His appearing.' In this confident expectation they were encouraged by Apostles filled with the Spirit of the Lord."—Pages 6—8.

ODO-MAGNETIC TREATMENT OF DEBILITY.

THE successful employment of such a radical and constitutional remedy needs skilful and practical experience, acquired only by patient, laborious, and continued study. The difference between the Electric and Magnetic forces we have endeavoured to explain; and having personally proved that Magnetism (pure and simple) possesses a most powerfully energising influence, and having spent many years in adapting it to some of the most obscure and intractable affections, we now claim that the results of our professional efforts in the use of Magneto-Electricity, as recorded in the "Uniform Efficacy of Curative Magnetism," show a success unparalleled in the healing art. The names of those whose statements we publish are a sufficient guarantee and confirmation of the facts stated. A personal communication with them will afford additional evidence, and elicit assurances that not only themselves, but the whole circle of friends who accepted the advice given, are able to report favourably.

From these considerations it will be seen that the most important feature of Magnetic Treatment, and the primary source of its success, is its power to assist Nature constitutionally, until she recovers strength to throw off the diseases which result from deficient nervous energy and lack of vital power. And it is this uniform result, not only in individual cases, but in whole households or families, which demonstrates its power to arrest and control such a variety of nervous diseases. Acting directly on the circulatory system, and impregnating the blood with a richer supply of oxygen, there can be no portion of the organism unbenefited by its influence.

From Miss A. WAINMAN, 106, Anne-street, Burnley.

January 3, 1884.

"When I applied to you for your advice, I did so feeling that it was my last hope; I was really tired of my life, and I think, had I not been helped by your remedy, I must have given up all expectation of ever finding relief. As I told you when I first wrote, I was without animation—almost like a stone, devoid of feeling. Medical treatment and nursing had no beneficial effect, and though my friends assured me that nature would have its way, and work a cure in time, I felt it hopeless to anticipate this any longer, and I told them it was something to give me life I wanted. Medicine I took madly to obtain relief. When I adopted your advice all medicine was dispensed with, and I placed myself entirely in your hands. I am thankful now to say that I feel as well as ever I did in my life, and am enabled to attend work again, which I never thought I should do. I feel that I have had a wonderful escape of death, which I owe, through God, to you. May He ever bless you and your work! I have known many who have tried your treatment, and have found it effectual, and I have myself advised others to adopt your treatment."

On receipt of particulars of any case, in which advice is sought, the fullest information will be given, and the required treatment suggested, gratuitously, by Mr. B. COPSON GARRATT, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-sq., London, E.C.

THE WAGES OF THE POOR.

By Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, M.P.

I SEE in The Christian of last week an allusion to the striking address of Rev. G. S. Reaney to the Congregational Union, on the subject of the miserable payment for needlework in London. He displayed numerous articles of attire at the meeting, and stirred its sympathy by narrating the starvation wages paid to poor women for making them. He and many other good men are under the impression that the poor are defrauded of their just due by the cupidity of employers, and that far higher wages could easily be paid out of the profits of the work done.

Allow me to describe an experiment that some philanthropists made in Liverpool some years ago, under a similar impression. We had at that time a wave of sympathy for the sufferings of the needlewomen; the papers were filled with descriptions of their wretched condition; they were said to be ground down by cruel taskmasters, and not able to earn more than 5s. per week, while their work was worth twice as much. I was one of those who believed, like Mr. Reaney, that they were unjustly treated, and ardently supported the movement for their emancipation.

We rented a large house, fitted it with suitable appliances, and invited all the needlewomen who chose to avail themselves of it; we undertook to provide them with employment at the highest rate we could obtain in the market, without charging anything for the use of the house. The result was a complete disappointment. Our institution was filled with helpless, useless women, most of whom could not earn more than 2s. to 4s. per week—comparatively few could make over 5s.; and this was the utmost their labour would fetch in the open market, although there was no intervening profit to the employer. We did not get the higher class of machinists who could earn higher wages, say 10s. and 12s. per week, but we attracted, as usually happens in philanthropic undertakings, the inferior hands.

I much fear that the same result would follow a similar attempt in London. I should rejoice if by any means it were possible to improve the condition of the poor women who do slop work in London, but I much doubt if it be possible to raise the rate of wages effectually while the supply of labour is so far in excess of the demand. It is not the cupidity of employers so much as the excessive over-supply of female labour in the metropolis, and, I may add, its small commercial value, that depresses wages. It is hopeless to strive against economical laws, that are in their action as fixed and inexorable as those of nature.

I have been a party to many philanthropic attempts to improve the condition of the poor; of these not a few have proved failures. Indeed, I may say that in all cases they have been failures, where true commercial principles have been departed from. It may seem heartless to say this; but it is better to know the truth than to be buoyed up by delusions.

The ill-paid and under-fed labour that abounds in our large towns can only be permanently ameliorated by reducing its quantity and improving its quality. London is the sink of the pauperism, helplessness, and crime of the nation. A vast influx of needy people pours into it from all parts of the country, and even from the Continent. Its population increases at the alarming rate of one hundred thousand persons annually, and no amount of charity could permanently alleviate the condition of the very poor. Indeed the more charity that is dispensed the greater the influx of the destitute classes. The problem is therefore one of intense difficulty,

What is really wanted is copious emigration, and the diffusion of such habits of prudence and foresight as will prevent people recklessly multiplying without the least regard to the fate of the helpless beings they bring into existence. Were there any possibility of stopping the increase of the population for a generation, excessive poverty would greatly diminish, wages would increase by the natural law of supply and demand, and the poor would rise to a higher standard of life, and would resolve not again to fall below it; but I fear any expectation of this kind is Utopian in the present state of society, especially with the utter ignorance of economical laws that exists among the poor.

I am aware that this communication only touches the fringe of a great question; there is much more that I could say, were this the proper place. I will only add that no one more fervently desires than I do, to raise the condition of our poorer classes; no one has more intently brooded over this painful subject. The more I study it, the more am I convinced that philanthropy and religion alone are not sufficient to devise sound remedies, but to them must be added a practical acquaintance with trade, and a knowledge of economical laws. These may be looked upon as hard and relentless, and sometimes they are unrighteously divorced from the ethics of Christianity. Still, in the main they are the laws of nature, and they cannot be ignored without disastrous consequences. Just at present there is some danger, in our earnest longing to benefit the poor, that we may fail to study the question from all sides, and that mere declamation may take the place of Christian statesmanship.

WHITSUNDAY, 1884.

By the Author of "The Coming Prince."

THE Jewish Passover is celebrated at the full moon next after the spring equinox, and Pentecost falls seven weeks later. Our own Easter and Whitsuntide are fixed upon the same principle, and therefore it follows that only occasionally in a series of years can these festivals be real anniversaries of the events they are intended to commemorate. Such, however, they are in this year 1884. "Good Friday" was in fact the anniversary of the Crucifixion, and Easter Sunday of the Resurrection. This May 22 is the anniversary of the Ascension of our Lord, and Whitsunday will be the anniversary of the Church's first great Pentecost.*

But here a difficulty arises. The Feast of Pentecost, in the year of the Crucifixion, was celebrated on the Jewish Sabbath, Saturday, May 31. How, then, can any Sunday whatever be an anniversary of it? The solution of this difficulty involves an inquiry into truth of intense interest to the Christian.

Within the Feast of Passover was the day of the first-fruits, when the first sheaf of the harvest was presented before Jehovah in the holy place—a type of the Lord's resurrection, to which it is expressly referred in the New Testament (1 Cor. xv. 23). From that day was reckoned the seven weeks which ended with Pentecost, when the two loaves were offered in the Temple. Now, according to the law, the day of the first-fruits was the "morrow after the Sabbath" in Pascha week, and therefore ought invariably to have fallen on the first day of the week. But in Ezra's revival the Jews misread the law, and construed the words "the morrow after the Sabbath," as meaning the day following the festival. It therefore came to pass that the Jews were keeping the day of the first fruits upon the Sabbath day on which the Lord lay in the grave (one reason why "that Sabbath was a high day," John xix. 31), and thus the whole significance of the type was lost.

But Pentecost fell on the same week-day as that on which the wavesheaf was offered. Much has been written to disprove this. But these writers have overlooked the fact that with the Jews days were reckoned inclusively. The fact here asserted is plain to anyone who will turn to any Jewish almanack. In the present year, for instance, the fifteenth Nisan (Passover) was on April 10; the day of the firstfruits therefore was Friday, April 11; and Pentecost is Friday, May 30. It follows, therefore, that if in the year of the Crucifixion the feast day of the Passover fell on Friday, both the day of the firstfruits, and, seven weeks later, the day of Pentecost, fell on the Jewish Sabbath. If the one was wrongly celebrated on the Sabbath, so also was the other. With regard to the one, God ignored the Jewish calendar and the practices of the people, but it is always assumed that with respect to the other, God accepted the false date, and gave the great gift of the Holy Ghost, not upon the true day of Pentecost, but on the day in which the Jews were in error celebrating it. The true Pentecost was on the first day of the week (Lev. xxiii. 16).

The statement in Acts ii. 1 is generally read as though it said, "Upon the day of Pentecost, the disciples," &c.; and the Revisers, less accurate here than the translators, have sanctioned this. But the work used is of ambigious meaning. It is only used by St. Luke, and only three times by him (Luke viii. 23, ix. 51; Acts ii. 1). I means "completely filled," and thus when used of time, accomplished, and therefore, possibly, passed. Here it may mean either that the day was running its course, or that it had ended.

Can there be the least doubt that the disciples, as devout Jews, kept the feast according to the law as interpreted by the elders? Can there be a doubt that they "were all with one accord in one place" on the first day of the week, the day made sacred by the resurrection of the Lord? And can there be a doubt that it was then, on the true day of Pentecost, that the "promise of the Father" was fulfilled?

And, as already stated, the coming "Whitsunday" is the exact anniversary of that June 1, in the eighteenth year of Tiberias, which was dispensationally the "birthday" of the Christian Church. Every Passover lamb pointed forward to the Cross; every wavesheaf to the Resurrection; every "Feast of Weeks" to the gift of the Holy Ghost. Passover is fulfilled, but a greater Pentecost is yet to come, when Joel's prophecy will be realised in all its fulness, leading on to the great Feast of Tabernacles, earth's great Harvest-home.

* The birth date of Christ is not recorded, but the year in which He began his ministry is fixed with absolute definiteness and certainly (Luke iii. 1, 2); and having this date, we can fix the year of the Crucifixion. Once the year is known, the exact dates of the events of the last Passion can, of course, be ascertained.

"The Christian" Pulpit.

CHRIST THE WAY.

By Pastor THEODORE MONOD.

"Jesus said unto him, I am the Way."—JOHN xiv. 6.

I DO not propose to consider the whole verse, nor even the beginning of it: "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life." We will confine ourselves to the first of these three words—the first in order, the simplest, and the nearest to us. Through Christ as the Way, we reach Christ as the Truth, and Christ as the Life.

Let me only observe what a wonderful thing it is that it could ever have occurred to a son of man to say, "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life." No philosopher ever said such a thing, before nor since. He does not say: "I show the Way; I teach the Truth; I give the Life." That would be saying much; but He says: "I am the Way; I am the Truth; I am the Life." Who could speak thus but God? If a son of man has spoken thus, that son of man is also Son of God. Such words as these are the strongest evidence for the divinity of Christ.

But to return: "I am the Way." Man has lost the way that leads to GOD. He has so completely lost it, that nowadays we hear the fool shouting on the housetops what he used to whisper in his heart: "No God!" We hear others boasting that, supposing there be a God, we cannot find the way to Him.

We have lost the way to God. "Who is God? Where is God? How can we reach God?" Such are the questions that are asked. And every philosophy, and every religion of man's contrivance, is just an attempt to find the way.

Losing the way that leads to God we have lost the way that leads to holiness—that is, harmony with God. I surely need not expatiate upon the fact—that man has lost the way to holiness. Look at the history of mankind. We need not go so far: look all around you; take up your newspaper. We need not even go so far as that; look within you; look into your own heart. The way to holiness! Have we found it? No, indeed! "Harmony with God!" This world is full of discord and disorder just because it is, first of all, out of harmony with God.

Then again: having lost the way to God and the way to holiness, we have lost the way to happiness. Holiness and happiness go together. Indeed, one might almost say they are two words for one thing. Where there is no holiness there can be no happiness. A man cannot be happy if he is out of harmony with God. He can try to persuade himself for a little while that he is happy. He can try to content himself with the husks that the swine do eat, and call it happiness. He can run after "pleasure"—that miserable caricature of happiness. He seeks pleasure all the more because he has lost happiness. To be truly happy, contented, satisfied—to have happiness that is not dependent on circumstances—that is a secret that man has not found yet.

And, finally, having lost the way to God, and to holiness, and to happiness, we have, of course, lost the way to heaven. Men speak of a better world as though it were a certainty. But if you shut this Book and give the lie to the words of Christ and his Apostles, where can you find any evidence of a better world; and especially any evidence that you will get there? Where is this better world? How can you reach it? Certainly, if you look at death, it does not speak of a better world. Death is a horrible sight, against which all our hearts and all our senses revolt, and from which we recoil. If you look only at natural evidence, surely you have no evidence of a better world.

There was a French writer who was not a Christian, but who believed in God and in some kind of future after this life. During his last illness—a few years ago—a friend of his, who was an atheist, said to him: "How sad and weary you look. You say you believe in something after death. I think that believing in something after death, you ought not to be so downcast. You seem as if you were afraid." "Ah!" said the man, "that is the very reason why I am afraid. This part of the universe is full of suffering, and why should not another part be the same?" That was his reasoning.

We do not know the way to heaven. Man has been trying for ages to make to himself a ladder high enough and strong enough to bear him, so that he may climb above his misery and reach the battlements of the New Jerusalem. But where shall he set the foot of his ladder, and where shall he find a ladder high enough? Is there any answer to that question? My friends, what man cannot do God can do. If there be such a place as heaven, and if there be such a Being as God, that ladder, which we are unable to raise from earth to heaven, God is able (if He be willing) to let down from heaven to earth. My friends, God is able to do it and He is willing to do it. Nay, He has done it. "We have seen heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man" (John i. 51).

"Jesus said unto him, I am the Way." First of all, the way from heaven to earth; and therefore the way from earth to heaven. He is first the way from the light into the darkness, and therefore the way out of the darkness into the light. He is the way from God to man, and therefore the way from man to God.

And now, having the way before us, we have but to step into it, and we find God at once. "He that hath seen Me, hath seen the Father." Christ came to us from God. Yea, God was "in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them." Christ has taken out of the way that which stood between us and God—even our guilt. He has reconciled justice and mercy, and through his taking our place, taking our guilt, taking the punishment of sin, we are reconciled to God. The chastisement that we deserved has been put upon Him, and it is "the chastisement of our peace;" through his stripes we are healed. "Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world."

Having made the way clear, He not only reconciles us to God, but unites us to God—makes us one with God. In Him we find holiness. If you find the sun you find the light. If you find God you find holiness. If you find God, as your Father and your Friend, surely harmony with Him produces delight in his will and obedience to his commandments.

Finding holiness you find happiness. You are satisfied with God. You rest in God. You find in Him your everlasting portion. Finding Him, you have found the way to heaven. You need inquire no further. Heaven itself has come to him who has Christ.

A dying Christian, with whom I was acquainted, was asked by her mother, "Can you see me?" She answered, "I cannot see you; I can only see Jesus."

I read of a little girl who felt the shadows of death gathering around her pillow. "It is so dark," she said; "father, come with me." He answered, "I cannot go with you, my child." Then she said, "Mother will come: it is so dark." Her mother, weeping, said, "I cannot go with you; ask Jesus to go with you." The child kept silence for a little while. Then, smiling, she turned to her parents again and said, "I am not afraid now, He will go with me."

But let us look a little more closely into these words. Observe that Christ says "I am the Way;" not simply "I am a way,"—one way. If He had said that, we might conclude that there are other ways to heaven (though I cannot understand how such a thought could enter any man's mind). If there were another way to heaven than Christ, why did God give Christ? Why did He give Him up into the hands of his enemies? Why did He suffer Him to be scourged, to be spat upon, to be beaten, to be crucified? The very fact that God spared not his own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, is sufficient evidence that that was the needed way, that that was the one way. If God lets any sinner into his Kingdom, that sinner must in some manner be led to the Saviour. His notions about Christ may be lacking in definiteness and clearness, but surely he cannot be saved except through Christ. There cannot be two ways of salvation.

"I am the Way," He says—I. We often forget this. We imagine that something else than Christ may be the way after all. For instance, the Church. "We belong to the Christian Church; is not the Church the way of salvation?" Not except as it may be the way to Christ. It may lead us to Christ, but then we have to close with Christ, or we are still out of the way.

Is not the Bible the way? You may know the Bible by heart, from beginning to end, and not have found the way yet. The Bible points you to Christ. It is full of Christ, but it is not Christ. It was not crucified for you. The Bible, of itself, without Christ, without his Spirit, cannot bring you strength or light. It puts you in the presence of the truth; it is the messenger of God to you, but it is not your Saviour.

Well, but is not the knowledge of the truth the way? A knowledge of the truth is surely important. We must know the truth in order to receive it and possess it. But a mere knowledge of the truth never saved anybody. Nobody was ever saved by a notion of redemption any more than a man was ever nourished by a notion of food, or warmed by a notion of fire. It takes food to feed a man. It takes fire to warm a man. It takes Christ to save a man. If you have not found Christ Himself, you may know what every catechism says about Him and yet not be saved. You may even be able to explain and teach this knowledge to others, so that they shall be saved, and yet not be saved yourself.

A man may teach another man the way to such and such a place, but if he never moves himself he will not get there. I may tell you how to get to America: I may give you the most exact information about the passage; tell you where the boat starts from, and the course it will take across the ocean, and what the voyage will cost, and all about it; but that will not take me there. You may be a Sunday-school teacher, or an evangelist, or a preacher, but if you have not found Christ for yourself, you are still out of the way.

This is most elementary truth, but the more correct our notions of redemption are, the more we need it. "I am the way."

But again, and this is the most striking word of all, I think. He does not simply say, "I made the way;" though He did make it. He does not simply say, "I show the way," though He does show it. He does not simply say, "I walk in the way," though He does walk before us as our Example. He says further, and foremost, "I am the Way."

Have you noticed the "I ams" of Christ? There are many of them. Christ does not simply give blessings; He is the very substance of blessing. He never sends us grace; He brings it. It is all summed up in Himself, and it cannot be separated from Him. It is not a kind of parcel that He forwards; it is the gift of Himself. "Who of God is made unto us, Wisdom, and Righteousness, and Sanctification, and Redemption." My Wisdom is Christ; my Righteousness is Christ; my Sanctification is Christ; my Redemption is Christ. And if I have not Christ I have nothing. Let us see to it, then, that we have found Him.

What I said about our notions, I might as truly say about our feelings. They are not the way. Our experiences are not the way. Nothing that takes place within us is the way: only Christ Himself received by faith, so that we are united with Him—one body with Him, one Spirit with Him, as the Apostle says. That is the way.

(To be concluded.)

GIFTS AND THEIR EXERCISE.

AT a meeting of ministers, a discussion arose upon the unused energy in their churches, and it was affirmed and agreed that not more than fifteen per cent. of the membership could be regarded as in any sense Christian workers. One minister silently dissented, and determined to test the statement amongst his own people, which resulted in the discovery that fifteen per cent. was over the mark.

The Revised Version of Ephesians iv. 11—13, throws a useful side-light on this subject, for it shows that the gifts of apostles and prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers, were given for the express purpose of making every believer an effective worker:—

"And He gave some to be apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ: till we all attain unto the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a full-grown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

Thus we see that the work of ministering, of building up the body of Christ, devolves not upon the pastor and fifteen per cent. of his people, but upon the whole of them, and only so is it possible that we all attain unto the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a full-grown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ. How displeasing, therefore, in the eyes of God must be the unused energy of the eighty-five per cent. of unprofitable servants, who have wrapped their talents in napkins, and hidden them in the earth; and how offensive in his sight the jealousy of any so-called pastors, who do not study to know and to encourage the gifts of those of whom they are overseers, but discourage and repress them. No matter what their own gifts may be, the purpose for which they were given was to perfect the saints unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ.

The Apostle Paul's Epistles testify how he admonished and taught every one in all wisdom, that he might present every one perfect in Christ, who also wrought in him mightily to this end. And Paul would have them know how greatly he strove, even for those who had not seen his face, that their hearts might be comforted, they being knit together in love, and unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding, that they might know the mystery of God, even Christ, in whom are all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge hidden. Faithfully did all the other apostles fulfil this their appointed work. Well would it have been had all evangelists, and especially all pastors and teachers, kept in view the purpose of their ministry. But it is never too late for living men to awake out of sleep, nor for pastors and teachers to seek the exercise in every member of Christ of every spiritual gift which He has given to every man to profit withal. A CHILD'S INFLUENCE.

"Happy the home where Jesus' name
Is sweet to every ear,
Where children early lisp his fame,
And parents hold Him dear."

THE truth of this little verse was very forcibly realised by me a few days ago, when visiting a respectable man (a retired soldier) and his wife, who were brought out of the darkness and ignorance of Romanism into the light and knowledge of the Gospel through the influence of their little daughter.

It happened this way: About two and a-half years ago little M——. and her sister began to attend one of the ragged-schools in connection with the Dublin Visiting Mission. After she had attended for some time, she learned about Jesus and his love—how He said, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me," and many other texts, such as John iii. 16; Eph. ii. 8—10; Luke xi. 13. She also learned how to sing many beautiful hymns.

Every day when M——. went home she used to teach her mother the text she had learned at school, and its application to the Romish controversy. She would repeat over the hymns until she had learned them by heart. Finally she prevailed on her mother to come to one of the Mission Sunday-schools. Soon she began to learn the truth, and one Sunday she told the superintendent of the school that a great change had taken place in her opinions. She felt in her heart that the Word of God was true, and that many of the doctrines she had been taught as a Roman Catholic, mentioning several, such as "the Invocation of Saints and Angels," "Purgatory," "Confession to an earthly priest," will not be proved from it. A greater change took place not long after this, a change of heart, for she came to Jesus and found in Him pardon and peace.

Her urgent desire and prayer now, was that her husband might find that same full and free salvation she had found. To this end she got a Protestant Bible, which she read for him every evening, comparing it with the Douay Bible. He was struck with the similarity between the two versions, and that there was nothing said, as far as he could see, about worshipping the Virgin Mary. He commenced attending one of the classes in connection with the Mission for discussing, in a spirit of love and friendliness, the chief points of difference between the Church of Ireland and the Church of Rome. His mind gradually opened to receive the truth.

A great deal of pressure was now brought to bear on him by the priest to remove his children from the Mission school, and to send them to a convent school, and also to give up attending the discussion class. On his visit, the priest first charged the master of the school with having an image of the Virgin Mary which the children were taught to insult by spitting upon, but the man said he did not believe a word of it. He had been in the schoolroom himself, and there was no image there. The priest also commanded him to give up his Bible, which he refused to do. Some one now lent him a volume of "The Lives of the Saints," in the hope that the reading of it would induce him to return to the Church of Rome. When he had read it he said there was a time when he would have believed every word of it, but he now knew too much, which he learned from his Bible and at the discussion class, to credit such stories.

The priest paid him a second visit a short time ago, and threatened to get him "put out of his room," and "run out of the parish," if he did not take his children from the Mission-school and give up attending the classes. When the priest found he could not succeed in getting him to do so, he said there was such a person in Parliament as Mr. Tim Healy, and that he was going to move in the House that the pensions of all those who sent their children to "the Soupers," i.e., the Irish Church Mission Schools, should be stopped. Of course this did not frighten him, but has only made him more bold and resolute for the truth.

Eternity alone will reveal the influence for good that the children in our Mission Ragged Schools exercise on those around them. It is no uncommon thing for them to spend their evenings in singing sweet hymns for the neighbours, and teaching texts to those who have no other means of learning the Word of God.

Mr. Pascoe in Mexico.

IN a letter to Mr. Mercer, of Southport, dated Toluca, Mexico, April 14, Mr. Pascoe says:—

"I left San Telmo on Monday, the 7th, and reached here on the Tuesday. Our preacher here went to San Telmo during my absence. I have held services here, and have had most excellent congregations on all occasions; many could not find room. It has caused such a stir among the Protestants of Toluca that the preachers of the other two Missions found it advisable to suspend their services and come around to help me, so that we have had a glorious time. I gladly received their assistance, which much relieved my weak eyes. Thanks to our gracious Lord we have had an impressing time; many new comers are much impressed who never heard the Gospel before.

"Just at this moment Mexico is on the verge of revolution. For a week past the commerce in Mexico City has been closed. Government is trying by most unjust imposts to drive European merchants out of the land, in order—as I believe—to let Americans occupy the situation. Our Governor here in Toluca is too timid to publish the Governmental decree, and this keeps Toluca quiet for a time; but the whole nation is indignant, and if the Government does not give in I much fear that a revolution must ensue. Send me all the help you can, because should we have a revolution we shall need all we can get."

BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.—Christian friends will be glad to learn that another son of Abraham (a learned Talmudist) has been received into the Christian Church in connection with this Mission. Shortly afterwards, a large number of Jews assembled at the convert's lodgings, using threatening language. But the latter stood the test bravely, calmly preaching Christ to them.

WYCLIFFE AND HIS WORK.

From The Times of Saturday.

THIS is an age of revivals and commemorations. We are building the tombs of the prophets without much heeding whether we stand in their place or in the place of their persecutors. A century makes any man harmless. What if the dead languages themselves should live again? There are signs of it. The word "Quincentenary" has life in it, for it is quite original. Lord Bacon records that a leaden statue will grow if kept damp enough, and a pewter tankard in a parish chest will bud all over in a century or two. The centuries have brought round to the front again Luther and Tyndale, and now Wycliffe, first in order of time, and comparable to the greatest of the Reformers both in his character and in his work. After the lapse of five hundred years even more might have been made of the occasion, and there seems something wanting in a programme confined to sermons in a City church, a conference at the Mansion House, and an evening meeting at Exeter Hall. Even the promise of a statue on the Embankment fails to redeem the confessed shortcoming. It does not suggest the man who for near half a century divided English opinion, hook the whole fabric of the Papacy, denounced the fresh attempts of Rome to back up its old usurpations, and anticipated reforms, some now historical, some still in the uncertain future.

England, indeed, is hardly true to itself in going so little honour to the man whose whole career reflects so much honour on the national character. Wycliffe could never have done what he did had not England been what it was. But for the University, the Monarch, the Princes, the nobles, and even the clergy that stood by Wycliffe, he would have early shared the fate of his contemporary, Huss, and left not even his remains to be burnt by the Council of Constance. He paid no price for this support; he condescended to no delusion or iniquity; he spoke the truth, or what he believed to be such, with a courage that won for him the greatest men of his age. There is no point of the vast controversy between the Roman and Anglican Churches, nay, hardly of that between Rome and all the Protestant communities, that Wycliffe did not enter upon, or in which he did not worthily acquit himself. Finding tradition corrupted, encumbered, divided, and complicated, so that it was, indeed, hard to say what tradition was human and what divine, Wycliffe fell back on Holy Writ. At a time when the language was not only clumsy, but in a very rapid course of change, he translated the whole Bible, retranslating portions of it. The work is now little more than a curiosity, though a very valuable one. We have to consider that it only preceded by three or four generations the translation forming the basis of the present Authorised version, and, no doubt, gave a great impulse to the religious literature as well as the faith of the English people.

The Wycliffe Exhibition at the British Museum shows how much had been done in former ages to present the Scriptures, or select portions, to the English people in their native tongue. What was actually accomplished may seem slight in comparison with that entireness deemed necessary in these days, when everybody has a Bible, even if he never reads a chapter. But everywhere there was the Vulgate, and a much larger proportion of the people familiar with Latin, even in a debased form. The country swarmed with preachers, who made the freest use of sacred history and types. The clergy were quite as political as the Scotch Covenanters, or the English High Churchmen of a later date. Among the MSS. displayed at the Wycliffe Exhibition is a comment on the 105th Psalm, describing the swarm of Frenchmen in the train of Isabella of France as another plague of frogs sent for the sins of this country.

Divided as the clergy and people might be, there was great freedom of speech in those days, and a humble man could easily find a strong man to back him up. Again, the simplicity of the quarrel was much in Wycliffe's favour. The one question over all was that between the Pope and the King; and Wycliffe took the King's side and was what is called a King's man. Wycliffe's war on Roman theology seemed universal and indiscriminate, but that was because Rome so put every part of her doctrine and discipline as to make it depend on Rome for its grace and validity. The exaggeration itself compelled a fundamental inquiry. In the face of all true ecclesiastical tradition, Rome sent armies of Mendicant and Preaching Friars over the land, defying and brow-beating the secular clergy and the old authorities. It was contrary to Wycliffe's personal conviction to dispute that a man might preach, if so disposed, and if occasion required. So he met that move by doing what John Wesley did four centuries after. He sent out preachers, and would have sent an army of them, if they could have been found. He denounced the universal buying and selling of livings and dignities, and, as it was impossible to stop it, he held that such appointments were void in fact, and that he or any other person might enter there, and take possession, as far as was necessary for the saving of souls. There can be no doubt Wycliffe contemplated an entire re-organisation of the English Church, independent of the See of Rome, and on a scriptural rather than traditional foundation.

The English people ought to know more about the man, his life, his times, and his works, published or still waiting publication. No man has suffered more misrepresentation than Wycliffe, whether by friends or by foes. He is almost an unknown personage—certainly unread. His Latin works, intended more for foreigners than for his own countrymen, are only read by scholars. His English works equally require translation into the language of the present day. His history and his arguments require elucidation. It is not known what he said and what he did not say. There is no such monument of a man as his works. We shall be told, perhaps, that there are books enough in the world; but the publication of good books, of a really authentic and historical character, is sometimes the best way to prevent the multiplication of volumes that cannot be so described.

CAUTION.—We are asked to warn advertisers against "a respectable-looking woman" who makes personal application for domestic work for two daughters, in answer to advertisements in our columns. She has on several occasions lately, by false representations, succeeded in getting sums of money out of those on whom she called.

INTOLERANCE IN A WORKHOUSE. — Canon Hoste, the chaplain of the Farnham Workhouse, says The Nonconformist and Independent of last week, felt it his duty to attend the meeting of the Board of Guardians, and complain that a young lady had visited some of the inmates, held religious conversation with them, left tracts, and read the Bible. He thought it very hard that the poor people should be unnecessarily hunted about on religious matters. There was another point upon which he had to complain. He learned that a service was regularly held of which he had no knowledge. The thing resolved itself into this: If the Board could trust him as their chaplain, let them tell him so; if they could not trust him, let them tell him so and he would bid them "good morning." A somewhat heated discussion followed, and the master was called in, who explained that as to the service, he had given permission to a few old men to meet together in a certain room and read and talk over the Bible together. One would think this most commendable, but the sapient Board of Guardians decided that such a meeting could not be permitted, nor could any person be allowed to visit for any religious purpose. Against this Mr. Sears and Major-General Smyth protested most strongly, the latter gentleman saying he had been connected fifty years with the army and he had never heard of anything equal to it. Surely intolerance could no further go.

Times of Refreshing.

BULLS, NEW ZEALAND.

ANSWERS to prayer truly are all around us; living answers; dry bones have moved—bone to bone. The breath has come, and we see a small army of new spirits—spirits born of God—joyous, happy spirits. Even in a large town such a work as we see around us would shake the town and awaken saints and sinners.

This is an earthquake in a small place, and we hear that the whole district is amazed at the commotion in little Bulls; the larger townships send many on-lookers to the meetings every night.

In July last we returned to this place from Dunedin, and it did appear as if God had prepared the people to hear.

The women's prayer-meeting was a great success; many came. True prayer and faith in God were in some hearts, although others said, "In a small place so cold you cannot expect much." The old converts, however, never failed in faith. The numbers were not sufficient to require a chapel. The men held prayer-meetings in private houses, and it was resolved to ask the Salvation Army to send help from Wellington. They sent a warm old Wesleyan, Sergeant Hildreth.

The first meeting in a private house moved one young girl; the next convert in a chapel was an educated young lady. Others followed, and among young men a great work began—sometimes three in an evening, then five, six, eight, and so on. One meeting found fifteen at the "penitent form," and at a time when the Salvation Army officer was absent, my own faith in the "form" was weak, and I could not invite them very freely to move except to Christ; nevertheless, up they came to the front and kneeled down—young men, old men, and matrons, people known to us as almost Gospel-hardened or public-house lovers.

The report is that after two months' work we have more than half the young men of the place—some say two-thirds of the young men—and they are a bold, joyous band. The Army certainly encourage happy Christians, and if they had only food to keep up this high-bred enjoyment they would be worthy of still higher praise. Godly, earnest pastors need never fear the operations of the Army; on the contrary, they will, I believe, willingly or unwillingly, send forth most blessed lambs that they can by no manner of means feed or maintain. If churches stand aloof they simply commit suicide and drive the lambs into the wilderness to wander about, get wounded and starved, and take up every spiritual disease that is to be found. In large cities the Army will exist for years to come, but in small towns they will in one year find their practical work done.

LANCASHIRE BIBLE-CARRIAGE.—A report of the work carried on in connection with this agency states that it has proved to be of great service in scattering the good seed of the Kingdom at fairs, watering-places, &c. Crowds gathered around, to whom the Gospel was faithfully preached by various qualified evangelists. A suitable man is greatly needed to conduct the evangelistic part of the work. Communications may be made to Mr. J. Mercer, 29, Queen's-road, Southport.

ENGLISHMEN IN ALEXANDRIA.—Dear Sir,—In consequence of repeated appeals from Alexandria, I despatched one of my most trusted helpers to see if an Institute and Mission Hall for soldiers, sailors, and English working men could be established there. To-day I have had letters which have decided me to go forward with the scheme. The English Consul, the port captain, and others have most kindly helped my representative in his investigations, and he has found a suitable site, which I shall empower him to secure without delay. From among the band of Christian ladies helping me here, two will be chosen for that work, and I ask the prayers of your readers for God's blessing and guidance. I trust those able to help with money will feel it a pleasure to do so, as a large sum will be needed.—Faithfully yours,

Sarah Robinson.

YOUNG MEN AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

ONE of the latest and grandest outcomes of the London Y.M.C.A. is the Foreign Missionary Society, founded about a year ago in connection with the Aldersgate-street branch. We have from time to time noted the gratifying progress of the young institution. It is now a pleasant task to record the holding of the first anniversary of the Society at Aldersgate-street on Friday evening last There was an excellent muster, chiefly made up of young people of both sexes. As we entered the room Mr. Robert Burn was earnestly praying that some young men in the meeting whose future was not fixed, and some young maidens who were perfectly free to follow the leadings of God's Spirit, might that night receive such impulses as would cause them to consecrate their lives to the glorious task of spreading the Gospel among the heathen.

Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS, most genial and happy of chairmen, in some introductory words, said this was not another new missionary society, but a new feeder of the existing organisations. It aimed at helping young men through the initial stages of their earnest struggle to equip themselves for the missionary field.

The brief report read by Mr. Hall, the enthusiastic secretary, proved that the young institution has already more than vindicated its existence. During the year four young men from its ranks have gone forth to distant lands, to labour for God and for souls. Six others are now in training for the field, while many more are waiting for the way to open up. A reference was made to Rev. G. Piercy's efforts among Chinamen in the East-end; several young natives of far Cathay were present, among them one who has lately been baptized by Mr. Piercy.

Quite a galaxy of returned missionaries and others interested in the good cause surrounded the chairman. The first of these friends to favour us with five minutes' speeches was Rev. D. BRODIE, of the British and Foreign Society, who referred to the recent letter in the Standard, asserting that there were no converts from Mohammedanism in Palestine. He said that Missions to Mohammedans living under British rule were one thing, and Missions to Mohammedans under Mohammedan rule are a very different thing indeed. Under the former conditions such Missions were, he asserted, a glorious success. On the other hand, the avowal of Christianity in any country under Mohammedan government was certain death to the convert: this would account for the paucity of results in the latter case. The British and Foreign Bible Society was doing a grand work in these Mohammedan countries, by scattering the good seed of the Word.

Next came Rev. J. B. GRIBBLE, who framed a heavy indictment against Englishmen for their unjust treatment of the Australian aborigines among whom it is his privilege to labour. Still the Gospel was beginning to tell on these degraded people. He wanted to take back with him three brothers and two sisters to help in the working of a new Mission on the coast.

Hailing from the sacred city of Benares, in India, which is up to this day "wholly given up to idolatry," Rev. G. M. BULLOCK said he was going back in the autumn, and would like to take not three, but a shipload of young men with him to act as "spiritual masons" in pulling down the hoary piles of heathendom, and rearing the fair edifice of Christianity. In the province of Benares alone there are ten millions of people, and only fourteen men to tell them of the love of God in Christ.

Passing from vast India to vaster China, we had Mr. J. W. STEVENSON, who gave cheering news of the power of the Gospel in breaking down the antiquated superstitions of that wonderful people. One very touching case he related as showing how many up and down the land are groping their painful way in heathen darkness, because no one is there to hold up the light. If a shipload of missionaries were needed for India, ten shiploads were needed for poor China.

Missionary labour among the heathen, said Rev. J. SMITH, of Delhi, is the happiest work that any man can engage in. Speaking of India, where he had worked for over forty years, he asserted that England, despite all the faults of her government of India, had done more for that land than any one nation had done for another. In India, where ancient systems of religion had struck their roots deep into the soil, the great battle of Christian Missions must be fought out.

Good Deacon ABRAHAM, from Ooromiah, who had arrived in England a week before, came next, and greatly interested the meeting, as he told, in somewhat broken English, but with great simplicity and earnestness, of the Lord's dealings with himself, and the blessing that had rested on his work among the Nestorian orphans.

Yet further, we had brief reports from Rev. H. DUNCAN about Gospel work among the seventeen millions of Roman Catholics in Spain; from Capt. POULDEN, who gave some words of cheer and encouragement to any young men going forth as missionaries to South America; from Mr. E H. GLENNY, who reported on the work of the Kabyle Mission; and from Mr. JOHNSON, about work among his coloured countrymen in East Africa.

A Good Work at Southall.

TWO years ago, my father gave me the use of his barn for Gospel services, I promising to try and collect sufficient money to defray the expenses of fitting up, seating, &c. It cost £60, and I have only £31 10s. at present, besides which there is the constant expense of gas, coal, and bill printing. The Evangelisation Society send preachers every Monday, and we have very blessed meetings, which are attended by many who never used to attend any place of worship. In consequence of heavy losses we fear the services will have to be discontinued, unless we receive help; they are well attended, and have proved a great blessing to many. The barn was my spiritual birthplace, and that of several now working for the Lord. My mother, sisters and I have over 100 children and lads in our classes (the waifs and strays from the brickfields). Most of the children are taught in our kitchen and the barn, besides which we have a small room in the brickfield, kindly lent us for the pu pose.

We are also desirous of getting a Temperance cart. We have long felt what a boon it would be to have non-intoxicating drinks taken round to the men at work in the fields. Many say it is almost impossible to abstain from taking beer, their thirst is so great, and they can seldom get anything else. I am particularly anxious to supply this want at the present time, as several of the young men in my class have been brought to God during the last nine months; they meet here every evening for reading, or singing, and Bible-class, either in the kitchen, drawing-room, or barn. Several have also been converted through attending some of Mr. Moody's services at Adison-road; some were so anxious to hear, they walked there—quite eight miles. Many of these lads have been total abstainers for some months, but told me last week they fear they cannot work without beer much longer. They say if they could obtain lemonade, milk, oatmeal-water, cocoa, &c., as easily as beer, they and many others would much prefer it. I have now promised, if they will, with God's help, try to do without it a little longer, we will see what can be done. I think £50 would clear the barn from debt, so that the Gospel services might be continued, and purchase a Temperance cart, donkey, and tins; two carts are really needed, the fields are so widely scattered.—Yours truly,

The Green, Southall. HENRIETTA J. BAXTER.

TO TOTAL ABSTAINERS.—A correspondent desires us to publish the following, as forming a successful substitute for brandy for medicinal purposes: Tincture of ginger—strong—aromatic spirits of ammonia, sal volatile, chloric æther; equal parts of each. In faintness, spasm of stomach, diarrhœa, or sudden pain, one large teaspoonful, in one tablespoonful of hot or cold water, may be taken, and repeated every quarter or half hour until relieved. To be kept in a well-stopped bottle.

Nothing to Give.

"NOTHING to give!" said the rich man bold,
As he hastened on in the bitter cold,
While so closely wrapped was his stately form,
That he heeded not the driving storm.
"Nothing to give!" and a wailing cry
Went up to God as the blast swept by.

"Nothing to give!" said a lady fair,
While jewels gleamed in her raven hair,
And the Eastern looms their skill had brought
For her gorgeous robes in beauty wrought.
"Nothing to give!"—and a shivering form
Went sadly forth 'mid the raging storm.

"Nothing to give!" said a maiden gay,
As she lightly sped on her joyous way,
And thoughtlessly turned from the pleading face,
Where famine and want their impress trace.
"Nothing to give!"—and wild despair
Is mingled now with the pleader's prayer.

"Nothing to give!" said a bright-eyed boy,
Of his princely home the pride and joy;
"Your clothes are ragged, your eyes are wild,
So go away, little beggar child."
"Nothing to give!"—and the naked feet
Go pattering on 'mid the frozen sleet.

"Nothing to give!"—be it not our cry,
Whenever we list to the pleading sigh,
But with generous heart and open hand,
May we gladly aid earth's suffering band—
Something to give, be it ever so small,
Something to give when the needy call.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

THE Conversazione of the Evangelical Alliance, held at the Mansion House on the evening of 20th inst., was of an exceptionally interesting character. Nearly all the countries constituting Christendom were represented, with others, such as China and Japan, who are becoming candidates for admission. The assemblage entirely filled the Egyptian Hall, but we may not attempt to name the many leaders of every branch of Christian work who were present.

The LORD MAYOR, in welcoming the Alliance to the Mansion House, pointed to the important position it occupied. Many associations were now laying before the Christian world their special work, and among these he would give the Alliance, with its comprehensive programme, a first place. It was essential that it should be shown how largely Christians all over the world were agreed, and how small were the matters on which they were agreed to differ.

Rev. Canon FLEMING, who said it was more than twenty years since he had joined the Alliance, claimed as its great object the manifestation of the union which exists amongst the true disciples of Christ. By fraternal and devotional intercourse, such as that which had called them together, the union was promoted, while its strength was shown by the efforts made to counteract Infidelity, Romanism, and the desecration of the Lord's day.

While speech-making was not the main intention of the gathering, there was much satisfaction in hearing the voice of Signor Tron, the delegate from the Italian churches, and better known as the representative of the Waldensian Church in Italy. Dr. Schaff of New York, also gave a short address, and the Hon. Secretary followed, giving information with regard to the Conference of the Alliance to be held at Copenhagen during the first week in September.

The Canadian Jubilee singers sang an admirable selection of their well-known melodies. The interests of this useful institution, and so of the cause of Christian union which it aims to promote, cannot but be greatly served by an occasion so kindly conceived and so happily carried out.

THE REVIVAL IN LONDON.

The Croydon Mission.

DAY by day the gatherings have increased, both in attendance and interest; in many hearts has the good seed taken root to bring forth fruit that will never be fully known until the great harvest day.

The afternoon Bible lectures last week were upon the Atonement, the Resurrection, the Second Coming of Christ, and the Good Shepherd. The numbers who have been daily found seeking the way of salvation, have afforded good evidence that the word has been with power. It is, perhaps, remarkable that not a few of these had already accepted Christ, but were desirous of knowing more, and finding strength and encouragement in their faith. A young man was asked why he remained behind, and he replied, "Oh, I cannot read the Word myself, and so I like to get all I can from people coming to talk with me."

This last week of the Mission has been well taken advantage of as regards attendance, and on two or three evenings overflow meetings have been held in the Rink, conducted by Major Whittle, Ned Wright, and others. At one of these Mr. Wright related an incident that occurred at the Hampstead Mission. A man living at Harlesden came with his wife to hear Mr. Moody, and was brought under deep conviction of sin. While at the station waiting for the train to go home he was strongly impressed with the thought, "If any accident should happen, where shall I spend eternity?" Filled with alarm, he walked home rather than run the risk. On his way he lifted up his heart to God for the pardon of his sins, and before he reached his home the Lord spoke the word of peace to his soul.

Another striking case is that of a young man at Croydon who, while in a situation, had habitually had recourse to his master's till. Impressed by Mr. Moody's preaching, he could not find peace until he had confessed his sin and made restitution in full to his employer.

On the three Saturday afternoons special services for young people have been conducted by Messrs. Jordan, Hutchinson, Coote, and Standen. The evenings have been occupied by Mr. Robert Simpson, in the formation and organisation of a Mizpah Band. A good number have joined the Band as helpers and helped, in the fight against the temptations of drink. Some very stirring testimonies have been given on these occasions by men who have felt the enslaving power of this destroyer of mankind.

On Monday afternoons a prayer-meeting for mothers has been held by Mrs. Buller and Mrs. Fagg. Mr. Moody has reserved that afternoon for much-needed rest. On Friday the usual supplications for "Our children" were attended with results as interesting and encouraging as upon previous occasions. A male choir has been formed by Mr. McGranahan, which will help to carry on the work in connection with the ordinary mixed choir under the conduct of Mr. Ebenezer Carr.

The thousands who attended last Sunday morning's meeting for Christian workers were well repaid for their extra exertion put forth in order to secure this early meal. It was a grand beginning for the closing day of the Mission. Mr. Moody's address on "The study of the Bible" was one that has been heard by many a crowded audience in the great city, and is well worth listening to over and over again. It is full of practical suggestions, that if followed out must be of invaluable help and blessing to the Bible student.

The eleven o'clock service for non-church and chapel-goers was well attended, and the afternoon service for women was again crowded. At the evening service for men, Mr. Moody commenced his address by saying it was not his object to preach on that occasion, but to answer the question, "What must I do to be saved?" Such Bible illustrations as "The Ark," "The Brazen Serpent," and others, were skilfully used in illustrating the simplicity and completeness of the salvation God has provided. The eager attention of the vast crowd was delightful to witness, and a large number waited behind for the after-meeting.

For the many hundreds who could not gain admission to the evening service, a crowded overflow-meeting was held at the Skating Rink close by. Mr. Henry Varley conducted the service. "The power of the Lord was present to heal," as many testified at the after-meeting.

The "final farewell" at Croydon was held on Monday evening, but a report of this must be withheld till our next issue, as also the opening services at the Thames Embankment.

Messrs. Pentecost and Stebbins.

Dr. Pentecost's afternoon Bible lectures at Eccleston-street Hall last week were on "Coming out of Egypt," and on each evening his subject was "Forgiveness of Sins." Day by day the interest seemed to deepen and the work of God to prosper, and increasing numbers publicly asked for prayer or rose to confess Christ as their Saviour.

On Sunday evening a never-to-be-forgotten meeting brought the Mission to a close. The hall was densely crowded by an eager audience, and numbers who were unable to obtain admission remained in the rooms adjoining, though scarcely within sound of the preacher's voice. Mr. Stebbins sang with more than usual feeling his favourite hymns, "Along the river of time we glide," and "The clanging bells of time." Then, after prayer by Rev. J. Bennett, of Park Chapel, Chelsea, Dr. Pentecost gave an address on "The Precious Blood of Christ." Just as the cultured ear of a highly-trained musician is hard to satisfy, so the soul that has learned deep lessons of the grace and love of God, and the wonderfulness of his salvation, is keenly sensible of the poverty of human thoughts and human words on such a theme. But seldom have we been privileged to hear an address that went so far as this to satisfy the highest aspirations of the heart. Rich in doctrine and appeal, and warning and anecdote, it was redolent of the "preciousness" which the Word declares is the believer's portion.

As wave after wave of conviction or emotion passed over the audience, all were conscious of a power beyond the power of man. When the congregation was dismissed, the seats vacated by those who left were again filled up by the valiant occupants of the ante-rooms. At the close of the after-meeting addresses many publicly confessed Christ in presence of the crowded meeting. One plants, another waters; God gives the increase. We praise Him for the increase. We praise Him, too, for such ministry as this, the preaching by which He is pleased to save them that believe.

As already said, the Mission is practically closed, for Dr. Pentecost is called away to follow up Mr. Moody's work at Croydon, where he preaches nightly during the current week. But the good work at Eccleston Hall is not to cease. Dr. Pentecost will continue the afternoon Bible lectures until Friday, 30th inclusive, taking as his subject the parables of Matthew xiii.; evening meetings will be held throughout the week by Lord Radstock, assisted by Captain Baring, Mr. Charles Inglis, and others.

Young Women in Pimlico.

On Wednesday evening last week at Eccleston Hall, Dr. Pentecost, at the close of the first meeting, addressed a number of the young ladies employed in the shops of Pimlico and the surrounding neighbourhood. In the earlier part of the service, Mr. Stebbins sang "The Eleventh Hour" and "My Refuge." The words of the latter were written by a young Indian girl of high caste, who was sent to this country for her education. Here she found Christ, and this hymn is one of many she has laid as a tribute of love at the Master's feet. Mr. Stebbins has set it to a very lovely melody. Dr. Pentecost's subject for the evening was "Ruth." This Bible story, he said, is one of the most beautiful in the world. If read carefully, on the knees, and with the heart open to God, it may certainly teach us wonderful things. In giving a short résumé of the leading facts of this book, he said that if we take Boaz for Christ and Ruth for the sinner, this beautiful story is at once linked with the still more beautiful story of the Redemption.

He proceeded to draw some practical lessons from the narrative. When Ruth came, a strange girl, into a strange city, she first of all attached herself to a religious woman, one who served the Lord: Naomi stands for religion. The speaker applied this in a deeply sympathetic way to the many young women before him, entreating them to do as Ruth did, and not to be as Orpah, turning aside to the world of sin surrounding them. Ruth had great decision of character, and knowing all her own surroundings to be ungodly, she clung persistently to and cast in her lot with God's people. We can well imagine what would have become of Ruth had she been like Orpah, of whom we hear no more. There are hundreds of young women who have had opportunities and neglected them—they have thus fallen out of the sight of the world, and are lost. Ruth made no conditions in her choice. "Where you live, I live; where you die, I die." What did Paul say? "I have learned, in whatever state I am, therewith to be content." Go to any of the many splendid assemblies in the homes of the great, held in the city of London to-night, and take the fairest, richest, most courted woman of them all, and ask her if she is content with this. If she is honest she will tell you "No!" Jewels, money, dress, beauty, attention, do not bring peace. Only the one whose hope is in Jesus has found out, with Paul, the secret of content.

In closing, the preacher earnestly entreated his fair auditors to be on the Lord's side. About twenty responded to this appeal for a confession of soul anxiety, taking their seats in the front, and boldly declaring their desire to serve and follow Christ.

Major Whittle's Farewell to Woolwich.

By the reports which we have given of the meetings conducted by Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan at Woolwich, our readers know how largely they were blessed, and how numerous were the individual cases of conversion which came under notice. But the general reader may not know how carefully converts are looked after, and how the touch is kept until each has been brought under some faithful ministry, and into Christian communion.

It was, therefore, with much satisfaction that the agents in this work found Major Whittle had a spare evening before his departure, and that he was willing to spend it in coming face to face with the new converts, to encourage them in their Christian life, and to give them such counsel as would be useful to them in trials and temptations.

On Friday evening last this meeting took place in the hall of the Duke of Connaught Coffee Palace, and the place was packed to its utmost capacity. Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan were unable to be present, but their friends of the Woolwich Male Choir were excellent substitutes. From the faces of the audience it could be seen what a joyous feeling filled their hearts, and that it deserved Major Whittle's description—"a very happy meeting." A short time was spent by friends on the platform giving three minute addresses based on personal experience, on "Helps in the Christian life." This proved to be a most useful procedure.

Major Whittle's address was on Christian service, under the following divisions—enlistment equipment, instruction, employment, and promotion. He told how, twenty years ago, when Mr. Moody and he were associated in Christian work in Chicago, they were going home together one night much disheartened by the want of spirituality around them. Mr. Moody stopped short under a lamp-post, saying, "No matter; here are our orders plain enough," and read from 2 Tim. iv. 12. He had never forgotten that night; the verses took hold of him so that they had been a mainspring of power to him ever since. The closing words were addressed to any present who had not yet accepted salvation, and at the singing of the hymn, in answer to invitations, many rose to indicate their surrender to the power of the Word.

Then, after much prayer, commending each other to God's keeping, there were many farewells, and the happy meeting was brought to a close.

It was announced that a copy of Major Whittle's new book, LIFE, WARFARE, VICTORY, would be sent to all converts who had given their addresses, of whom, we understand, there are from four to five hundred.

The Embankment Mission.

A large meeting of the Committee and friends, including many lady workers, was held under Mr. Moody's presidency on Monday afternoon.

Mr. J. H. TRITTON stated what had been done in preparation for the work, after which many suggestions were made as to reaching particular classes, high and low, and as to the large overflows which by some well-informed friends were confidently expected.

The greatest unanimity and brotherly kindness were manifested in this meeting, representing Christians of all denominations and all ranks.

The Training Hospital at Tottenham.

THE well-known institution at Tottenham, over which Dr. Laseron presides, has found so much work laid upon it that its premises have proved much too strait for the increasing demands. With the growth of Tottenham there has been a much greater call for hospital accommodation, and the forty beds of the institution have been quite inadequate for the needs of the neighbourhood. A goodly assembly met on Wednesday last week, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, to celebrate the annual meeting and to lay the foundation-stone of an important addition to the buildings.

Dr. Laseron stated that the demand for nurses, both in hospitals and private families, steadily increases, so that it is impossible to meet it. There are thirty-nine nurses in the parent institution at present, while twenty-four are engaged at nursing at out-stations.

Rev. Dr. Bevan expressed his deep sympathy with the objects of the institution. It brought Christian sympathy and the highest medical skill to work together for the highest purposes. It was a happy union, and great good had resulted from it. Striking testimony was given by Mr. S. Bewley, from Dublin, of the value of the work carried on there in the union by nurses from the institution; he was followed by Rev. R. Waters, rector of Sunderland, who testified to the efficiency of the nursing in the infirmary of that town, where eighteen nurses were engaged, all of whom had been trained at Tottenham. Within his personal experience, their spiritual ministrations had been the cause of much blessing to persons in the infirmary. Rev. E. J. Bevan and Rev. W. L. Watkinson also contributed their quota to the speech-making.

PENNY DINNERS FOR SCHOOL CHILDREN.

IN an article on this subject which appeared in the Pall Mall Gazette of 17th instant, Mr. Benjamin Clarke says:—

"Besides the objection urged by some that the distribution of dinners without any charge does more harm than good, there remains the more serious one that dinners so given are necessarily dependent on private generosity, which may not always be easily evoked. Some gentlemen interested in the subject and acquainted with Sir H. Peek's successful plan of distributing penny dinners to school children at a village in Dorsetshire, on a basis that may be said to be practically self-supporting, were anxious to see how far the experiment might be repeated in London. Mr. S. D. Fuller, of Bayswater, consulted Miss Octavia Hill and Mr. Marchmont Williams, Inspector of the London School Board, who encouraged him in the enterprise, and advised him to make a beginning in the neighbourhood of Gifford-street Board School. At the suggestion of the head master of that school, Mr. Bennett Williams, Mr. Fuller put himself in communication with the authorities of the Gifford Hall Mission, situated nearly opposite the Board school, and which possessed facilities for preparing and distributing the dinners. All that the Mission was asked to provide free was the use of its rooms and some of its utensils, and of course its copper; the service of the caretaker and her assistants, and fuel, were to be paid for out of the children's pence.

"How to provide a tasty and a nutritious dinner for one penny was the problem. The composition of a proposed soup, a stew, and a broth was submitted to Dr. Richardson, F.R.S., who either approved them at once, as forming a sufficiently nutritious dinner for young children, or else suggested the addition of certain ingredients to make them so. We began on a Tuesday, notice having been given out at the Board school on the previous Monday. The children were told to purchase their tickets in the morning on their way to school. This furnished the exact number to provide for, so that there might be no waste—an important consideration at any time, but an indispensable one here, where the dinners were not to cost more than the amounts paid for them. After a trial or two, it was seen that the dinners were appreciated, and we fell into a system that assured excellent dinners at a minimum of cost. Parents are grateful, the teachers at the Board school are pleased that some of their poorer scholars are now better fitted for their school duties, and the friends of the Mission rejoice that so easy and unobjectionable a plan for relieving some of the distress that confronts them has been set on foot. It is only right to say that Mr. Fuller, at this early stage, only looks upon the effort as an experimental one; but he will be happy to furnish particulars to any who desire to attempt something in the same direction. His address is 85, Inverness-terrace, W."

FRENCH IN LONDON.—Last week, in the Riding School, Knightsbridge, the Earl of Shaftesbury opened a bazaar in aid of the Mission to the French in London, under the superintendence of M. le Pasteur du Pontet de la Harpe. This work is carried out by the various agencies of church services, day and infant school, Sunday school, dispensary, governesses' home, governesses' agency, tutors' agency, registry office for servants, reading rooms, youths' and young men's club, Bible-class, penny bank, Mission to shop girls, lending library. His lordship delivered a brief address, in which he expressed his high opinion of such institutions, as the very best Channel scheme that could connect England and France. These formed a means of international communication between the two countries, which would prove advantageous to the two nations primarily concerned, but indirectly to the world at large. The institution was doing a good work, and he heartily commended it.

The North Sea Fishermen.

ANOTHER step was taken in furtherance of the good work going on amongst fishermen in the North Sea, on Saturday last, by the dedication of the Edward Auriol. This will be the fourth Mission smack sent out to the North Sea under the auspices of the Thames Church Mission. She will be the largest. Her interior is specially fitted up for evangelistic work, and will be capable of seating a congregation of somewhere about 200 men. The comfort and convenience of missionaries and others visiting the fishermen have been carefully studied, and there are many arrangements added, which are not generally found in vessels of this size. There are berths also in a separate compartment for the accommodation of two ladies, should any who possess the necessary qualifications have it laid upon their hearts to share in this noble work.

The dedication service was conducted by Bishop Tozer, as a substitute for the Bishop of London. In the absence of Mr. Mather, the secretary, through temporary illness, Mr. Dashwood, one of the owners, gave an interesting sketch of the work. At the close of the service on deck a prayer-meeting was held below, in which the crew and several visitors who remained heartily joined.

It may be well to explain that these Mission smacks trawl in the ordinary way (Sundays excepted) in order to cover their working expenses. But there are many expenses incidental to the Gospel work and other humane efforts, which have to be borne by the Thames Church Mission. For this it was found necessary to open a special fund, which it is earnestly hoped may be well supported, so that this most valuable service may not be crippled for want of practical sympathy.

Captain Barnes, for over thirty years a North Sea fisherman, and Captain Jones, late of the Ensign, but who now goes out as skipper of the Edward Auriol, gave deeply-interesting testimonies of the way the Lord is using the Mission smacks now afloat. It was stated that several of the wildest and most intemperate men amongst those visited have been won for Christ, and are now working for Him.

Warm cuffs and comforters are always acceptable; so also are books and periodicals. The secretary will at all times be glad to supply information and forward patterns if necessary. The address of the Mission is 31, New Bridge-street, Ludgate-circus, E.C. The Edward Auriol will remain at her present moorings, off the Custom House, a few days longer, for the inspection of visitors interested in Gospel work amongst our deep-sea fishermen.

AMONG THE KAFFIRS.—Friends who are interested in the Rock Fountain Mission to Kaffirs will be glad to hear that George Angus is now at Hope-vale, the site which I bought and named about a year before he came. A few weeks after his arrival he went with me, the English youth, and three Kaffirs, to begin operations. Just before Mr. Angus came, I built part of a stone house at Eluxolweni, the out-station to the south-east of Rock Fountain. We shall gladly place a native evangelist and schoolmaster there as soon as we are in a position to support one. While thanking friends for their kindness to Mr. Angus, and their continued interest in the work here, we would ask their earnest prayers for a spiritual blessing on our united labours. ELBERT S. CLARKE.

Rock Fountain Mission, Hope, Natal.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.—A meeting on behalf of this Society was held on Tuesday afternoon last week, in the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park. Mr. Samuel B. Power, who presided, advocated the claims of the work because of its non-controversial character. Rev. James Ormiston said that the Society sowed the seed of the Word broadcast among the people. He was informed that since the Irish Church was disestablished, there were 550 fewer clergymen than forty years ago, whilst there were 3363 Roman Catholic priests in 1881, as compared with 2156 then. A well-informed newspaper stated that the Roman Catholics had spent £5,650,000 in Ireland within the last eighteen years. The meeting was afterwards addressed by Mr. R. C. Morgan, Lord Bangor, one of the Scripture readers from Ireland, Colonel Brooke, and Captain Kearney White, the secretary.

Notes and Comments.

WE are asked to state that the tickets for reserved seats at the forthcoming Mildmay Conference have all been issued.

The movement for some manifestation of organic union among the Protestant churches in Italy makes very satisfactory progress. At a recent Conference in Florence it was unanimously agreed by the assembled delegates that this union was not only desirable but attainable. Arrangements were put in train for the holding of an Italian Evangelical Congress.

The Presbyterian dwellers in Belfast are setting their houses in order so as to receive with befitting hospitality the delegates to the Pan-Presbyterian Council which meets in their city on June 24. The largest contingent will come from the United States, where Presbyterianism is strong. The conclave is expected to be one of interest and usefulness.

In a recent interview with a representative of the Pall Mall Gazette, Mr. Bentley, of the Baptist Mission to the Congo region, uttered a very strenuous protest against the ratification of the treaty which our Government is said to have made with the Portuguese. The extension of Portuguese sovereignty, he declared, would be an unmitigated evil.

"We only know the Portuguese official as an insufferable nuisance, imposing all manner of burdens upon business, and using, or rather abusing, his influence in favour of the Roman Catholic religion. At this moment we have to struggle hard to hold our own in San Salvador, where the Portuguese priests are constantly endeavouring to persuade the native King to banish the Protestant missionaries, the usual threat being that if he did not do what the priests told him, they would send for the Portuguese soldiers, who would make him do what they wanted. The Portuguese priests are by no means perfect in these parts, either in private morals or in the methods of their propaganda. One of them recently much disturbed the native mind by declaring that he would poison the King if the latter did not send the Protestant missionaries out of the country. If this is done in an independent country, where the Portuguese have no local authority, you may imagine what will happen should Parliament ratify the Congo treaty, and hand over the Bas-Congos and their independent neighbours to the yoke of Portugal."

Another potent argument against the proposed treaty, in Mr. Bentley's mind, is the fact that it would subject British traders to a heavy and unnecessary burden. He calculates that in many cases the tariff that would be imposed will amount to 30 to 40 per cent. On the Baptist Missionary Society, which last year spent £8000 in support of its Missions on the Congo river, the new treaty, he asserted, would involve an annual tax of £3000.

The British and Foreign School Society still has a mission, and spite of the wide extension of the system of national education is enlarging its sphere of operation. A new college for training teachers for infant schools on the Kindergarten system has just been opened under the auspices of the Society at Saffron Walden, Essex. The building cost upwards of £10,000, and has been erected at the expense of Mr. George Stacey Gibson. The Society has done so much valuable and effective work in the cause of voluntary and religious education that it is gratifying to see its efforts still called for, and thus liberally sustained.

A correspondent writes to say that no adequate and organised effort has yet been made to promote the spiritual well-being of the members of the London Fire Brigade.

It is announced that Dr. Temple, the Bishop of Exeter, is to succeed the late Mr. Samuel Bowly as President of the National Temperance League. The acceptance of this appointment by his lordship cannot fail to be a great gain to the society, on account of his indefatigable zeal and marked ability in the promotion of any cause he undertakes.

The appointment of the Rev. Canon Boyd-Carpenter to the Bishopric of Ripon, rendered vacant by the death of Dr. Bickersteth, will be regarded by most people with satisfaction. He has worthily held several high offices in the Church to which he belongs, and by his contributions to theological literature is well known as a man of great ability and extensive resource. He is in the 48rd year of his age, and the 20th of his ministry.

It is to be deeply regretted that the arbitrament of affairs between France and China does not seem to be extending to the relations of the former country with Madagascar. Latest news indicates an increase of armaments for employment in connection with French policy in the island, rather than the suspension of hostilities. Fairly dealt with, and let alone as to internal political arrangements, a bright future is before the Malagasy: disturbed and coerced by foreign invasion and threats, every good influence is restrained, and moral and social advancement obstructed.

The Wycliffe Commemoration meetings of last week were possessed of several features of special interest. The unity to which they gave rise between leading members of the various churches was very encouraging, as were also the outspoken views in favour of the principles for which the bold Reformer contended—which, as Professor Burrows remarked, are the living, real and practical principles of to-day. The need for their intelligent exposition and firm advocacy is wider and deeper than many suppose. Efforts to lead men back to mediæval sacerdotalism and superstitious regard for outward ceremonial are very bold and subtle in these times, and we cannot be too zealous in upholding against all gainsayers the spiritual equality of all believers as priests unto God and the Father, as well as the all-sufficiency and authority of Holy Scripture as the guide of individual conscience.

The Nonconformist and Independent, referring to the discussion on the London poor at the Congregational Union, says:—"We are confronted with the fact that there are members of churches who either deny or doubt that spiritual motive power has any place in the region of trade or manufactures, in which it is contended the inexorable laws of political economy are alone operative." A typical case is given, in which the writer heard a business man say, when asked to take a humane view of a certain transaction, "I know nothing of philanthropy in business." In proportion as such sentiments prevail in churches, in like proportion will the essential principles of Christianity be ignored also. A religion which fails to mould the action of its professors in accordance with universal righteousness is not of Him who said, "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

A circular has lately been sent on behalf of the Early Closing Association to a large number of clergy and ministers of various denominations in the metropolis, soliciting their aid in abolishing the present practice of late shopping. This practice is unnecessary in a vast majority of cases, and is the means of inflicting great hardships and privations upon the shop assistants.

At Cambridge, last Saturday, Prince Albert Victor, eldest son of the Prince of Wales, made an excellent start in his career as a public speaker. He took part in a meeting for the furtherance of a Universities' Mission in the East end of London. It is a happy omen when one occupying the high social position of the young prince shows a personal interest in such undertakings. On the same day the English Princess Royal and Crown Princess of Germany laid the foundation-stone of an English Church at Berlin.

The general assemblies of the Established and Free Churches of Scotland are both in session at the present time. The Earl of Aberdeen is acting as Lord High Commissioner, and Dr. Mackenzie, of Ferintosh, as Moderator, in the former; while Dr. Walter Ross Taylor, of Thurso, is the Moderator in the Free Church. These anniversaries will not be marked by any very stirring discussions. The financial reports of the latter are of a most prosperous character, showing an increase of £47,000 over the income of the previous year. Her Majesty has renewed her gift of £2000 to the Established Assembly for the advancement of religious knowledge in the Highlands, appending a recommendation that part of it be devoted to providing ministrations in the Gaelic language.

The United Presbyterian Synod this year has derived fresh interest from the fact that it has had to celebrate the third jubilee of its formation as a distinct branch of the Christian Church. The attendance of ministers and elders at the Session has been the largest yet secured, and the returns from the presbyteries very satisfactory. A theological lecture similar to the Baird and Cunningham lectures in other Scotch churches is to be established, and signs of renewed vitality appear to be manifest in various directions. The temperance proclivities of this community are evidently strong and vigorous. A motion was made, though lost, that all sellers of intoxicants as a beverage should be excluded from membership. Faithful discipline was urged in all cases where they were proved to have been sold to drunkards.

The following paragraph is from The Indian Witness of April 26:—

"A formal invitation has been sent both by the Missionary Conference and the Evangelical Ministers of Calcutta to Messrs. Moody and Sankey, asking them to visit India at the earliest practicable date. We are not aware that any information has been received which makes it probable that the invitation will be accepted, but we notice that very many earnest Christians seem strong in the faith and hope that the great Evangelists can be persuaded to devote at least one season to India, and we are assured that no effort will be spared to induce them to do so. That they would stir our great cities as they have never been stirred before is more than probable, and even if they should not succeed in breaking the ranks of the non-Christian population they would make a deep impression upon a very important class of young men, while the awakening and conversion of worldly and irreligious Europeans would make a profound impression upon all classes."

Fifty years ago the English Parliament passed an Act decreeing the emancipation of the slaves in all the colonies of Great Britain. To celebrate this great event, a public meeting will be held at the Mansion House on August 1, the fiftieth anniversary of the day on which the Emancipation Act became law in the British Colonies.

We learn with the deepest regret that Mrs. Evered Poole is, for the present at least, quite laid aside from work of any kind, in consequence of a serious affection of the eyes. There is no organic disease, but she is suffering from severe over-pressure of brain and nerves, and perfect rest is absolutely necessary to recovery.

No fewer than 943 in-patients, and 14,700 out-door, were treated and furnished with medicine and advice last year at the Hospita. for Sick Children in Great Ormond-streetl The annual report just read gives a total number of 20,650 indoor, and 363,284 outdoor cases relieved since the opening of the institution in 1852. The incessant and increasing need for the charity afforded by this hospital makes it eminently desirable that the new wing, to accommodate eighty more children, should soon become an accomplished fact. Suffering childhood has a special claim on human sympathy.

The question, "Is there a God?" is one many would feel requires no consideration, inasmuch as it carries with it its own affirmative, and admits no denial. But there are some whose materialistic training, or associations, make the inquiry one less easy to determine intelligently and surely. For this reason we are glad to commend a little treatise on the subject lately published, dealing with the question from the secularist's standpoint. It admirably puts the argument in terms at once concise, transparent, and spiritual. It is entitled, "Is there a God?" and is published by E. Stanford, 55, Charing-cross, S.W., at a cost of one penny; it ought to be very useful for circulation among those inclined to scepticism.

None of the Missions of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey have been more encouraging than that at Croydon, where, notwithstanding the enforced absence of Mr. Sankey during the greater part of the time through indisposition, and the attractiveness of the beautiful weather to outdoor recreation, the hall has been filled night after night. Now that Messrs. Moody and Sankey have begun their meetings on the Thames Embankment, Dr. Pentecost and Mr. Stebbins are continuing the work at Croydon, where they are holding meetings in the Rink every evening, and three times on Sunday next. At Ecclestonstreet Hall Dr. Pentecost is continuing his Bible-readings on the afternoons of this week from Tuesday to Friday.

A correspondent calls attention to the large sums contributed to the Salvation Army, and fears lest funds should be diverted from such beneficent works as Dr. Barnardo's Homes, the Homes of Hope, Mr. Thomas's Preventive Homes, &c. It is not for us to find fault with those who so bountifully contribute to the "Army;" rather, it is to be hoped that others will follow their example, and not allow other institutions to suffer for want of the like munificent support. The great bulk of professing Christians have not learnt to give. If money which, had they remained unconverted, would have gone in worldly amusement, were now given to the work of God, many worthy societies would be more adequately sustained.

RAILWAY MEN & THEIR FRIENDS.

THE Gospel is for all, and there is only one Gospel. And yet, few features in the history of home missions are more worthy of remark than the development of what may be called "class Gospels;" by which we mean, the application of the Gospel message to special sections of the community by distinct and special agencies. We know of no plea that can be urged against this method. Indeed its success seems its perfect justification. There is a sympathy and esprit de corps that can be brought into requisition in dealing with such classes, that are entirely lost when the member of a class is merged in the miscellaneous crowd.

Take for instance the Railway Mission, which has within a brief period grown from a small local effort, into a well-nigh national movement for the spiritual good of a large and important section of the public. The hold which this Mission has already taken on its own clientele, and on the public generally, can be judged from the remarkable gathering in Exeter Hall last Thursday evening, when the first anniversary was held. Never before in any single Christian assembly, in that historic meeting-place, have there been displayed so many brass buttons and other insignia of the railway servant. Mr. T. A. Denny filled the chair with all his customary geniality and homeliness.

The preliminaries being over, Mr. GEORGE CLARKE, Hon. Sec., made his statement of the work, which began with a note of hearty praise for the acceptance with which the efforts of the Mission have been received in different parts of the country. The work has grown with great rapidity. The salvation of a railway man was almost doubted but a few short years ago; now there seems to be a general awakenment among the employés all over the English lines of railroad. Mr. Clarke furnished a brief sketch of the rise and progress of the Mission, giving a due meed of praise to Mr. Elliot Walton, whose earnest labours for the spiritual weal of railway boys at Vauxhall was the seed plant that has now become such a far-spreading tree. It is only a little over two years since this local work blossomed into the "Railway Mission," with branches throughout London, and in many of the leading towns in the provinces. As one interesting item in the work of the year, may be mentioned the circulation of about three millions of tracts specially prepared for railway men. The organ of the Mission, The Railway Signal, has a growing and useful circulation. Mr. D. Spencer has lately joined Mr. Clarke in the conduct of the Mission. Graceful acknowledgment was made of kindred efforts, such as the Mildmay Railway Mission, and the special efforts of the City Mission to reach this class. "No better investment for shareholders than to help on such Missions" was quoted as the saying of some shrewd American railway director, which may be commended to the attention of railway investors at home.

As honorary treasurer of the Mission, Mr. S. GURNEY SHEPPARD reported on the state of the exchequer. Beginning the year with a very small balance, they were able to get from various good friends of the work during the year nearly £1300. The close of the financial year saw them with a balance of £100, but many unpaid bills in addition. The Chairman afterwards divulged the fact, modestly concealed by the Treasurer, that he had himself been the largest donor. Mr. Clarke announced that they wanted £1000 out of the meeting. The Chairman added, that if that sum could be raised, three friends on the platform would give £100 each.

In the course of a chatty and good-humoured little talk, the CHAIRMAN said they were on this occasion going to throw routine to the winds. Instead of cut-and-dried resolutions, they would have about forty railway-men who would testify as to what the Mission was doing in different parts of the country. He then recalled some facts and figures to show how rapidly the railway system had spread over the country within the past fifty years, so that now the English lines employ some 300,000 to 400,000 men. Surely nothing was more desirable, even from a director's and shareholder's point of view, than that these railway servants should be Christians and abstainers.

In quick succession there rose up and gave "two minutes' speeches," more or less, and holding various posts on their respective lines, from signalman to inspector, men from Finsbury-park, Cambridge, Derby, Hastings, West Brompton, Wellington (Salop), Birmingham, Worcester, Stratford, &c. They told out of full hearts how the Lord had blessed them in their own souls, and how He had prospered his work among their mates through the agency of the Mission. Not with much excellency of human speech, perhaps, but with a warmth and reality that carried conviction to all hearts, those working brothers declared the goodness of the Lord, and rehearsed what great changes for the better had taken place in their neighbourhoods.

As a pleasant interlude, Mrs. GATES, of Brighton, spoke of her particular work in that watering place, which, beginning with a meeting of three men nine years ago in a waiting-room, now embraces many weekly gatherings largely attended. Mr. Knight, the general manager of the Brighton line, had given her every help and support in the work. She would not attempt to give the numbers of those converted, while praising God for all the encouragement He had given. She closed with an earnest womanly appeal to the men to confess Christ boldly before their unbelieving companions.

Equally pleasant was a brief but rousing speech from Mr. POETAL, deputy chairman of the London and South-Western Railway, who spoke of the importance of the work, and his hearty sympathy with it. He had taken a special interest, he said, in the Temperance part of the work, which seemed to him of special importance among those having such responsibilities to carry.

Lady HOPE, as a tried friend of the work, received a very warm welcome when she rose to speak. She said she must tell what had been done by one little company of railway servants at Westbourne Park; they had raised among themselves £300 in order to establish a Railway Mission Hall for themselves and their mates, which has since been opened. She spoke very feelingly about the need of earnestness in the Temperance cause, telling some touching incidents about what had been done in country places, even by young people. She urged the Christian men to be enthusiastic and united in their efforts, and closed her address by a Gospel appeal to those who were undecided.

MRS. Colonel PEPPER had a good account to give of the work among railway servants at Salisbury, where a wonderful change had taken place in the hearts of many, and where she had the privilege of conducting a Bible-class. Though she had suffered much at the hands of opposers in her work at Salisbury, she had never, in all her experience, heard a rude remark from a railway man.

There were plenty more "testifiers" on the platform, but the time was flitting fleetly by, and there was only an opportunity for a select few to take to their feet and give some condensed essence of report. Many of these delegated reporters came from long distances, and this fact shows that the scope of the Mission now extends over a wide area. We echo the confident hope expressed by one speaker, that another anniversary will see such an extension of the work, that even Exeter Hall will not contain those who have been blessed through its instrumentality.

GENERAL GORDON'S REFLECTIONS.—In the extract from this book, given in our first article last week, there was a misprint. The word "conduct," which is twice used in the extract, should be "conduit."

THE FAROE ISLES.—Mr. Thomas McLaren, of Glasgow, has issued a very interesting pamphlet upon "The Lord's work in the Faroe Isles," recounting a visit which he made to Mr. Sloan, who for some years laboured as a colporteur of the Edinburgh Book and Tract Society in Shetland, and is now similarly engaged in the above islands. It may be obtained at 40, Sauchiehall-street, Glasgow (1d.).

May Meetings.

Freedmen's Missions Aid Society.

THE annual meeting of this Society was held at the Westminster Chapel, Buckingham-gate, on the evening of Thursday, May 15. In the unavoidable absence of the Earl of Shaftesbury, the chair was taken by the Rev. H. Simon, the pastor of the chapel.

The Secretary, Rev. J. Gwynne Jones, proceeded to read the report, which stated that during the year a very important step had been taken in reference to the Mission at Shingay, a small steamer having been built in this country for its service. The new projected Mission in Central Africa had not yet been entered upon, the district having been inaccessible during the year. The region where it is proposed to establish it is situated to the south-west of Abyssinia, the easiest way to which is from Suakim to Berber, thence to Khartoum, and by boats on the Nile to Gondokoro. It was, however, hoped that the Mission would shortly be able to enter the country either that way or through Abyssinia with a large band of devoted men, and take possession of the land for Christ. Financially the condition of the Society is encouraging.

Rev. S. Pearson, of Liverpool, moved a resolution rejoicing in the advance in education and religion which has been made by the American freedmen. There was a good deal about slavery in the Old Testament, and we taught our children to admire the wonder-working wisdom of God in bringing the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt, and out of the house of bondage. God had repeated the history of the children of Israel in our own times. God had his Moses in the days in which we lived, and He had told the Pharaoh of modern despotism to let his people go. The slaves who existed within the memory of a large number of persons then present had leaders as divinely inspired and as divinely appointed as was Moses himself. The slaves of our time had had to pass through their Red Sea of blood and agony; they had had their Passover. The angel of death went into the homes of the North and of the South during that terrible civil war, and took away the flower of the American people, but folded her wings and passed over the homes of the slaves, who were now singing jubilee songs to remind them that the hand of the Lord had done gloriously, and had triumphed over this principle of despotism and of slavery. Africa had been in some respects the grave of the white missionary, but throughout twenty-seven years not one of the coloured missionaries had succumbed to the influence of climate. Though the American and the English nations were separated by the wide waters, they were joined together by a cable of Christian love and of Christian enthusiasm. Let them flash through that cable to-night a fresh message of brotherhood, and give a hearty response to the appeal which had been made in the report.

Mr. Arthur Pease, M.P., felt called upon, in his position as President of the Anti-slavery Society, to show his interest in the work of this Society. They could rejoice to-day that not only in the West Indies, but also in the United States of America, the earnest labours of both white and coloured teachers had been blest of God to the bringing up and educating of men and women of intellectual capacity and of undoubted piety, for various positions in the Church.

Rev. Dr. Bevan moved, "That while the Freedmen's Missions Aid Society can never cease to take interest in the Christian education of the coloured people of America, it desires to recognise the tendings of the will of God in directing its efforts to the special work of the evangelisation of Africa, by means of coloured missionaries. It pledges itself to sustain the Missions already established upon the West Coast of Africa under the care of the United Brethren, and to carry on the proposed work for Central Africa, as soon as the condition of the country will permit of its operation." Dr. Bevan said: To some extent we close a chapter of the past and open a new chapter of the future. This Society was intended to co-operate with the American Missionary Association in the instruction of the freedmen of the United States, but the American Missionary Association always had some Missions outside the limits of the States themselves. They had an important Mission upon the West Coast of Africa, and we thought we could very properly aid them, as they were employing some of their freedmen to go out to that Mission. Our freedmen's work slowly grew upon us, and after awhile the American Missionary Association determined to hand over their Mission on the West Coast of Africa to a society which had a similar Mission adjoining theirs. This society was the Society of the United Brethren. You have heard of the success of their labours. The people are learning to clothe themselves, and build houses for themselves. They are learning the progressive arts of civilised life, and above all the story of the Cross of Jesus Christ, and to feel the power of the Gospel, under the superintendence and instruction of coloured missionaries, and for these we plead.

Another work is opening up before us. When the secret of Central Africa was disclosed, an English gentleman, living in the north, expressed himself willing to form the nucleus of a fund for a Mission in Central Africa, to be carried on by coloured missionaries, and £10,000 was placed in the hands of the American Missionary Association for the purpose. The troubles in the Soudan prevented anything from being done, and the American Missionary Society handed the matter back to the committee of this Society. The committee has carefully considered it, and we believe that, with this sum of money in hand, and with the great possibilities of Central Africa in the future, and God calling us thitherwards, we shall not appeal in vain to the Christian generosity of England to support this work. The instruments are ready in our hand, and are, in fact, our own students. The Christian men and women who have started this Society have educated many of these young men and young women. We want you to send these men to Africa, and to use them there. I only wish the great Egyptian question could be settled. On whatever side of politics we may be, we must all alike pray that God may preserve the life of the great captain who is out there. I pray that God may preserve his life by peace; because I doubt very much whether good comes out of the wars that some are so anxious to see set on foot. I hope that now the question will soon be settled. God has not allowed us to find out the secret of Africa, to hand it over to perpetual strife and intertribal and internecine war, but He has opened that secret in order that into the very heart of the Dark Continent may come the light of the truth as it is in Jesus.

The resolution was seconded by the Rev. W. Tyler, and adopted. During the evening sacred songs were rendered by the Jubilee Singers.

Gospel Temperance Mission.

The annual demonstration of this Mission took place in Exeter Hall on Monday week, under the presidency of Mr. W. Shepherd Allen, M.P. The great hall was crowded by an enthusiastic audience, and the proceedings were introduced by some songs by the Alpine Choir, under the direction of Professor André.

Mr. John T. Rae read the annual report. The work, he said, has been extended beyond the permanent Mission at Hoxton Hall, where 2243 consecutive nightly meetings had been held until March 31, and various agencies had been carried on, embracing twenty-five meetings weekly. Mr. William Noble had addressed a large number of meetings in all parts of the country, and conducted, amongst others, two very successful Missions in Bradford and Preston. The members of the committee and honorary deputations had spoken at 3177 meetings in London and the suburbs. The agents had taken part in a large number of meetings at Hoxton Hall, and other places in the metropolis, and in many provincial towns. The general work had consisted in answering questions and giving advice on a variety of points. Letters were received from all parts of England, Ireland, Scotland, Sweden, Switzerland, the Cape, the Australian Colonies, New Zealand, the United States, Ceylon, and Syria; these indicated the far-reaching influence of the Mission.

The Chairman was bound to say that he looked upon the Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance movement as one of the grandest, if not the grandest, temperance movement of the present day, for here they had the union of two things which, in his opinion, could not well be separated—the Gospel and Temperance. He was sometimes saddened at the indifference exhibited by Christian men with respect to this question of temperance, especially when he saw Christian parents placing the intoxicating cup before their children, and Christian men engaging in this traffic. He would be ashamed of calling himself a Christian man if he were thus tempting his fellow-men to destruction.

Rev. William Barker said it was a subject which was burning hot in the hearts of thousands throughout the length and breadth of the land, and they wished to-night to stir this question into a flame. There had been many movements in England, but, in his opinion, there was never a movement fraught with greater good results than this Blue Ribbon movement. There were many Christians, total abstainers, who did not see the necessity for wearing this badge. What was the good of Christians if they did not let their lights shine before men, that others may see their good works and glorify their Father in heaven? This piece of blue acted precisely in the capacity of illuminating their principles as they walked along the streets.

Rev. J. Ossian Davies rejoiced in their motto—"Gospel Temperance." He was very proud of the little badge of blue which he always wore, not because he was very anxious to advertise his abstinence in a Pharisaic manner, but because it helped the wavering and the weak ones around him. A publican once asked an abstainer, "Why do you wear that ribbon?" "I will put you a question," said the abstainer. "Why do you put a sign-board above your door?" "Oh," said the publican, "to sell my beer." "Then," said the abstainer, "I wear this ribbon to show that I don't want your beer." This Blue Ribbon movement had shaken the castles of Bacchus as nothing else had done. Time was when the medical men and the Press were arrayed against them. Even the Christian Church had looked down upon them; now, the majority of our ministers and students were total abstainers, and, in defiance of Burton-on-Trent persecutions, their principles would leaven all the Christian churches of the land. What they wanted was a Sunday Closing Bill for the publican's sake, for the sake of the poor barmaids, and for the sake of the other tradesmen around. And they wanted the grocers' licences abolished. This was the one great mistake of Mr. Gladstone's life, and he trusted that before the great statesman's death he would make amends for it by abolishing these licences. They also wanted the law to deal with the club-houses that destroyed the young men as the butcher slayethe early lambs of spring—these whited sepulchres, attractive from without, but foul within Let them come forward and join the ranks of this army; then they would gather up the beer vats, the whisky casks, and the wine hogsheads, and piling them up in one vast heap, would set fire to them, and when the flames were wildly crackling, let the nation dance around the reeking pile, and send up to the God of heaven songs of praise.

Mr. Alderman White, of Birmingham, said that the police in that city had become, under the pressure of the Temperance reformation, a little more vigilant in their arrests of men from drunkenness. He believed that in Birmingham, as in all other places, intemperance was on the decrease, or else what did the 130,000 customers they found weekly in the numerous coffee-houses of the Birmingham Coffee House Company mean? He rejoiced to bear testimony to the good work which Mr. Noble had done a little while ago at Bradford.

Mr. William Noble spoke of the quiet, but yet great work which was being done by individuals behind the scenes. He often asked God to give him an overwhelming sense of the great truth that there was deliverance for the worst of men. The nearer they got to science the less enthusiasm they would have, and the nearer they got to the man's heart the more enthusiasm they would have in their work. Hence the importance of rescue work; let them take that as the watchword of the future—rescue. They must add to faith in God, faith in the people.

Metropolitan Tabernacle Colportage Association.

The annual conference and public meeting in connection with the above organisation was held at the Tabernacle on Monday week, Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, the president, occupying the chair.

In the afternoon Mr. Spurgeon addressed the colporteurs in a practical way as to the value of the work in which they were engaged, and the manner in which it should be conducted. He wanted all the brethren as long as they were colporteurs to think very highly of their calling. If they were in Slocum-in-the-Marsh, then let them think that that was the most important village in the world. There were souls there as valuable as in London, and there was a work there which required to be done as well as they could do it. He believed they would not be mistaken in thinking that colportage was a highly important work. He believed they filled up a gap which was causing much mischief all round, and oftentimes their calling at a house might stop a gap the public preacher would never stop. Let them resolve to speak to everyone in the house, for they might hit the nail on the head, and after selling books to all who could buy, they could talk of Jesus to those who could not buy. He was pleased to hear a friend speak of the preventive power of colportage, by its taking out of the homes many books of a questionable character, the very cheapness of which probably increased the mischief done by them. Let them remember they were to sow to the best of their ability, but God was responsible for results. A soul might take twenty years of preaching, and then not be converted; then go on for twenty-one, and until it was converted. Perseverance was a good watchword. Let them be on good terms, too, with all. If a minister in a parish delighted in the work, give him cause to continue to rejoice in the work. If people persecuted, heap hot coals of kindness on their heads, and they would soon "cave in," under the love of Christ.

In the evening the public meeting was held in the Tabernacle, when Mr. Spurgeon again presided. There was a large attendance. After a few words by the Chairman on the adaptation of the work to the requirements of the time, the seventeenth annual report was read by Rev. W. C. Jones, who stated that the Association now employed seventy-two colporteurs, who had sold books to the value of £8,156, and made nearly six hundred thousand visits during the year.

Rev. Dr. Green, of the Religious Tract Society, said he was convinced more and more every day that it was their business to be interesting in what they printed for the world to read. He believed in fiction provided it was true to human nature—true narratives founded on facts. They need not be alarmed at the utterances of a small company of infidels while they, as Christians, had the might and the truth of the Lord on their side. The great antidote to popular infidelity was not in discussion, but by a simple and straightforward exhibition of what Christianity really was. The strength of popular scepticism was in the ignorance of the Bible and Bible truths. Teach these, and the light would be its own witness, and the hearts of men would be won.

Addresses followed by several colporteurs, including Mr. Wm. Lloyd, of Poole, Dorset, and Mr. Robt. Hall, of Riddings, Derby.

Young Abstainers' Union.

The annual meeting of this Union was held on Saturday week in the Lower Room of Exeter Hall, which was densely crowded. Probably a great attraction was the presence of the Fisk University Jubilee Singers, who sang two of their slave songs. Mr. S. A. Blackwood, as president of the Union, occupied the chair. The annual report read by the secretary, Miss L. E. Andrews, stated that the increase of members during the twelve months has been 1200, and this in spite of the suspension of some of the branches.

The Chairman said alcohol was still working terrible havoc amongst the people. At the present moment there were thrones in the world occupied by drunkards, and only the other day a peer of the realm, now in prison, was charged with a crime committed when drunk. Members of the Legislature had been overcome by drink. He had seen it—for he had been a great deal in the House of Commons. He knew a young man, now being educated in a large college, who told him that the drinking amongst these lads of from fifteen to twenty was something dreadful. It was to combat this sort of thing that the present Union was formed, and he believed they were accomplishing a good work in that direction. They were trying to form right opinions as to the real nature of strong drink. The habit of self-denial for the good of others was very rare in the present day, but it was the leading principle of this society.

Lady Hope pointed out the importance of individual influence, and based a powerful appeal to the young people to abstain upon the love they should feel for those around them, and in order to shield their own lives from an insidious foe. Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., in addressing the meeting, said Lord Granville was a teetotaler, and Sir Charles Dilke had been one for a great number of years. The Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs (Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice) had been a total abstainer for six years. Some of the most distinguished and eloquent preachers they had were teetotalers. More than half the ministers in the country were teetotalers. If drink did no good, and if it did harm, what business had Christians to touch it at all?

Mrs. Anderson said she was in the habit of speaking to people in railway carriages, and some little time ago a young man of nineteen or twenty years of age entered a carriage where she was sitting, and, taking out a flask, put it to his lips and drank deeply. She was not long in beginning to speak to him, and she did it earnestly. He burst out into a loud laugh, and said, "Why, only three weeks ago I was a total abstainer." "Then why did you not continue so?" "Because I left home and came to London, and got amongst people who drank, and they persuaded me to break the pledge." Let boys beware of the first temptation to break their pledge. Might God help them when some wicked, remorseless man came across them, and might they then "steal away to Jesus," who would help and sustain them. She said to this young man, "Is not your mother's heart breaking?" He said, "My mother drove me to London. My mother is a confirmed drunkard, and I have the fever for drink in my own veins." Then she said, "Sign the pledge." He said, "Never," and dashed from the carriage. Let the young people present beware, for they knew not the sleeping tendencies within them.

Christian Work in the Army.

The annual meeting of the Army Scripture Readers' and Soldiers' Friend Society took place in Exeter Hall, on Tuesday, 20th inst., when General Sir Arthur J. Lawrence filled the chair.

A report of work for the past year was read by the secretary, Mr. W. A. Blake. Ninety readers are now employed at the chief military stations at home and abroad. Great care is bestowed upon the selection of fitting agents. Gospel Temperance is advocated with commendable perseverance, and thousands in the rank and file of the British Army are total abstainers.

The claims of the Society were urged most impressively by Colonel Wilmot Brooke, Rev. Claremont Skrine, General Erskine, Major John Smith, Colonel Sandwith, Dr. Greenfield and Lieut.-Colonel W. Ward. Tea was provided for the readers and their friends. Colonel Sandwith presided over a supplementary meeting, at which many soldiers attended. The results were cheering.

Evangelical Continental Society.

At Exeter Hall, on Thursday last, Mr. Donald Matheson presided over the annual gathering of this Society. A statement, by Rev. John Ashton (secretary), showed the chief aim of the Society to be the evangelisation of the Continent of Europe, by means of aid rendered to existing agencies, upon an unsectarian basis. A special evangelistic fund has been raised, and extra efforts put forth, in addition to the Society's regular work, in order to forward the Gospel in new districts. The opposition of the Romish Church has been increasingly manifested, though it has not amounted to open persecution. The spiritual section of the Reformed Church in France is cordially entering into the work of evangelisation. A grant has been voted to the Belgian Evangelical Society, in order to enable them to establish a Mission after the order of Mr. McAll's in France. The work in Italy is difficult, but a church has, nevertheless, been formed at Nizza. The oldest station of the Society in Spain has been the scene of much trial, but a Mission has been started at Matero, and help given toward establishing another at Villafranca.

The Chairman said this Society held a foremost place in the evangelical work of the Continent. The progress made during the last thirty-five years is such as few persons have any conception of. Of late there has been an accession of spiritual life among the Continental churches which inspired them with good hope for the future. There is a prospect of a federation of all the Churches in Italy, also of a union of the native Churches, the Waldensian and the Free. A new society has been started in Germany for evangelistic work, and a Native Missionary Training College has been opened in Spain.

Mr. W. Pethick, of Bristol, said he was convinced that any lack of sympathy or aid by our Churches at home was the result of ignorance as to the state of things abroad, and the claims they have upon us. Several representatives of the French and Belgian Societies gave brief addresses, confirmatory of the report and of the Chairman's remarks. Pasteur Dardier, from Geneva, said he rejoiced in the work God was doing among them, and had occasionally witnessed more remarkable signs of the Holy Spirit's power in some of their Protestant Churches than anything he had ever seen in England. Pasteur Anet, of Brussels, said that, during forty-five years, the Protestant congregations in Belgium had increased from 7 to 27, including from 6000 to 8000 members, most of whom were Romish converts. Pasteur Monier, from Bordeaux, spoke of a good work that sprang out of the Week of Prayer last year, many conversions resulting. Pasteur Mouron said there never was a greater opportunity than now for extending operations on the Continent, and never a greater need for it.

Some others spoke, wishing that English Christians would visit them more frequently when on the Continent. The Secretary announced a new edition of a handbook prepared for Continental travellers, published by Mr. Elliot Stock for 6d., with all necessary information about churches, Missions, &c.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.

This Society held its anniversary in the Seamen's Chapel, St. George's-street, E., on Tuesday evening, 20th inst., Mr. J. H. Fordham presiding. The report, read by Rev. G. Hill, stated that the work had never been so extensive or so richly blessed of God as during the past year. A new Sailors' Rest had been opened, and the debt on the Society's buildings in Ratcliffe-highway had been reduced. A long list of figures showed the number of lectures, meetings, entertainments, and services conducted on sea and land; visits paid, relief afforded, free meals provided, and Bibles, magazines, and other literature circulated.

The Chairman, in a brief and interesting address, strongly urged the claims of the Society. The addresses that followed were remarkable for the warm sympathy which they indicated for the seamen. Mr. W. H. Maynard said he had good cause for being at their meeting, for it was a sailor who gave him "the finishing touch." From that time he had been an abstainer. He urged all to give up drink, telling of one who had run through £30,000, but was brought to Christ by his wife, who had prayed for him thirty years. Mr. John Bell, Mr. M. H. Hodder, Rev. De Kewer Williams, Rev. Trevor Fielden, Mr. Mackenzie, Colonel Handyside, and others, spoke.

The Peace Society.

The annual meeting of the Peace Society was held as usual at Finsbury Chapel on Tuesday, 21st inst. The report of the year's work, read by Mr. Henry Richard, M.P., the secretary, showed some progress, notwithstanding the troubles caused by the war in Egypt, against which the committee had all along protested, even before the commencement of hostilities. Besides keeping this protest before the people of England, a good deal had been done in connection with similar organisations on the Continent, in the practica work of obtaining the insertion of clauses in international treaties referring disputed points to arbitration. After the usual tabular statement of meetings held, the work of auxiliaries, &c., the report concluded with the hope that the failure of our recent policy of intervention in Afghanistan, Zululand, the Transvaal, and now in Egypt, would result in convincing our legislators of the abortive character of such a policy, and show them that for nations, as well as for individuals, "the way of transgressors is hard."

Sir J. W. Pease, M.P., who occupied the chair, expressed his conviction that the present Government had lost popularity to a large extent through its Egyptian policy. He referred in encouraging terms to the general improvement in the tone of feeling with regard to war.

Mr. James Cropper, M.P., moved a resolution commendatory of the aims of the Peace Society, which sought to bring all wars to the test of Christian public opinion. He said the halo of romance thrown around war caused the very same people to delight in it who were horrified at a few cases of infanticide in a distant Indian province, or at the proposal that cremation should be adopted in this country. This showed great confusion of mind. He believed that before this Parliament came to an end it would have to answer for blood shed in the Soudan.

Rev. Colmer B. Symes said England's honour would be on a far higher level when she pursued a policy of peace. Prophecy and the future were on the side of peace. In the full light of Christ's Gospel the apparent glory of war would look as worthless as did the trappings of a ball room or theatre in the light of day. The Peace Society would achieve no mean victory by bringing the standard of national virtue and honour up to that now required of the individual in private life.

Dr. R. Spence Watson, of Newcastle, in a racy and telling speech, moved another resolution, deploring the armed intervention in Egypt, and deprecating continued hostilities. While fully acknowledging the high character of General Gordon, he thought that to send a military man on a pacific errand was a dangerous thing to do. The rule of Egypt for the last fifty years in the Soudan, even from an Oriental point of view, had been the saddest ever known. He thought the country should have been left to work out its own salvation. From the commencement of hostilities by the bombardment of Alexandria, England had been in the wrong, and when the history of this time came in future to be written, the battles at Tel el Kebir and El Teb would be considered the saddest blots of our day.

Mr. Thomas Snape, of Liverpool, and Mr. Arthur Pease, M.P., also addressed the meeting. The body of the chapel and front seats of the gallery were quite filled with a thoroughly earnest and attentive audience, who, judging by the points most applauded, appeared to be thoroughly grounded in the principles of peace.

Monthly Tract Society.

In the Council Room of Exeter Hall on Wednesday, last week, Lord Shaftesbury presided over the annual gathering of this society. Rev. W. Durban read the report, showing that the total number of tracts issued during the year was considerably over a million; on every hand the work had extended its influence and operations. Many thousands of tracts and pamphlets had been carefully distributed among the upper and middle classes in the west and north of London, and 2300 sent to the Undergraduates at Cambridge and Oxford Universities. Liberal grants had also been voted to Churches, Missions, and Workers. Their tract on "Justification" had been sent to the clergy and Nonconformist ministers throughout London, to many of the peers, and to English residents in Germany. Mr. Mackenzie, son of the late Dr. Mackenzie of Birmingham, is now travelling secretary. About 35,000 evangelical tracts had been distributed in France among colleges, pasteurs, senators, members of the Corps Législatif, and persons of noble rank. One eminent senator wrote for more. Thanks were received from M. Lemaire and others.

The Chairman said he was much gratified by the excellent report. Everywhere he found the good results of tracts, and was astonished at the readiness of the people to take them. A poor woman, whose husband drank, once wrote to him asking for a suitable tract with a picture heading. Soon after she wrote again, saying: "Your tract has done wonders for my husband; he has already bought a new pair of boots for our child." He believed much more was often done by a tract than by a book. Mr. McAll had spoken of the avidity with which the people in Paris received tracts.

Mr. F. Bevan said he certainly thought their tracts were the best of any published. Rev. H. Webb Peploe owed his conversion to one of the tracts of this Society handed to him on the Doncaster racecourse. He believed we had no conception of the religious ignorance of the upper "ten thousand;" he saw no way of getting the Gospel before them but by tracts. At the Society's request he was very happy to become their future treasurer.

Several stirring speeches followed. Rev. Ossian Davies, in an elegant address, said he should like to see a literal cremation of all the filthy literature that went forth from the press. Rev. J. Reid Howatt spoke of an intimate friend of his who, wherever he goes riding, throws out tracts enclosing bon-bons, and the children pick them up. He wished there were more tracts for tempted Christians and backsliders. Rev. G. S. Karney looked for great good to result from the distribution of tracts, &c., at the coming Exhibition at Turin.

Children's Special Service Mission.
